(7) I.e., the second brother, after he participated in the halizah with the second widow, also participates in the halizah with he third (who is now the sister of his as well as of his brother's haluzah): and there is no need, according to Samuel, for a defective halizah to go the round of all the surviving brothers.

(8) How- then could the expression ‘all’ refer to the second and third widows only?

(9) Simeon having participated in the halizah of two widows out of the three.

(10) As he actually said, ‘The rivals are not exempt’.

(11) Even a defective one.

(12) In the case of the three widows mentioned above, where there are no rivals, the defective halizah is, therefore, valid even according to Samuel.

(13) A passage from which was cited supra top of page.

(14) V.p. 164,n. 10.

(15) V.p. 164, n.11.

(16) As the prohibition to marry the rivals is not so severe as that of the sisters, the halizah with the former is of greater validity and force than that with the latter. Cf. supra p. 163,n.11.

(17) The levir.

(18) Of two sisters-in-law, widows of the same brother.

(19) By the levir prior to the halizah.

(20) A halizah after a divorce is defective, since the levirate bond had already been partially severed by the divorce that preceded it.

(21) Since no letter of divorce was given to her.

(22) Infra 51a.

(23) Since the halizah alone does not in this case exempt the widow; a divorce also, owing to the ma'amar, being required.

(24) To whom no ma'amar had been addressed.

(25) infra 53a.

(26) In consequence of which he may marry neither of them and the halizah in which he participates is for this reason of a defective character.

(27) A rival taking the place of a forbidden relative, being subject to the same restrictions as the relatives, is also forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.

(28) Supra 18b.

(29) That no levirate bond exists and the halizah with the sisters is consequently perfectly valid.

(30) I.e., the sister who was second to perform the halizah. Rachel was Jacob's second, Leah his first wife (v. Gen. XXIX, 23-28).

(31) I.e., the first sister. Cf. previous note.

(32) Because Rachel cannot any more be married to him owing to her being the sister of his haluzah.

(33) Leah's halizah having been perfect, since the levir could have married her if he wished.

(34) Samuel.

(35) The plural.

(36) That the expression of ‘rivals’ refers only to rivals of the sister who was second to perform the halizah and not to those of the first also.

(37) Would the sister of a haluzah be exempt by the halizah of her rival?

(38) Infra 40b. As he cannot marry the rival of Rachel who is his haluzah's sister, his halizah with her would be of a defective character which, consequently, could not exempt Rachel.

(39) Lit., ‘he said’.

(40) Participated in the halizah with one of them.

(41) By participating in the halizah with the rival of the second sister. Such halizah would not exempt the sister.

(42) Much more so the relative herself. The halizah, therefore, being defective, would have to be performed by both the second sister and her rival.

(43) If he participated in the halizah with the rival of the first sister.

(44) He may participate in halizah not only with the rival of the second sister and thus exempt the sister herself, but also with the second sister and thus exempt her rival.

(45) Rachel (the second sister), being the relative of Leah (the first sister) who is the ‘rival’ of the haluzah, is consequently permitted to marry the levir, and her halizah is, therefore, perfectly valid and exempts also her rival.

(46) That the rivals are not exempted by the halizah of the sisters, owing to its defectiveness which is due to the existence of the levirate bond (cf. supra p. 164, n. 21).

(47) As to why the halizah of the rival of the relative of a haluzah should be more valid than that of the relative of the haluzah herself (v. supra p. 266, n. 2).

(48) The Rabbis who forbade the marriage of a zekukah owing to the levirate bond did not extend the prohibition to her rival. The halizah of the latter is, therefore, more valid and exempts also the former.

(49) Lit., ‘not’?
(50) The Baraitha quoted.
(51) Supra 132, ‘Ed. Iv, 8; as marriage with the rivals is permitted, their halizah also (cf. supra p. 163, n. 11) is perfectly valid.
(52) That the Baraitha quoted represents the view of Beth Shammai.
(53) The rivals.
(54) Why then was only halizah mentioned?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 27b

Between the one[1] who was given[2] a letter of divorce and the other[1] to whom a ma'amar had been addressed[2] who is to be preferred?[3] Is she who was divorced to be preferred.[4] or is, perhaps, she to whom the ma'amar had been addressed to be preferred since she is nearer to him in respect to intercourse? — R. Ashi replied, Come and hear: R. Gamaliel, however, admits[5] that a letter of divorce[6] after a ma'amar,[7] and a ma'amar[6] after a letter of divorce[8] is valid.[9] Now, if a letter of divorce has the preference.[10] the ma'amar after it should have no validity; and if the ma'amar has the preference, the divorce after it should have no validity. Consequently it must be concluded that they have both equal validity. This proves it.

R. Huna[11] said in the name of Rab: If two sisters who were sisters-in-law became subject to one levir, the one is permitted[12] when he[13] has participated in her halizah; and the other is permitted[14] when he has participated in her halizah. If the first[15] died[16] he[17] is permitted [to marry] the second,[18] and there is no need to state that if the second[19] died[16] the first is permitted,[14] since, as a sister-in-law who was permitted,[20] then forbidden[21] and then again permitted,[22] she returns to her former state of permissibility. R. Johanan, however, said: If the second[19] died[16] he[17] is permitted to marry the first,[23] but if the first[24] died he is forbidden to marry the second.[19] What is the reason? Because any sister-in-law to whom the injunction. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her[25] cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage[26] is, indeed,[27] like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden. But does not Rab hold the same view?[28] Surely Rab said: Any woman to whom the injunction, Her husband's brother should go in unto her[25] cannot be applied at the time of her coming under the obligation of the levirate marriage is, indeed, like the wife of a brother who has children and is, consequently, forbidden![29] -That statement[30] applies only to the case where the woman is faced with the prohibition of ‘a wife's sister’, which is Pentateuchal;[31] here, however, [the prohibition due to] the levirate bond is only Rabbinical.[32]

R. Jose b. Hanina raised the following objection against R. Johanan:[33] IN THE CASE OF FOUR BROTHERS, TWO OF WHOM WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, IF THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED TO THE SISTERS DIED, BEHOLD, THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. But why? Let one of the brothers take on the duty of participating in the halizah with the second widow, and thus place the first widow, in relation to the second, in the category of a deceased brother's wife that was permitted- then forbidden, and then again permitted,[34] and thus she would return to her former state of permissibility! — The other replied: I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters.[35] But let him rather reply that the meaning of the expression of MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH, which had been used, indeed signifies that only one is to perform the halizah![36] -The expression used was THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH.[37] Then let him reply that the expressions THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH[37] refers to women generally[38] who perform the halizah!-It was stated, BEHOLD THESE.[39] Let him, then, reply that [this is a case] where halizah was already performed by the first![40] -[The expression] THESE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH

(2) By the surviving brother.

(3) In respect of the halizah, if that halizah is to exempt the rival. None of these widows may be taken in levitate marriage: the one, because a letter of divorce was given to her, and the other, because she is the rival of the former. The only question is, which of the two should perform the halizah and which should thereby be exempt.

(4) I.e., shall she perform the halizah and thus exempt her rival? Cur. edd. add., ‘because he began with her with halizah’. Rashal (Glosses. a.l.) reads, ‘divorce’ for ‘halizah’. Both additions are absent in MSS, v. Tosaf. s.v. בעלה)-

If the ma'amar was made first, the subsequent divorce forbids the marriage of the second and also that of the first, the ma'amar to her not being regarded as actual marriage, and if the divorce was first and the ma'amar afterwards, the second widow also requires a divorce, the divorce of the first not having the force of halizah to invalidate the ma'amar addressed to the second.

is an instruction as to what it is the proper thing to do.[1] Let him reply that it[2] was a preventive measure against the possibility of the levir's participating first in the halizah of the first![3] — It was stated, BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, i.e., the law of the levirate marriage is not applicable here at all.[4] Let him, then, reply that it[5] was a preventive measure in case he[6] might die,[7] it being forbidden to annul the precept of levirate marriage![8] — R. Johanan makes no provision against possible death.[9] Then let him reply that it[5] is the ruling of R. Eleazar[10] who said that so long as she remained forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever![11] — Since the latter clause [represents the view of] R. Eleazar,[12] the first clause cannot represent his view. Then let him reply that it[13] is a case where they[14] fell under the obligation[15] at the same time, and that it represents the opinion of R. Jose the Galilean who maintains that it is possible to ascertain simultaneity![16] — The Tanna would not have recorded an anonymous Mishnah in agreement with the view of R. Jose the Galilean. Let him reply [that it[13] is a case] where it is not known which[17] came under the obligation[15] first![18] — If that were the case[19] how could it have been stated,[20] EVEN IF THEY HAD ALREADY MARRIED THEM THEY MUST DISMISS THEM! In the case of the first,[21] at least, one can understand [the reason].[22] since he can be told, ‘Who permitted her to you’?[23] In the case, however, of the second,[24] the levir[25] could surely claim, ‘My friend[26] has taken the second in levirate marriage[27] and I take the first ‘[28] This, then,[29] is the reason why he[30] said to him,[31] ‘I do not know who was the author of the statement concerning the sisters’.[32]

We learned: IF ONE OF THE SISTERS WAS FORBIDDEN TO ONE [OF THE BROTHERS] UNDER THE PROHIBITION OF INCEST,[33] HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT MAY MARRY HER SISTER, WHILE TO THE SECOND BROTHER BOTH ARE FORBIDDEN. It was now assumed that his mother-in-law[34] came under the obligation[35] first.[36] Now, why [should both sisters be forbidden]?[37] Let the son-in-law undertake the duty of marrying first that sister who is not his mother-in-law,[38] and his mother-in-law, in relation to the other levir, would thereby come into the same category as a sister-in-law that was permitted,[39] then forbidden,[40] and then permitted again,[41] who returns to her former state of permissibility! R. Papa replied: [They are forbidden] in a case where she who was not his mother-in-law came under the obligation[42] first.[43]

R. ELIEZER SAID: BETH SHAMMAI HOLD etc. The following was taught: R. Eliezer said: Beth Shammai hold that they may retain them, and Beth Hillel hold that they must dismiss them. R. Simeon said: They may retain them. Abba Saul said: Beth Hillel uphold in this matter the milder rule, for it was Beth Shammai who said that the women must be dismissed while Beth Hillel said they may be retained.[44]

Whose view does R. Simeon represent?[45] If that of Beth Shammai,[46] he is merely repeating R. Eliezer; if that of Beth Hillel,[46] he is repeating Abba Saul! It was this that he meant: In this matter there is no dispute at all between Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. But we have learned this already: When her sister is her sister-in-law she may either perform halizah or be taken in levirate marriage![47] — [Both are] necessary. For had the law been stated there[48] it might have been assumed [to apply to that case alone],[49] because there is no need to enact a preventive measure against a second brother,[50] but not [to the case] here where it might be advisable to issue a preventive measure against a second brother.[50] And had the law been stated here,[51] it might have been assumed [to apply to this case alone] because there is a second brother who proves it[52] but not [to that case] where no second brother exists.[53] [Hence were both] required.

BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT etc. But we have [already] learned this also:

(1) And not as to what is to be done in certain eventualities. Lit., ‘for as at the beginning, it was taught’.

(2) The provision that both widows are to perform halizah and that none may be taken in levirate marriage.

(3) And then he would marry the second, in his erroneous assumption that, as he may participate in the halizah of the second and marry the first, so he may participate in the halizah of the first and marry the second. This, however, does not imply that if he already did participate in the halizah of the second he may not, after her death, marry the first. In this latter case the reason for the marriage with the first would be obvious and would leave no room for erroneous conclusions.

(4) Even if halizah was first performed by the second.

(5) The provision in our Mishnah that both widows must perform halizah and none of them may be taken in levirate marriage.

(6) One of the surviving brothers who intended to marry one of the widowed sisters.

(7) After the second brother had married the second widow and had thus become disqualified from marrying or participating in the halizah of the other — who is now forbidden to him as the sister of his wife.

(8) And this only is the reason for the prohibition of the levirate marriage with either of the sisters. Had this prohibition been due to the levirate bond, as suggested, the first would certainly have been permitted to marry the levir after halizah with the second, which had severed the levirate bond, had taken place. Consequently, in the case discussed by R. Johanan, where the second died, and the preventive measure is not applicable. the first may indeed be taken in levirate marriage!

(9) The ruling in our Mishnah could not, therefore, be due to a preventive measure.

(10) Bah a.l. reads, ‘Eliezer’ throughout the context.

(11) Infra 1092; while R. Johanan, agreeing with the Rabbis, may disregard this individual opinion.

(12) His authorship being specifically stated there.

(13) V. note 2, supra

(14) Both sisters.

(15) Of the levirate marriage.

(16) supra 19a, Bek. 92a

(17) Of the two widowed sisters.

(18) So that there is no known ‘second’ widow with whom to participate in the halizah

(19) That the prohibition in our Mishnah to marry the two widowed sisters is entirely due to the fact that it is not known which of them was the first to become a widow and which was second; and that, had the fact been known, the first would have been permitted to be taken in the levirate marriage.

(20) Lit., ‘(is it) that why it was stated’!

(21) I.e., the levir who married first, Cf. Bah a.l. Cur. edd. read, ראשומה for ראשון

(22) Why the woman must be dismissed.

(23) Before the marital bond between him and her sister was severed she was forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah. Hence he must rightly dismiss her.

(24) Levir (v. Bah) who married after his brother had married one of the widows. Cur. edd. שניב for שני.

(25) When he is ordered to divorce the woman.

(26) The levir who married first.

(27) I.e., the sister who became widow second; and naturally no one could disprove his contention.

(28) Who became permitted to him owing to the previous marriage of her sister who, he claims, was the second widow. The marriage of the second severs the marital bond between the sister and the levirs, and thus liberates the first from the prohibition of ‘the sister of one's zekukah’ and brings her under the category of ‘permitted, forbidden and permitted again’.

(29) Since this last suggested answer is also untenable.

(30) R. Johanan, supra 27b.

(31) R. Jose.

(32) Cf. supra p. 170. n. 3’

(33) If she was, for instance, his mother-in-law.

(34) V. previous note. ‘Mother-in-law’ is taken as an instance of any forbidden relative.

(35) Of the levirate marriage.
(36) I.e., her husband died before the other brother.
(37) To marry the other levir.
(38) That widow is permitted to him, because she is neither his forbidden relative nor the sister of his zekukah, since a forbidden relative is not a zekukah.
(39) Since at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she was not the sister of a zekukah.
(40) When her sister became the zekukah of the surviving levirs by the death of her husband.
(41) ‘When his brother had contracted with her the levirate marriage.
(42) Of the Ievirate marriage.
(43) So that his mother-in-law who came under the obligation next was never for one moment permitted even to the other levir.
(44) Tosef. v.
(45) Lit., ‘R. Simeon like whom’. He could not possibly advance a view of his own, since he is not sufficiently great to disagree either with Beth Shammai or with Beth Hillel.
(46) I.e., if he maintains that what he said was their view.
(47) Supra 20a, which Implies the law here stated, viz, that he is forbidden to marry the forbidden relative but may marry her sister.
(48) And not here.
(49) Where one brother only is involved.
(50) Who might marry a sister of his zekukah by mistaking the reason for the levirate marriage of his brother.
(51) And not there.
(52) That there is a special reason why his brother may marry one of the sisters. The fact that he himself does not marry either of the sisters is sufficient proof that the sister of a zekukah is forbidden.
(53) And people might erroneously infer that the sister of a zekukah is always permitted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 28b

If she is forbidden by virtue of a commandment or by virtue of holiness she must perform halizah and may not be taken in levirate marriage![1] -There[1] it is a question of one forbidden by virtue of a commandment alone,[2] but here [it is a case of one] forbidden by virtue of a commandment and [by virtue of] her sister.[3] Since it might have been assumed that the prohibition by virtue of a commandment shall take the same rank as the prohibition by the law of incest[4] and [her sister] should, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence we were taught [that the law is not so].

But how could she[5] possibly be taken in levirate marriage? Since Pentateuchally she[6] is to submit to him,[7] he would come in contact with the sister of his zekukah[8] -It might have been thought that such provision[9] was made by the Rabbis for the sake of the precept,[10] hence we were taught [that it was not so].

IF ONE OF THE SISTERS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely, it is precisely identical [with the one before]![11] For what difference is there whether [a woman is forbidden] to one or to two?- [Both are] required. For had the former only[12] been stated, it might have been assumed [that the law was applicable there only] because there exists a second brother to indicate the cause,[13] but not here where there is no second brother to indicate it.[14] And if the statement had been made here only it might have been assumed on the contrary that both brothers afford proof in regard to each other,[15] but not in the other case;[16] [hence both were] required.

THIS IS THE CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT HAS BEEN SAID etc. What is the expression, THIS IS intended to exclude?[17] -To exclude the case [where one sister was forbidden by] Virtue of a commandment to the one [brother]. and [the other sister was forbidden] by virtue of a commandment to the other. But what need was there for this [additional statement]? Surely it is precisely identical [with that mentioned before];[18] for what difference is there whether it relates to one or to two! — It might have been thought that only where there is the necessity of providing for a preventive measure against a second brother do we not say that the prohibition by a commandment takes the same rank as a prohibition by the law of incest,[19] but that where there is no necessity to provide against a second brother we do say that in the case of the one brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that also in the case of the other brother the prohibition by a commandment is to be given the same force as the prohibition by the law of incest, and that the sisters may consequently be taken in levirate marriage; hence we were taught [that such an assumption is not to be made].

Rab Judah said in the name of Rab and so did R. Hiyya teach: In the case of all these[20] it may happen that she who is forbidden to one brother[21] may be permitted to the other,[22] and that her sister who is her sister-in-law may either perform the halizah or be taken in the levirate marriage;[23] and Rab Judah interpreted it[24] [as referring to those][25] from one's mother-in-law onward but not to the first six categories. What is the reason? Because this[26] is only possible in the case of a daughter born from a woman who had been outraged.[27] but not in that of a daughter born from a legal marriage.[28] [and the author of that Mishnah][29] deals only with cases of legal matrimony and not with those of outraged women.[30]

Abaye. however, Interprets it[24] as referring also to a daughter from a woman that had been outraged. because, since [the application of Rab's statement][31] is quite possible in her case, it matters not whether she was born from a woman who was legally married or from one that had been outraged; but not to the ‘wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’ since this[31] is possible only according to the view of R. Simeon[32] and not according to that of the Rabbis and he[33] does not deal with any matter which is a subject of controversy. But R. Safra interprets [it[34] as referring] also to the ‘wife of a brother who was not his contemporary’, and this[34] is possible in the case of six brothers in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.[35] And your mnemonic is, ‘died, born, and performed the levirate marriage; died, born, and performed the levirate marriage’.[36] [Suppose. for instance]. Reuben and Simeon[37] were married to two sisters, and Levi and Judah were married to two strangers. When Reuben died, Issachar was born and Levi took the widow in levirate marriage. When Simeon died, Zebulun was born and Judah took [the second widow] in levirate marriage. When Levi and Judah subsequently died without issue and their widows fell under the obligation of the levirate marriage before Issachar and Zebulun, she[38] who is forbidden to the one[39] is permitted to the other[40] while she[41] who is forbidden to the other[42] is permitted to the first.[43]

In the example of ‘her sister who is her sister-in-law’,[44] what need was there[45] for Judah to contract the levirate marriage? Even if Judah did not contract any levirate marriage it is also possible![46] — Owing to the rival.[47] This[48] satisfactorily explains the case of the rival; what can be said, however, in respect of the rival's rival?[49] — If, for instance, Gad and Asher also subsequently married them.[50]

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER, OR TO A WOMAN AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER, BEHOLD, THESE[51] MUST[52] PERFORM THE HALIZAH[53] BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[54] R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, EXEMPTS THEM.[55]

IF ONE OF THEM[56] WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM BY THE LAW OF INCEST, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT OR TO HOLINESS, THEY MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon exempts both from the halizah and the levirate marriage. for it is said in the Scriptures, And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister, to be a rival to her:[57] when they become rivals to one another,[58] you may not marry even one of them.

IF ONE OF THEM WAS etc. What need was there again for this statement? Surely it is the same![59] -It was necessary because of the opinion of R. Simeon: As it might have been assumed that, since R. Simeon had said that two sisters were neither to perform halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage. A preventive measure should be enacted[60] against two sisters generally.[61] hence we were taught[62] [that it was not so].[63]

IF, HOWEVER, THE PROHIBITION IS DUE TO A COMMANDMENT etc.

(11) Where one sister-in-law is similarly forbidden to one levir, and he is permitted to marry her sister.

(12) Lit., ‘there’.

(13) Since one brother is forbidden to marry either sister it will be obvious that the brother was permitted to marry one of the sisters for a special reason.

(14) Since both brothers marry respectively the two sisters, it might be assumed that any levir may marry the sister of his zekukah.

(15) Since each brother is permitted to marry only one particular sister and not the other, it is obvious that the other is forbidden to him. The law of zekukah could not consequently be mistaken.

(16) Where there is only one brother, and no other brother to indicate that there is a special reason why the sister of his apparent zekukah. should be permitted to be taken in Ievirate marriage.

(17) THIS IS implies this and no other.

(18) In our Mishnah: [IF ONE SISTER] WAS FORBIDDEN BY VIRTUE OF A COMMANDMENT... SHE MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH AND MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

(19) V. supra p. 174. n. 6.

(20) The fifteen forbidden categories enumerated in the Mishnah, supra 2af.

(21) As a forbidden relative under the law of incest.

(22) With whom she is not so closely related.

(23) The prohibition of the one under the law of incest removes the marital bond, and her sister who, in consequence, is no longer the ‘sister of a zekukah’, may, therefore, be married to, or perform the halizah with the levir to whom the former is forbidden.

(24) Rab's statement.

(25) Of the fifteen relatives enumerated in the Mishnah mentioned.

(26) That two sisters shall be the daughters of two brothers, and that the one forbidden to one brother shall be permitted to the other brother. V. n. 8.

(27) If, of four brothers, A, B, C and D, A had a daughter from a woman he had outraged. and B had a daughter from the same woman whom he outraged after A, and these daughters of A and B, who are maternal sisters, married their father's brothers, C and D, who subsequently died without issue, A's daughter is permitted to B (who is her brother-in-law but otherwise a complete stranger) and is forbidden to A her father. For similar reasons A's daughter is permitted to A and forbidden to B. Thus it is possible for two sisters to marry the two levirs respectively because each one of them is a daughter of the other levir to whom she is forbidden by the law of incest.

(28) Since the mother of such a daughter would be forbidden to marry her husband's brother, even though she had been divorced by her husband after the birth of that daughter.

(29) Supra 2a, which is now under discussion.

(30) And since the case of a daughter could not be included (v. supra nn. 8 and 9), the other five cases which also bear on a daughter had equally to be excluded.

(31) V. supra p. 176. n. 7.

(32) Supra 18b. V. also R. Safra's interpretation and notes, Infra.

(33) Rab or R. Hiyya.

(34) Rab's statement.

(35) Who in certain circumstances permits the marriage of the ‘widow of a brother who was not his contemporary’. V. supra 18b.

(36) v. infra, when (a) death, (b) birth and (c) marriage occurred in this order in the case of both groups of brothers.

(37) Jacob's sons, the sequence of whose births is known (v. Gen. XXIX. 32-XXX, 20), are taken here as an illustration of the possibility of the application of Rab's statement in certain circumstances of birth, death and marriage.

(38) The widow of Levi.

(39) To Issachar, because he was born before the marriage of Levi had removed the levirate bond between Reuben's widow and the other brothers, and thus came under the prohibition of marrying ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’.

(40) To Zebulun who was born after she had married Levi and the levirate bond between her and the other brothers had been removed.

(41) The wife of Judah.

(42) To Zebulun, to whom the widow of Simeon stands in the same relation as the widow of Reuben to Issachar. (V. supra note 9).

(43) Issachar who was Simeon's contemporary.

(44) Supra.

(45) In R. Safra's interpretation.

(46) For one sister to be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other, and vice versa. Suppose Reuben died, and then Issachar was born, and Levi married the widow; then Simeon died, Zebulun was born, and Levi died; and the widows of Simeon and Levi came under the obligation of the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun. Levi's widow is forbidden to Issachar owing to the levirate bond originating from her first husband, Reuben, (v. supra p. 177, n. 9) and is permitted to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 10), while Simeon's widow is forbidden to Zebulun (v. p. 177, n. 12) and permitted to Issachar (v. p. 177. n. 13). Now, since the point may be illustrated by five brothers, why was it necessary to bring in six?

(47) As the Mishnah under discussion (supra 2af) speaks of the rivals it was desired to give an illustration which may be applicable to rivals as well as to the forbidden relatives, and this could only be done by assuming that Judah married Simeon's widow. Had he not married her, the rival would have had to be not Judah's but Simeon's wife who would thus be forbidden to Zebulun not as ‘rival’ but as ‘the wife of his brother who was not his contemporary’.

(48) The illustration with the six brothers.

(49) How is it possible that one rival's rival shall be forbidden to one brother and permitted to the other while the other rival's rival should be forbidden to the other brother and permitted to the first?

(50) The first wives of Levi and Judah (the rivals of their second wives, the widows of Reuben and Simeon). If Gad who married, say. the widow of Judah, and Asher who married, say. the widow of Levi died subsequently without issue and were survived by their wives who are now subject to the levirate marriage with Issachar and Zebulun the surviving brothers, Gad's first wife, the rival of his second wife (the widow of Judah) who was the rival of Simeon's wife, is forbidden to Zebulun as the rival's rival of the wife of Simeon who was not his contemporary, but is permitted to Issachar. Similarly Asher's first wife is forbidden to Issachar and permitted to Zebulun.

(51) The women enumerated.

(52) If their husbands, the two brothers, died without issue.

(53) With the third surviving brother.

(54) By that brother; since both are related to him by the ‘levirate bond’ and each is forbidden to him as the consanguineous relative of the woman connected with him by such bond.

(55) Even from the halizah. V. Gemara infra.

(56) The sisters.

(57) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(58) The Ievirate bond which subjects both to the same levir causing them to be rivals.

(59) As that which had been taught in an earlier Mishnah in the case of four brothers, supra 26a.

(60) Forbidding levirate marriage even where the prohibition of one is due to the law of incest.

(61) Lit., ‘of the world’. If permission to marry one of the sisters were given where one is forbidden by the law of incest, it might be mistakenly concluded that levirate marriage is allowed even when none was forbidden by the law of incest.

(62) By the statement in our Mishnah that one IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

(63) The similar statement in the earlier Mishnah (supra 262) does not prove this point as far as R. Simeon is concerned, since it refers to the view of the Rabbis according to whom the marriage of the sister of a zekukah is only Rabbinically forbidden and no preventive measure is obviously required against a possible infringement of such a prohibition. According to R. Simeon, however, who regards the marriage of a sister of a stekukab as incest, a preventive measure might have been expected had not our Mishnah proved the contrary.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29a

But did not R. Simeon state that two sisters[1] are neither to perform the halizah nor to be taken in levirate marriage![2] — This[3] is a preventive measure against any other case where the prohibition is due to a commandment —[4] This is a satisfactory explanation in respect of herself;[5] what, however, can be said in respect of her sister?[6] -The provision was made in the case of her sister as a preventive measure against herself.[7] But, surely. no such preventive measures were made in the case where one was forbidden as incest![8] — A case of incest is different because people are well acquainted with it[9] and it[10] is well known.[11]

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS UNMARRIED,[12] AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS HUSBANDS DIED, THE UNMARRIED BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER[13] A MA'AMAR,[14] AND THEN HIS SECOND BROTHER DIED, BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE[15] [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT[16] AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER.[17] BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, MAINTAIN THAT HE MUST DISMISS HIS WIFE[18] BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE[19] AND BY HALIZAH,[20] AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.[21] THIS IS THE CASE IN REGARD TO WHICH IT WAS SAID: WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE, AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE.[22]

GEMARA. What was THIS IS meant to exclude?[23] — To exclude the statement[24] of R. Joshua,[25] [and to indicate] that we do not act In accordance with his view but either in accordance with that of R. Gamaliel or that of R. Eliezer.

R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar according to Beth Shammai constitutes a perfect kinyan,[26] so that,if he[27] wishes to dismiss her, a letter of divorce is sufficient; but rather that, according to Beth Shammai, a ma'amar constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival.[28] Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, ‘They may retain them’,[29] which implies that they may only retain them[30] but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.[31]

(1) Who are both subject to Ievirate marriage.

(2) Owing to the levirate bond which Pentateuchally binds both sisters to the levir. Why, then, should halizah be performed here where Pentateuchally both sisters are subject to the levirate marriage and each is, consequently, forbidden as the sister of a zekukah?

(3) The provision that halizah shall be performed.

(4) Were halizah to be discarded in this case, an erroneous conclusion might be formed that it is to be discarded in all cases where the prohibition is due to a commandment (as if it had been due to the Pentateuchal laws of incest). even if the question of the sister of a zekukah did not arise.

(5) The sister forbidden by a commandment.

(6) Why is she not exempt from the halizah as the sister of a zekukah?

(7) לתא דידה לתא 'her ill-luck'. Others render, 'company'. As the sister who is forbidden by a commandment is subject to halizah (as a preventive measure, for the reason previously stated) so must her sister (so that one case be not mistaken for the other) be also subject to the same measure.

(8) V. our Mishnah: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER BUT IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER, and no preventive measure against the sister was enacted.

(9) And would know that one sister was forbidden because of incest.

(10) The cause why the second sister is taken in levirate marriage.

(11) Lit., 'it has a voice'. And no one would in consequence permit elsewhere the marriage of the sister of another zekukah who is not forbidden by the laws of incest.

(12) מונה 'empty'.

(13) The widow.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) The sister-in-law to whom he addressed the ma'amar though he had not actually married her. A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes legal marriage in this respect. V. infra.

(16) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(17) Since her sister is regarded as legally married she is no more the sister of the levir's zekukah but of his wife.

(18) Cf. supra n. 4.

(19) Since the ma'amar is partially regarded as marriage.

(20) A ma'amar, according to Beth Hillel, does not constitute a proper marriage, and she is now the sister of a zekukah. V. following note.

(21) v. previous note. As the ma'amar did not constitute a proper marriage with her sister she is the sister of a zekukah who may not contract levirate marriage but must perform halizah.

(22) V. infra 109a. The second widow who becomes subject to him through the levirate law is not only herself forbidden to marry him (cf. note 10) but deprives him also of the first widow, his virtual wife. (Cf. note 9)-

(23) THIS IS implying this but not other cases.

(24) Lit., 'that'.

(25) Infra 109a.

(26) V. Glos., i.e., perfect marriage.

(27) The levir.

(28) I.e., her rival who is her sister does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as the 'sister of a zekukah'.

(29) Supra 26a, in the case where the levirs married the sisters-in-law before consulting the Beth din as to the permissibility of their action.

(30) If they had already married them.

(31) Because each one is the sister of a zekukah. Lit., 'they may retain, yes; for as at the start, not'.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 29b

Now, if it could be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a perfect kinyan, let the one levir address a ma'amar[1] and constitute thereby a kinyan,[2] and let the other also address a ma amar[1] and thereby constitute a kinyan.[3] What then! [Is it your inference that] it[4] keeps the rival completely out?[5] Let then one levir address a ma'amar[1] and keep her out[6] and let the other levir also address a ma'amar[1] and keep her out![7] What, however, may be said in reply? That a permitted ma'amar[8] does keep the rival out, while a forbidden ma'amar[9] does not keep her out; so also here, even according to him who maintains that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan, only a permitted ma'amar[10] constitutes a kinyan. but a forbidden one[8] does not.

R. Ashi taught it[11] in the following manner: R. Eleazar said: It must not be assumed that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps the rival[12] completely out, and that she does not require even halizah; but rather it[13] keeps her out[14] and still leaves [a partial bond].[15] Said R. Abin: We also have learned the same thing: Beth Shammai said, ‘they may retain them’,[16] which implies that they may only retain them[16] but [that they may] not [marry them] at the outset.[17] Now, if it could have been assumed that a ma amar, according to Beth Shammai, keeps a rival out completely. let the one levir address a ma'amar,[18] and thus keep her out.[19] and let the other also address a ma'amar[18] and so keep her out.[20] But. surely. it was taught. BETH SHAMMAI SAY: HIS WIFE [REMAINS] WITH HIM WHILE THE OTHER IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER![21] — The fact is, a yebamah who is eligible for all[22] is also eligible for a part;[23] a yebamah who is not eligible for all[24] is not eligible for a part.[25]

Rabbah inquired: Does a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitute marriage or betrothal? — Said Abaye to him: On what practical issue [does this question bear]? Shall I say on [the issue] of inheriting from her,[26] defiling himself to her[27] or annulling her vows?[28] surely. [it could be answered that] seeing that in the case of[29] ordinary betrothal[30] R. Hiyya taught, that where the wife has only been betrothed[31] [the husband] is neither subject to the laws of onan[32] nor may he defile himself for her.[27] and she in his case is likewise not subject to the laws of onan[33] nor may she defile herself for him,[34] and that if she dies he does not inherit from her though if he dies she collects her kethubah;[35] is there any need [to speak of the case where] a ma'amar had been addressed![36] Rather. [the question is] in respect of introduction into the bridal canopy: Does it[37] constitute a marriage and, therefore. no introduction Into the bridal canopy is required.[38] or does it perhaps constitute betrothal and, consequently, introduction into the bridal canopy is required? The other replied: If where he did not address to her any ma'amar it is written [in Scripture]. Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[39] even against her will, is there any need [to speak of the case where] he has addressed to her a ma'amar![40] The former retorted: Yes;[41] since I maintain that whenever a levir has addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears and she comes under the bond of betrothal. What [then is the decision]? — Come and hear: In the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir.[42] whether there be one levir or two levirs, R. Eliezer said. he[43] may annul [her vows]. R. Joshua said: [Only where she is waiting] for one and not for two.[44] R. Akiba said: Neither when she [is waiting] for one nor for two.[45] Now we pondered thereon: One can well understand R. Akiba, since he may hold that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one;[46] according to R. Joshua, the levirate bond may exist where there is one levir but not where there are two levirs.[47] According to R. Eliezer, however, granted that a levirate bond exists, one can understand why, in the case of one, he may annul, but why also in the case of two?[48] And R. Ammi[49] replied: Here it is a case where he addressed to her a ma'amar, and the statement represents the opinion of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.[50] Now, if it be granted that it[51] constitutes a marriage, it is quite intelligible why he may annul her vows. If. however, it be assumed that it constitutes only a betrothal, how could he annul her vows? Surely we learned: The vows of a betrothed girl may be annulled by her father in conjunction with her husband![52] -Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: What is meant by annulment? Jointly.[53]

According to R. Eleazar, however, who holds that a ma'amar, In the opinion of Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan only so far as to keep out the rival, how[54] could the annulment be effected even jointly?[55] — R. Eleazar can answer you: When l said that it[51] constitutes a kinyan so far only as to keep out the rival, [I meant to indicate] that a letter of divorce was not sufficient[56] but that halizah also was required;[57] did l say anything. however, as regards the annulment of vows! And if you prefer l might say. R. Eleazar can answer you: Is it satisfactorily explained according to R. Nahman b. Isaac?[58] Surely it was not stated ‘they may annul’ but ‘he may annul’![59] Consequently this must be a case where he[60] appeared before a court[61] and[62] a specified sum for alimony was decreed for her out of his estate; and [this is to be understood] In accordance with the statement R. Phinehas made in the name of Raba. For R. Phinehas stated in the name of Raba: Any woman that utters a vow does so on condition that her husband will approve of it.[63]

(1) To one of the sisters-in-law; since such an action is not forbidden.
(2) v. Glos. i.e., perfect marriage.
(3) The prohibition ‘as sister of a zekukah’ would consequently be removed and both levirs could properly marry the respective sisters-in-law.
(4) The ma'amar.
(5) V. supra p. 181, n. 17.
(6) v. p. 181, n. 17.
(7) V. supra p. 181, n. 17, and supra n. 6. Why, then, was levirate marriage with the two sisters forbidden!
(8) One addressed to a sister-in-law in a case where levirate marriage with her was permissible at the time.
(9) When two sisters were subject to the levirate marriage before the ma'amar had been addressed.
(10) V. note 11.
(11) The previous statement of R. Eleazar and R. Abin etc.
(12) The sister-in-law who, like her sister (the other sister-in-law), is subject to the levirate bond.
(13) The ma'amar.
(14) So that she cannot cause the prohibition of the other to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.
(15) Which necessitates her performing the halizah if she wishes to marry a stranger before he levir had properly married her sister.
(16) V. supra p, 182, n. 1.
(17) V. supra p. 182, n. 3.
(18) v. supra p. 182, n. 4.
(19) Cf. supra p. 181, n. 17.
(20) Consequently it must be concluded that a ma'amar still leaves a partial bond, and that before the other sister had performed the halizah the first is forbidden as the sister of one's zekukah.
(21) Which shews that no halizah at all is required!
(22) For both levirate marriage and halizah, as in the case of our Mishnah where the ma'amar was addressed to one sister before the death of the husband of the other had subjected that other also to the same levir.
(23) To the ma'amar which, in such circumstances. completely keeps out the other when she also, through her husband's subsequent death, comes under the obligation.
(24) As in the Mishnah, supra 26a, where both widows were equally subject to the levirs at the time the ma'amar had been addressed, and none was eligible for both the levirate marriage and the halizah.
(25) I.e., for the ma'amar which, in such a case, does not keep out the sister.
(26) As a husband who is the heir of his wife.
(27) If he is a priest who may defile himself by attending on the dead bodies of certain relatives of whom a wife is one.
(28) A husband may annul the vows of his wife. v. Num. XXX. 7ff
(29) Lit.. ‘now’.
(30) Lit., ‘a betrothed in the world’, i.e., ordinary betrothal which is pentateuchally valid.
(31) But not yet married.
(32) A mourner prior to the burial of certain relatives is called onan (v. Glos.) and is subject to a number of restrictions. If his betrothed died he may, unlike one whose married wife died, partake of holy things.
(33) She also is allowed to partake of holy things.
(34) During a festival when not only priests but also Israelites and women are forbidden to attend on the corpses of those who are not their near relatives. (V. R.H. 16b). Others render. ‘nor need she defile etc’. Cf. Tosaf. a.l., s.v. לא
(35) v. Glos.,in a case where such a document was given to her at the betrothal, prior to the marriage (v. Keth. 89b).
(36) A ma'amar is only a Rabbinical enactment. If Pentateuchal betrothal has not the force of a marriage in respect of the laws mentioned, how much less the Rabbinical ma'amar!
(37) The ma'amar.
(38) She being regarded as his wife even if connubial intercourse took place against her will, and should he wish to part with her, a Get will suffice without additional halizah.
(39) Deut. XXV, 5-
(40) Where there is, in addition to his claim as Ievir, the force of the ma'amar.
(41) So Bah. a.l.
(42) שומרת יבם V. Glos. s.v. shomereth yabam.

(43) Any one of the levirs.

(44) In the latter case neither of the levirs is entitled to annul her vows.

(45) Ned. 74a.

(46) Hence a levir is never entitled to the privilege of a husband in respect of the annulment of vows.

(47) Since it is not known to which of them she is really subject, the bond between them and the widow is necessarily a weak one.

(48) Only both together. but not one only, should be allowed to annul her vows.

(49) Cur. edd. enclose in parentheses ‘b. Ahabah’.

(50) Ned. loc. cit.

(51) The ma'amar.

(52) But not by her husband alone. And, since the levir alone may here annul, a ma'amar must have the force of marriage.

(53) The levir and her father, as in the case of a betrothal. Hence no proof may be adduced from here as to whether a ma'amar has the force of a marriage or of a betrothal.

(54) Not having the force even of a betrothal.

(55) Cf. supra note 8.

(56) In the case of a yebamah to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.

(57) If he did not wish to marry her.

(58) Who holds that the father and husband jointly annul the vows of the widow to whom a ma'amar has been addressed.

(59) The reading is יפר (sing.). not יפרו (plur.). How, then, could he state that two jointly annul her vows!

(60) The levir. So Bah a.l. Cur. edd., ‘she’.

(61) Either before he addressed the ma'amar (according to R. Nahman b. Isaac) or after the ,na'amar (according to R. Ammi).

(62) As he refused either to marry, or to submit to her halizah.

(63) Since she is maintained out of his estate he is regarded by her as husband and her vows are subject to his will. Hence he may also annul them. With the whole passage cf. Ned. 74a. Sonc. ed. pp. 233ff, q.v. notes.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30a

MISHNAH.IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS’ HUSBANDS DIED AND THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST[1] IS EXEMPT[2] AS BEING A WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE SECOND IS EXEMPT[2] AS BEING HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER[3] A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER IS TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[4]

GEMARA. The reason[5] is because he had addressed to her[3] a ma'amar;[6] had he, however, not addressed a ma'amar to her,[3] the stranger also would have had to be taken in levirate marriage.[7] This proves, said R. Nahman, that no levirate bond exists[8] even in the case of one brother.[9]

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED, ONE OF THE SISTERS’ HUSBANDS MARRIED HIS WIFE AND THEN DIED HIMSELF, THE FIRST[10] IS EXEMPT[11] IN THAT SHE IS HIS WIFE'S SISTER, AND THE OTHER[12] IS EXEMPT AS HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE HAD ONLY ADDRESSED TO HER[13] A MA'AMAR AND DIED, THE STRANGER MUST PERFORM HALIZAH[14] BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. What need was there again [for the law in this Mishnah]? Surely it is the same:[15] If there,[16] where the wife's sister is only a rival to the stranger[17] it has been said that the stranger is forbidden,[18] how much more so[19] here where the stranger is the rival to a wife's sister![20] -The Tanna had taught first this,[21] while the other[22] was regarded by him as a permissible case, and so he permitted her.[23] Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;[24] and, as it was dear to him,[25] he placed it first; while the other Mishnah[26] was allowed to stand in its original form.[27]

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND WHEN ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIED THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER MARRIED HIS WIFE, AND THEN THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED ALSO, BEHOLD,SHE[28] IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM[29] FOR ALL TIME, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.[30]

GEMARA. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: Any yebamah to whom the instruction Her husband's brother shall go in unto her[31] cannot be applied at the time she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden.[32] What new thing does he[33] teach us? Surely we have learned, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ALL TIME SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT! — It might have been assumed that this[34] applies only to the case where she[35] was not suitable for him[36] at all during the period of her first subjection;[37] but that where she[38] was at all suitable for him[39] during her first subjection[40] it might have been assumed that she[38] should be permitted, hence, he[41] taught us [that It was not so].

But we have learned this also: If two brothers were married to two sisters, and one of the brothers died and afterwards the wife of the second brother died, behold, she[42] is forbidden to him for all time, since she was forbidden to him for one moment![43] — It might have been assumed [that this law is applicable] only there because she was completely forced out of that house;[44] but here, where she was not entirely forced out of that house,[45] it might have been said that as she is suitable for the brother who married the stranger she is also[46] suitable for the other brother,[47] hence he[41] taught us [that she was not].

MISHNAH. IF TWO OF THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS AND THE THIRD WAS MARRIED TO A STRANGER, AND ONE OF THE SISTERS' HUSBANDS DIVORCED HIS WIFE, AND WHEN THE BROTHER WHO WAS MARRIED TO THE STRANGER DIED HE WHO HAD DIVORCED HIS WIFE MARRIED HER AND THEN DIED HIMSELF- THIS IS A CASE CONCERNING WHICH IT WAS SAID: AND IF ANY OF-THESE DIED OR WERE DIVORCED. THEIR RIVALS ARE PERMITTED.[48] GEMARA. The reason[49] is because he[50] had divorced [his wife first] and [his brother][51] died afterwards,[52] but [if the other][51] had died [first] and he[50] divorced [his wife] afterwards,[53] she[54] is forbidden.[55] Said R. Ashi: This proves that a levirate bond exists,[56] even where two brothers are involved.[57]

But as to R. Ashi's [inference] does not that of R. Nahman[58] present a difficulty?-R. Ashi can answer you: The same law, that the stranger is to perform the halizah and that she is not to be taken in levirate marriage.is applicable[59] even to the case where no ma' amar had been addressed; and the only reason why ma'amar was at all mentioned[60] was in order to exclude the ruling of Beth Shammai. Since they maintain that a ma'amar constitutes

(1) Widow, who is now also the widow of the second deceased brother.

(2) From levirate marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.

(3) The first widow.

(4) With the surviving brother.

(5) Why the stranger is not to be taken in levirate marriage.

(6) Since our Mishnah makes the stranger's exemption dependent on the ma'amar, whereby she became the first widow's rival.
(7) Despite the fact that the first widow is also subjected to the levir for the levirate marriage.
(8) Between the widow of the deceased brother and the levirs.
(9) As here, where only one brother could possibly marry her, she being forbidden to the other as his wife's sister. Even in such a case the mere subjection of the widow to the levir (to be taken in levirate marriage or to perform the halizah) does not constitute a levirate bond to attach her to him as if she had been his actual wife.
(10) Wife of the second deceased brother.
(11) From marriage and halizah with the surviving brother.
(12) The stranger. whom the second deceased brother had taken in levirate marriage.
(13) To the stranger.
(14) With the surviving brother.
(15) As the law implied in the previous Mishnah.
(16) In the previous Mishnah.
(17) Who was the first and proper wife.
(18) To be taken in levirate marriage.
(19) Should the stranger be forbidden to be taken in levirate marriage.
(20) Who was the first and proper wife.
(21) The second Mishnah.
(22) Mishnah, which is now the first.
(23) I.e., allowed the stranger to be taken in levirate marriage by the surviving brother, because the prohibition that arose from her husband's ‘wife's sister’ was imposed upon her later, after she had been lawfully married to her husband and after a period during which, had he died without issue, she would have been permitted to be taken in levirate marriage by his brother. It was not the Tanna's Intention, therefore, to include this case in a Mishnah at all.
(24) Since her rival was, after all, the surviving brother's wife's sister.
(25) Owing to its novelty.
(26) The second Mishnah.
(27) Lit., ‘did not move from its place’. though in the light of the newly added Mishnah it had obviously become superfluous.
(28) The wife of the first brother.
(29) The surviving brother.
(30) Lit., ‘hour’. When her husband died she was forbidden to his brother who was married to her sister as his ‘wife's sister’. This prohibition remains permanently in force and is not removed even when her sister subsequently dies and she is no longer the levir's ‘wife's sister’.
(31) Deut. XXV, 5’
(32) Even later when the cause of the prohibition is removed. Cf. our Mishnah.
(33) Rab.
(34) The law in our Mishnah.
(35) The widow of the first brother.
(36) The brother who was married to the second sister.
(37) I.e., if her sister, the wife of the second brother, did not die until after she had married the brother whose wife was the stranger.
(38) The widow of the first brother.
(39) The brother who was married to the second sister.
(40) If her sister died before she (the first widow) had married the other brother.
(41) Rah.
(42) The widow of the first brother.
(43) Infra 32a.
(44) When her husband died and she was not permitted to marry his only surviving brother whose wife's sister she was, her connection with her husband's family had been completely severed, she remaining free to marry any stranger.
(45) Since she was still under the obligation of marrying the third brother who was married to the stranger.
(46) Thanks to the levirate bond with a member of her deceased husband's family.

(47) Who was the husband of her sister, now that the latter is dead.

(48) The stranger who was taken in levirate marriage was never the rival of the sister of the wife of the surviving brother, since the sister had been divorced before the levirate marriage with the stranger had taken place.

(49) Why the stranger who was taken in levirate marriage by one of the husbands of the sisters is permitted to the last surviving brother.

(50) The brother who divorced his wife.

(51) The first husband of the stranger.

(52) So that the stranger was not even for one moment the rival of one of the sisters, either through marriage or through the levirate bond of subjection.

(53) In which case the stranger came for a certain period under the levirate bond in respect of the husbands of the two sisters.

(54) The stranger.

(55) To marry the last surviving brother. Since she was, for a period at least, the rival of one of the sisters, through the levirate bond, she may never be married to the husband of that sister's sister (being forbidden to him as the rival of his wife's sister) even if the sister whose rival she was had been subsequently divorced and ceased to be her rival.

(56) Between the widow of a deceased childless brother and the levirs.

(57) Since, in the case under discussion, the widow whose husband died before one of the sisters had been divorced was subject to two levirs and is, nevertheless, regarded as the rival of the divorced sister, in consequence of which she is forbidden to the last surviving brother.

(58) From a Mishnah supra, that no levirate bond exists even in the case of one brother.

(59) Contrary to R. Nahman's inference.

(60) In that Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 30b

a perfect kinyan,[1] he taught us[2] that [the halachah is] not in accordance with Beth Shammai.

But then as to R. Nahman's [inference] does not that of R. Ashi present a difficulty? And should you reply that the same law, that her rival is permitted,[3] is also applicable to the case where he[4] died first and the other brother[5] divorced his wife afterwards,[6] what [it could be objected] would THIS IS exclude? It might exclude the case where he[5] married her[7] first and then divorced his wife.[8] This might be a satisfactory explanation if he[9] holds the view of R. Jeremiah who said, ‘Break it up: He who taught the one did not teach the other,’[10] [for, if this is so]. one Tanna may hold the opinion that it is death[11] that causes the subjection[12] while the other might be of the opinion that it is the original marriage[11] that causes the subjection,[13] and THIS IS would thus exclude the case where he first married[7] and then divorced;[14] if, however, he is of the same opinion as Raba who said, ‘Both statements may in fact represent the views of one Tanna, it being a case of "this and there is no need to state that"’,[15] what does THIS IS exclude?[16] — He[9] has no alternative but to adopt the view of R. Jeremiah.

And according to Raba,[17] the explanation would be satisfactory if he held the View of R. Ashi,[18] for then, THIS IS would exclude the case of one who died without first divorcing his wife;[19] if, however, he holds the same view as R. Nahman,[20] what would THIS IS exclude?[21] -He[22] has no alternative but to accept the view of R. Ashi. MISHNAH. [IF IN THE CASE OF ANY ONE OF] ALL THESE[23] THE BETROTHAL OR Dlvorce[24] WAS IN DOUBT, BEHOLD, THESE RIVALS MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH[25] BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[26] WHAT IS MEANT BY DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL? IF WHEN HE THREW TO HER A TOKEN OF BETROTHAL[27] IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM[28] OR NEARER TO HER,[29] THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL BETROTHAL. DOUBTFUL DIVORCE? IF HE WROTE A LETTER OF DIVORCE IN HIS OWN HANDWRITING AND IT BORE NO SIGNATURES OF WITNESSES,[30] OR[31] IF IT BORE SIGNATURES BUT NO DATE, OR IF IT BORE A DATE BUT THE SIGNATURE OF ONLY ONE WITNESS, THIS IS A CASE OF DOUBTFUL DIVORCE.

GEMARA. In the case of divorce, however, It is not stated IT WAS UNCERTAIN WHETHER IT FELL NEARER TO HIM OR NEARER TO HER; what is the reason?[32] -Rabbah replied: This woman[33] is in a state of permissibility to all men;[34] would you forbid her [marriage] because of a doubt?[35] You must not forbid her because of a doubt![36] Said Abaye to him: If so, let us also in the matter of betrothal say: This woman[37] is in a state of permissibility to the levir;[38] would you forbid her[39] because of a doubt? You must not forbid her because of a doubt! — There[40] [it leads] to a restriction.[41] But it is a restriction which may lead to a relaxation! For, sometimes, he would betroth her sister[42] by betrothal that was not uncertain, or it might occur that another man would betroth her also by a betrothal that was not uncertain and, as the Master has forbidden her rival to be taken in levirate marriage. it would be assumed that the betrothal of the first[43] was valid and that that of the latter was not![44]

(1) And not even halizah is required.

(2) By stating that halizah must be performed.

(3) To the third surviving brother.

(4) The first husband of the stranger.

(5) The brother who divorced his wife.

(6) The levirate bond with the stranger, prior to the divorce of his wife, not constituting the one woman a rival of the other.

(7) The stranger.

(8) In such a case, since she was actually married, the stranger is regarded as the rival of the third brother's wife's sister, though at the time she becomes subject to him she and his wife's sister have ceased to be rivals.

(15) V. supra p. 65, n. 14 and cf. p. 65, n. 12, so that even if marriage of the stranger took place prior to the divorce of the other, the former, after divorce had taken place, is permitted, even according to the Tanna of our Mishnah.

(16) When the levirate marriage is permitted in both these cases.

(17) Who holds that the subjection to the levirate marriage is caused by the death of the childless brother, and that the rival is permitted to the surviving levir even if the deceased had married her prior to his divorcing his wife, who is the sister of the surviving levir's wife.

(18) That a levirate bond exists.

(19) And without marrying the stranger who would, nevertheless, be forbidden to the surviving third brother on account of the levirate bond.

(20) That no levirate bond exists.

(21) In view of the fact that levirate marriage is permitted in all cases except one, where the second brother took the stranger in levirate marriage and did not divorce his wife, a case which was explicitly stated and required no expression like THIS IS to exclude it.

(22) Raba.

(26) It being possible that the betrothal was not, or that the divorce was valid and they are, therefore, not rivals of a forbidden relative.

(27) While they were both standing in a public domain and a distance of exactly eight cubits intervened between them.

(28) I.e., within the four cubits nearest to him.

(29) Within her four cubits. The person within whose four cubits the object rested is deemed to be the legal possessor.
(30) A document in one's own handwriting. even though it is not signed by witnesses, is within certain conditions and limitations deemed to be valid. V. B.B. 175b.
(31) Where it is not in his own handwriting.
(32) Why should not even halizah on the part of the rival, be required in such a case?
(33) The rival.
(34) Lit., ‘to the market’, i.e., the public. The rival of a forbidden relative, not being subject to levirate marriage or halizah. is permitted to marry any one she desires.
(35) The possibility that the forbidden relative's divorce was valid.
(36) The doubt here being whether the forbidden relative was divorced at all. In the three cases of divorce mentioned in our Mishnah, however, the prohibition Is not due to doubtful divorce but to a defect or an irregularity in the document itself.
(37) The rival.
(38) Had her husband died childless before he married the forbidden relative.
(39) To be taken in levirate marriage.
(40) The case of doubtful betrothal.
(41) The prohibition to marry the levir.
(42) The sister of the one whose betrothal was doubtful.
(43) Since her rival is forbidden.
(44) Because, in the first case, he betrothed his wife's sister; and, in the second, he betrothed a married woman. In the latter case, the betrothal being regarded as invalid, the woman might illegally marry another man. In the former case, should he die without issue, his maternal brother might illegally marry her, believing her never to have been the wife of his brother.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 31a

— Since she is required to perform halizah it is sufficiently known that it[1] is a mere restriction.[2] If so, let him, in the case of divorce also,[3] state it,[4] and require her to perform halizah, and it will be sufficiently known that it[5] Was a mere restriction![6] — Were you to say that she was to perform halizah it might also be assumed that she may be taken in levirate marriage.[7] But here also,[8] were you to say that she is to perform halizah, she might also be taken in levirate marriage![7] -Well, let her be taken in levirate marriage and it will not matter at all since thereby she only retains her former status.[9]

Abaye raised the following objection against him:[10] If the house collapsed upon him[11] and upon his brother's daughter.[12] and it is not known which of them had died first, her rival must perform halizah[13] but may not contract the levirate marriage.[14] But why? Here also it may be said, ‘This woman finds herself in the status of permissibility to all,[15] would you forbid her [marriage on the basis] of a doubt? You must not forbid her [on the basis] of a doubt’! And should you suggest that here also the prohibition is due to a restriction, [it may be retorted that] it is a restriction which may result in a relaxation, for should you say that she is to perform the halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage! — In respect of divorce which is of frequent occurrence the Rabbis enacted a preventive measure;[16] in respect of the collapse of a house which is not of frequent occurrence the Rabbis did not enact any preventive measure. Or else:[17] In the case of divorce, where the forbidden relative is demonstrably alive, were her rival to be required to perform halizah, it might have been thought that the Rabbis[18] had ascertained that the letter of divorce was a valid document,[19] and the rival might, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage. In the case of a house that has collapsed. however, could the Rabbis[18] have ascertained [who was first killed] in the ruin![20]

Have we not learned a similar law in the case of divorce? Surely we learned: If she[21] stood in a public domain, and he[22] threw it[23] to her, she is divorced if it fell nearer to her; but if nearer to him she is not divorced. If it was equidistant,[24] she is divorced and not divorced. And when it was asked, ‘What is the practical effect of this’,[25] [the reply was] that if he was a priest she is forbidden to him;[26] and if she is a forbidden relative, her rival must perform the halizah.[27] We do not say, however, that were you to rule that she must perform halizah she might also be taken in levirate marriage![28] -Concerning this statement, surely, it was said: Both Rabbah and R. Joseph maintain that here we are dealing with two groups of witnesses, one of which declare that it[23] was nearer to her and the other declares that it[23] was nearer to him, which creates a doubt involving a Pentateuchal [prohibition] —[29] Our Mishnah, however, speaks of one group.[30] where the doubt involved is only Rabbinical.[31]

Whence is it proved that our Mishnah speaks of one group? — On analogy with betrothal:[32] As in betrothal only one group is involved so also in divorce[33] one group only could be involved. Whence is it known that in betrothal itself only one group is involved? Is it not possible that it involves two groups of witnesses! — If two groups of witnesses had been involved, she would have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage, and no wrong would have been done.[34] Witnesses stand and declare that it[35] was nearer to her,[36] and you say that she may be taken in levirate marriage and no wrong will be done![37] Furthermore, even where two groups of witnesses are involved the doubt is only Rabbinical, since it might be said ‘Put one pair against the other and let the woman retain her original status’![38] This indeed is similar to [the incident with] the estate of a certain lunatic. For a certain lunatic once sold some property. and a pair of witnesses came and declared that he had effected the sale while in a sound state of mind, and another pair came and declared that the sale was effected while he was in a state of lunacy. And R. Ashi said: Put two against two

(1) The prohibition to take her in levirate marriage.

(2) And is not due to the fact that the betrothal of the forbidden relative was valid.

(3) As in the case of betrothal.

(4) The case of uncertainty as to whether the letter of divorce rested nearer to the husband or nearer to the wife (v. our Mishnah).

(5) The halizah.

(6) Seeing that levirate marriage was forbidden to her.

(7) And by marrying the rival of a forbidden relative one might become subject to the penalty of kareth.

(8) In the case of doubtful betrothal.

(9) Of being permitted to marry the levir.

(10) Rabbah.

(11) Who was childless.

(12) To whom he had been married.

(13) With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, since it is possible that she had been killed before the man, her rival becomes subject to the obligation of performing halizah.

(14) Infra 67b. Since it is also possible that the man was killed first and the rival remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.

(15) v. supra p. 192, n. 12.

(16) That wherever the divorce is doubtful the rival must not perform halizah in order that this performance might not lead also to levirate marriage.

(17) It may be replied.

(18) The scholars or experts who dealt with the case.

(19) And the forbidden relative was no more the wife of the deceased.

(20) It would be obvious, therefore, that the requirement of halizah was a mere restriction.

(21) The wife.

(22) The husband.

(23) The letter of divorce.

(24) Lit., ‘half on half’.

(25) The statement that she is divorced and not divorced.

(26) A priest must not marry or continue to live with a divorced woman.

(27) Git. 78a.

(28) Which shews that even in the case of divorce no preventive measure has been enacted.

(29) As two witnesses declare that the letter of divorce was nearer to the woman, and as evidence of two witnesses is Pentateuchally valid, the possibility that her rival is no more the rival of a forbidden relative must be taken into consideration, and she cannot be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir.

(30) One witness of which is contradicting the other.

(31) Hence, in the matter of betrothal, where the rival enjoyed the status of permissibility to the levir, the law that halizah is required in the case of such contradictory evidence could well be applied, since she cannot be deprived of her status by the evidence of the single witness who states that the token of betrothal was nearer to her. In the case of divorce, however, where the rival has the status of permissibility to marry any stranger, the law that halizah is required in the case of contradictory evidence of two single witnesses could not be applied. since the evidence of one witness is not sufficient to deprive her of that right. particularly as it can also be claimed that were she required to perform halizah she might be taken in levirate marriage also.

(32) Divorce and betrothal being mentioned side by side in this Mishnah.

(33) Had it been included in our Mishnah.

(34) Since the evidence of one pair would have been sufficient to confirm the rival in her status of permissibility to the levir. Hence, as levirate marriage was forbidden it cannot be a case of two groups of witnesses.

(35) The token of betrothal.

(36) Thus presenting a Pentateuchal doubt (cf. supra p. 195. n. 9).

(37) This, surely. might result in the breach of a Pentateuchal law!

(38) Why. then, even in the case of divorce itself, when the two groups of witnesses cancel each other, should the rival, who was hitherto in a state of permissibility to marry anyone. be required to perform halizah!

and let the land remain in the possession of the lunatic! — Rather, said Abaye. Its friend telleth concerning it:[1] that which was taught in connection with betrothal[2] is also to be applied to divorce,[3] and what was taught in connection with divorce[4] is also to be applied to betrothal.

Said Raba to him: If its friend telleth concerning it' what was the object of stating THIS IS?[5] -Rather, said Raba, whatever is applicable to betrothal[6] is also to be applied to divorce, but certain points are applicable to divorce,[7] which cannot be applied to betrothal. And THIS IS[8] which was mentioned in the case of divorce is not to be taken literally. as THIS IS was used in connection with betrothal[9] only because it was also used in connection with divorce.

What was THIS IS mentioned in connection with betrothal meant to exclude? — To exclude the question of date which is inapplicable to betrothal.[10] And wherefore was no date ordained to be entered in [documents of] betrothal? This[11] may well be satisfactorily explained according to him who holds [that the date is required In a letter of divorce][12] on account of the usufruct ,[13] since a betrothed woman has no [need to reclaim] usufruct —[14] According to him, however, who holds [that it[15] was ordained] on account of one's sister's daughter.[16] the insertion of a date should have been ordained [in the case of betrothal also]![17] — Since some men betroth with money[18] and others betroth with a document the Rabbis did not ordain the inclusion of a date.

Said R. Aha son of R. Joseph to R. Ashi: What about the case of a slave of whom some acquire possession by means of money and others by means of a deed, yet the inclusion of a date has nevertheless been ordained by the Rabbis! — In that case[19] acquisition is generally by means of a deed; here,[20] it is generally by means of money. If you prefer I might say: Because it is impossible.[21] For how should one proceed? Were it[22] to be left with her, she might erase it.[23] Were it[22] to be left with him, it might happen that the betrothed might be his sister's daughter and he would shield her.[24] Were it to be left with the witnesses-well, if they remember[25] they could come and tender their evidence;[26] and if they do not,[27] they may sometimes consult the document and then come and tender evidence, while the All Merciful said, ‘out of their mouth’[28] but not out of their writing. If so, let the same argument[29] be applied to divorce also! — There,[30] it[31] comes to save her,[32] here,[33] it[31] comes to condemn her.[34]

MISHNAH. IN THE CASE WHERE THREE BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO THREE WOMEN WHO WERE STRANGERS [TO ONE ANOTHER]. AND ONE OF THEM HAVING DIED[35] THE SECOND BROTHER ADDRESSED TO HER[36] A MA'AMAR[37] AND DIED, BEHOLD, THESE[38] MUST PERFORM HALIZAH[39] BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE; FOR IT IS SAID. AND ONE OF THEM DIED [ETC.] HER HUSBAND'S BROTHER SHALL GO IN UNTO HER.[40] ONLY SHE WHO IS BOUND TO ONE LEVIR[41] BUT NOT SHE WHO IS BOUND TO TWO LEVIRS.[42] R. SIMEON SAID: HE MAY TAKE IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WHICHEVER OF THESE HE WISHES[43] AND THEN PARTICIPATE IN THE HALIZAH WITH THE OTHER.[44]

GEMARA. If, however, the levirate bond with two levirs[45] is Pentateuchal,[46] even halizah should not be required! — But it[47] is only Rabbinical,[48] a preventive measure having been enacted against the possible assumption that two sisters-in-law coming from the same house[49] may both be taken in levirate marriage. Then let one be taken in levirate marriage and the other be required to perform halizah! — A preventive measure has been enacted against the possible assumption that one house was partially built

(34) The document is proof that she had passed out of her unmarried state and that henceforward she is forbidden to all men except her betrothed. She (or any friend of hers) is not anxious to preserve such a document; and, should an accusation of adultery ever be brought against her, she could either destroy it or erase the date and claim her previously confirmed status of an unmarried woman. Hence no date was ordained to be included.

(40) Deut. xxv, 5.
(41) Is to be married by him.
(42) The first to whom she was bound by the levirate tie and the second to whom she is bound by the ma'amar. A ma'amar of a levir, unlike his levirate marriage. cannot sever the bond between the widow and her deceased husband-the levirate tie.
(43) v. supra 19a. If the ma'amar has the validity of marriage, the surviving levir is marrying his second brother's wife, and if a ma'amar is invalid he is marrying either the wife of his first brother or the wife of the second.
(44) The levirate marriage of the one cannot exempt the other from the halizah, since it is possible that a ma'amar is invalid and the two widows are consequently of different brothers. He may not marry the two, since a ma'amar may be valid and he would thus be marrying two widows of the same brother.
(45) According to the Rabbis of our Mishnah.
(46) Since they forbade the levirate marriage in such a case.
(47) The levirate bond with two levirs.
(48) Pentateuchally a ma'amar is not binding. and the two widows consequently are of two different brothers and may both be married.
(49) I.e., widows of the same brother.

and partially pulled down.[1] Well, let the assumption be made![2] — Had he first contracted the levirate marriage and then participated in the halizah, no objection could be raised —[3] The preventive measure, however, has been enacted against the possibility of his participating in the halizah first and contracting the levirate marriage afterwards and thus placing himself under the prohibition of That doth not build up,[4] the All Merciful having said, 'Since he had not built[5] he must never again build'.[6]

Raba said: If he[7] gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival[8] is permitted;[9] but she herself is forbidden, because she might be mistaken for one who is the holder of a letter of divorce.[10] Others say that Raba said: If he[11] gave a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar even she herself becomes permitted.[12] What is the reason? — Because what he has done to her he has taken back.[13]

MISHNAH. IF TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, AND ONE OF THE BROTHERS DIED, AND AFTERWARDS THE WIFE OF THE SECOND BROTHER DIED, BEHOLD, SHE[14] IS FORBIDDEN TO HIM[15] FOREVER, SINCE SHE WAS FORBIDDEN TO HIM FOR ONE MOMENT.[16] GEMARA. Is not this obvious? If there,[17] where she[18] was not entirely excluded from that house[19] it has been said, 'No',[20] how much more so here[21] where the widow is completely excluded from that house![22] -The Tanna had taught first this,[21] while the other[23] was regarded by him as a permissible case,[24] and so he permitted it —[25] Later, however, he came to regard it as a case that was to be forbidden;[26] and, as it was dear to him[27] he placed it first; while our Mishnah was allowed to remain in its original form.[28]

Our Rabbis learned: If he[29] had intercourse with her ,[30] he is guilty on account of both 'his brother's wife'[31] and 'his wife's sister';[32] so R. Jose. R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his brother's wife' on]y. But, surely. it was taught that R. Simeon said: He is guilty on account of 'his wife's sister' only! — This is no difficulty: There, it is a case where the surviving brother had married first[33] and the deceased had married afterwards;[34] here it is a case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother afterwards.[35] As to R. Simeon, in the case where the deceased had married first and the surviving brother married afterwards, let her, since the prohibition of wife's sister cannot take effect, be permitted even to contract the levirate marriage! — R. Ashi replied: The prohibition of wife's sister remains suspended, and as soon as the prohibition of brother's wife is removed[36] the prohibition of wife's sister comes into force; hence It cannot be treated as non-existent.[37]

Does, then, R. Jose hold the view that one prohibition may be imposed upon another? Surely, it was taught: A man who committed a transgression which involves two death penalties[38] is punished by the severer one. R. Jose said: He is to be dealt with In accordance with that prohibition which came into force first.[39] And it was taught: How is one to understand R. Jose's statement that sentence must be in accordance with the prohibition which came into force first? [If the woman was first] his mother-in-law[40] and then became also a married women, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] his mother-in-law; if she was first a married woman and then became his mother-in-law, he is to be sentenced for [an offence against] a married woman![41]

(1) And the same procedure would unlawfully be followed in the case of two widows of the same brother.

(2) What objection can be raised against it?

(3) Lit., 'thus also', the assumption would not have mattered.

(4) אשר לא יבנה Deut. XXV, 9.

(5) I.e., refused to marry his brother's widow, but participated in her halizah.

(6) Must never marry the other widow. The imperfect יבנה may be rendered as a past, present or future.

(7) The second brother who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. our Mishnah.

(8) I.e., his first wife.

(9) To the third surviving brother if the second also died without issue. The two widows are no longer rivals since the divorce has annulled the ma'amar, and they. being the widows of two different brothers, are now coming from two different houses.
(10) . That was given to her in respect of the levirate bond as well as of the ma'amar, v. infra 52b. Such a sister-in-law is forbidden under the prohibition of That doth not build up (v. supra and notes 3, 4 and 5)' since in her case the levirate bond also had been severed.
(11) V. note 6.
(12) And she is thus subject to the third brother as the widow of the first.
(13) The ma'amar by which he bound her he has himself annulled.
(14) The widow.
(15) The surviving brother.
(16) Prior to his wife's death and after the death of her husband, however short that period may have been, she was forbidden to him as his wife's sister.
(17) The third Mishnah, on fol. 30a supra, where there were three brothers involved, two of whom were married to two sisters and one to a stranger.
(18) The widow of the first brother.
(19) For though she had been forbidden to the second brother, who was married to her sister, she was permitted to the third and she remained in the family.
(20) I.e:, she has been forbidden to the second brother, after the death of the third brother who had married her, owing to the original prohibition which may have lasted one moment only. even after his wife (her sister) had died.
(21) Our Mishnah where only two brothers are involved.
(22) When her husband died there was not a single brother whom she was permitted to marry. What need, then, was there for our Mishnah?
(23) v. note 1.
(24) Since, there, she was not entirely forced out of the family.
(25) Hence he did not consider it necessary to enunciate It 10 a Mishnah.
(26) As, after all, in the case of the second brother, the levirate marriage was for a time forbidden to her.
(27) Owing to its novelty and its wider range.
(28) Lit. — 'did not move from its place'. Though in the presence of the other Mishnah it is indeed superfluous.
(29) The levir.
(30) The widow (v. our Mishnah), while his wife was still alive.
(31) Since she is exempt from the levirate marriage she is forbidden to the levir as any widow of a brother who has issue.
(32) So that if the offence was committed unwittingly he is liable to bring two sin.offerings.
(33) One of the sisters; and thus the prohibition of 'wife's sister' came into force first.
(34) The other sister. The added prohibition of 'brother's wife' could not take effect where one prohibition was already in force.
(35) Cf. previous two notes mutatis mutandis.
(36) פקע, lit., 'to split', hence removed'.
(37) Lit., 'it is not removed'. The levirate marriage is consequently forbidden.
(38) Intercourse, for instance, with a mother-in.law (which is punishable by burning) who was at the time a married woman (the penalty for which Is strangulation).
(39) Tosef. Sanh. XII, Sanh. 81a.
(40) Having been a widow or divorcee at the time of his marriage.
(41) Though the penalty in this case (strangulation) is lighter than that for an offence against a mother-in-law (burning). This proves that one prohibition may not be imposed upon another. Had it been otherwise, the severer penalty should have been inflicted though the prohibition which had caused it came into force later.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 32b

— R. Abbahu replied: R. Jose admits[1] where the latter prohibition is of a wider range.[2]

This is satisfactory in the case where the surviving brother had married[3] first and the deceased had married[4] afterwards, since the prohibition. having been extended in the case of the brothers, had also been extended in his own case.[5] What extension of the prohibition is there, however, where the deceased had married[3] first[6] and the surviving brother had married[4] afterwards?[7] And were you to reply: Because thereby[8] he is forbidden to marry all the sisters,[9] [it may be retorted that] such is only a comprehensive prohibition![10]

The fact is, said Raba, he is deemed[11] to have committed two offences,[12] but is liable for one only.[13]

Similarly when Rabin came[14] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The offender is deemed[11] to have committed two offences, but he is only liable for one. What practical difference does thisl[5] make?- That he must be buried among confirmed sinners.[15]

This[16] is a question on which opinions differ. For It was stated: A common man[17] who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, is. R. Hiyya said, liable for two offences.’ Bar Kappara said: He is only liable for one.[18] R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath. ‘By the Temple’,[19] [he exclaimed]. ‘so have l heard from Rabbi:[20] two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi:[20] one’! R. Hiyya began to argue the point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites,] and when it was permitted in the [Sanctuary], it was permitted to the priests, hence it was permitted to the priests only, but not to common men. Here, therefore, is involved the offence of Temple service by a common man, and that of the desecration of the Sabbath. Bar Kappara began to argue his point thus: Work on the Sabbath was forbidden to all [Israelites]. but when it was permitted in the Sanctuary, it was permitted [to all], hence only the offence of Temple service by a common man is here involved.

A priest having a blemish who performed [some Temple] services[21] while unclean is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty of one offence only. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. thus have I heard from Rabbi: two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple, thus have I heard from Rabbi: one’! R. Hiyya began to reason: [Temple service during one's] uncleanness was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary,[22] it was permitted to priests who had no blemish — Hence it must have been permitted only to priests who had no blemish, but not to those who had. Consequently. both the offence of service being done by one with a blemish and that of service during one's uncleanness are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason thus: [Temple service during] uncleanness was forbidden to all. When it was permitted at the Sanctuary.[23] was [universally] permitted.[24] Consequently. only one offence, that of service by one who had a blemish, is involved.

A common man who ate melikah[25] is. R. Hiyya said, guilty of two offences. Bar Kappara said: He is guilty only of one. R. Hiyya jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. so l heard from Rabbi: two’! Bar Kappara jumped up and took an oath, ‘By the Temple. so I heard from Rabbi: one’! R. Hiyya began to reason thus: Nebelah[26] was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary[27] it was permitted in the case of the priests. Hence it must be permitted to priests only and not to common men. Consequently. both the offence of consumption[28] by a common man, and that of melikah are here involved. Bar Kappara began to reason: Nebelah[26] was forbidden to all; and when it was permitted in the Sanctuary[27] it was [universally] permitted — Consequently. only the offence due to consumption[28] by a common man is here involved.

(1) That one prohibition may be imposed upon another.

(2) 1I’אסור מוסיף’ lit., ‘a prohibition which adds’, i.e., one which causes an object (or a person) to be forbidden to others to whom it was not previously forbidden. Hence he admits the imposition of the prohibition of ‘brother's wife’ upon that of ‘wife's sister’, even where the latter prohibition was already in force, because the former, unlike the latter, is applicable not only to him alone but to the other brothers also. In the case, however, of a married woman who became his mother-in-law where the first prohibition was of a wider range (the woman being forbidden to all men except her husband) and the later one (forbidden to him only) of a restricted range, the second prohibition cannot be imposed upon the first. The reason why in the case of a mother-in-law who became a — married woman the sentence is to be that for an offence against a mother-in-law is not because the latter (which is of a wider range) cannot be imposed upon the former, but because wherever two penalties are to be inflicted the severer one (burning) supersedes the lighter one (strangulation).

(3) One of the sisters.

(4) The other sister.

(5) V. supra p. 202, n. 9.

(6) Bringing Into force the prohibition of brother's wife which is applicable to all brothers.

(7) Adding the prohibition of wife's sister which, being applicable to himself only, is of a more restricted range, and cannot consequently be imposed on that of brother's wife, which preceded it.

(8) By marrying the other sister.

(9) While before this marriage the widow only was forbidden.

(10) איסור כולל lit., ‘a prohibition which includes’. The additional prohibition includes the widow in the same manner only as it does the other sisters but, unlike an issur mosif (the prohibition of the wider range, v. supra p. 202, n. 9), it does not place any additional restriction as far as the widow herself is concerned upon any other men.

(11) Lit., ‘I bring upon him’.

(12) I.e., in this sense only is R. Jose's statement, that he is guilty of two offences (supra 32a), to be understood.

(13) Because R. Jose. in fact, does not admit the imposition of one prohibition upon another.

(14) From Palestine to Babylon. (13) The fact that he is theoretically guilty of two offences.

(15) The Beth din had at its disposal two burial places, and offenders who were executed or died were buried in the one or the other according to the degree of their respective offences. (V. Sanh. 46a). The reference here will consequently be to an intentional transgression.

What is the point at issue between them?[1] -R. Jose's view[2] with regard to a comprehensive prohibition.[3] R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of a comprehensive prohibition R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,[4] while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.[5] But what comprehensive prohibition. is here involved? In the case of a common man[6] this[7] may well be understood, since at first[8] he was permitted to do ordinary work though forbidden to perform the Temple service, and when Sabbath came in, as he was now forbidden to do any other work,[9] so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.[10] [Similarly with a priest] who had a blemish,[11] since he was at first[12] permitted to eat [of sacrificial meat] though forbidden to perform the Temple service, now that he became defiled, as he was forbidden to eat of sacrificial meat[13] so he was also forbidden to perform the Temple service.[14] Mehkah. however, is only an illustration[15] of prohibitions that set in simultaneously[16] but not of a comprehensive prohibition![17] -Rather, the point at issue between them[18] is that of simultaneous prohibitions’ and R. Jose's view[19] regarding them. R. Hiyya is of the opinion that in the case of simultaneous prohibitions R. Jose deems the transgressor guilty of two offences,[20] while Bar Kappara is of the opinion that he deems him guilty of one offence only.[21] But how are here simultaneous prohibitions possible?[22] — In the case of a common man who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath, when, for instance, he grew two hairs[23] on the Sabbath, so that the prohibitions of Temple service by a common man and of work on the Sabbath have simultaneously arisen.[24] [In the case of a priest] who had a blemish, also, when, for instance, he grew two hairs,[23] while he was unclean, so that [his disability as] a man with a blemish and his uncleanness[25] have simultaneously arisen.[26] Or else, if a man cut his finger with an unclean knife.[27]

Now according to [the statement of] R. Hiyya it is quite possible to explain[28] that he[29] was taught[30] in accordance with the view of R. Jose, and that Bar Kappara was taught in accordance with the view of R. Simeon.[31] According to [the statement of] Bar Kappara, however,[32] did R. Hiyya swear falsely?[33] -Rather, the question at issue between them[34] is that of simultaneous prohibitions, and the view of R. Simeon[35] on the subject.

One can well understand why R. Hiyya took an oath. He did it in order to weaken the force[36] of R. Simeon s view.[37] What need, however, was there for Bar Kappara to take an oath? — This is a difficulty.

Now according to [the statement of] Bar Kappara. it is possible to explain[38] that when Rabbi taught him he was enunciating the opinion of R. Simeon,[39] and that when he taught R. Hiyya he was enunciating the opinion of R. Jose.[40] According to [the statement] of R. Hiyya. however,[41] did Bar Kappara[42] tell a lie?[43] R. Hiyya can answer you:[44] When Rabbi taught him, he taught him two instances[45] only where the transgressor is exempt[46]

(1) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(2) Who maintains supra that in certain circumstances a prohibition may be imposed upon a prohibition which is already in force.

(3) איסור כולל Cf. supra p. 203. n. 8.

(4) Nebelah and melikah. V. supra. no. 3 and 4.

(5) And R. Jose's statement supra that the transgressor is guilty of two offences is, according to Bar Kappara, applicable only where the surviving brother had married one of the sisters before the deceased had married the other. (V. supra p. 203. nn.1ff and relevant text). R. Simeon's statement, (supra 32a) that ‘he is guilty on account of brother's wife only’, which has been interpreted as referring to the case where the deceased had married prior to the surviving brother, is according to Bar Kappara, to be deleted from the Baraitha.

(6) Who performed some Temple service on the Sabbath.

(7) That a comprehensive prohibition is involved.

(8) Before the Sabbath.

(9) Owing to Sabbath.

(10) The prohibition being ‘comprehensive’ in that it included both ordinary work and Temple service. It is not a ‘prohibition of a wider range’ since the prohibition of Temple service itself was in no way extended.

(11) Cf. supra, n. 2.

(12) Prior to his defilement.

(13) Owing to his uncleanness.

(14) The prohibition comprehending the Temple service as well as the consumption of sacrificial meat. Cf. supra. n’ 5’

(15) Lit., ‘it is found’.

(16) בת אחת ‘at once’, ‘at the same moment’. Before the head of the fowl was pinched off there was only the prohibition of nebelah (v. Glos.) which included also priests. The two prohibitions of nebelah and melikah as far as common men are concerned had set in simultaneously at the moment of the pinching off of the fowl's head.

(17) Since both have been simultaneous. How then could the dispute on melikah be dependent on the principle of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’?

(18) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(19) V. supra p. 205. n. 8.

(20) R. Jose's statement (supra 32a). that the transgressor is guilty of the offences of (a) brother's wife and (b) wife's sister, is taken to refer to the case where the two brothers appointed an agent to betroth for them the two sisters, who in turn appointed an agent to act on their behalf. At the moment the agents carried out their mission both prohibitions had set in.

(21) Cf. supra p. 205, n. 11.

(22) As has been shewn, the instances mentioned, with the exception of melikah, are ‘comprehensive prohibitions!’

(23) The marks of puberty.

(24) In this particular case, since prior to the manifestation of the marks of puberty he was considered a minor, and not subject to legal penalties.

(25) l.e., his liability to penalties for performing Temple service under such conditions.

(26) Cf. note 4, mutatis mutandis.

(27) Which act caused both the blemish and the uncleanness to set In at the very same Instant.

(28) To reconcile the contradictory statements made by R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara both in the name of Rabbi.

(29) R. Hiyya.

(30) By Rabbi. Lit., ‘when he taught him (it was)’.

(31) And that Bar Kappara may have misunderstood Rabbi to give him the opinion of R. Jose.

(32) Who asserts that Rabbi recognizes one offence only according to R. Jose.

(33) If R. Jose allows the lighter punishment, how much more so R. Simeon. If R. Hiyya. then, made the statement that Rabbi taught him that a double offence had been committed he could not have spoken the truth since according to Bar Kappara no authority ever held such a view.

(34) R. Hiyya and Bar Kappara.

(35) R. Hiyya maintains that R. Simeon subjected the transgression to one offence only in the case of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’; but that in a ‘simultaneous prohibition’ he admits, like R. Jose, a double offence. Bar Kappara, on the other hand, maintains that R. Simeon disagrees with R. Jose even in regard to simultaneous prohibitions, always admitting one offence only.

(36) By his oath he affirmed that R. Simeon is in favour of the lighter course only in the case of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’ but not in that of ‘simultaneous prohibitions’.

(37) Which is known to favour the lighter penalty.

(38) I.e., to reconcile the contradictory statements. v. supra, p. 207. n. 8.

(39) Favouring the lighter penalty.

(40) Who imposes the heavier penalty; but R. Hiyya mistook him to be reporting R. Simeon and thus the discrepancy arose.

(41) Who submitted that the heavier penalty was imposed even by R. Simeon, much more so by R. Jose.

(42) Who submitted that Rabbi taught him that the lighter penalty only was to be imposed.

(43) He could not have spoken the truth if R. Hiyya's report was at all correct. v. note 6.

(44) Bar Kappara did not tell a lie.

(45) The first two-that of a non-priest who performed the Temple service on the Sabbath and that of a priest who had a blemish and performed the Temple service while he was unclean.

(46) From one of the penalties.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 33b

. and [thereby he, in fact.] taught him the law of comprehensive prohibition[1] in accordance with the view of R. Simeon. Bar Kappara. however, considered the case of a common man who ate melikah and, as it seemed to be similar to the others, he treated it like the others.[2] When, later, he examined it[3] and found it to be possible only as a case of simultaneity of prohibitions. he imagined that as this one[3] is a case of simultaneity so are also the others cases of simultaneity;[4] and as the others are cases where the transgressor is exempt[5] so [he assumed] is this also one in which the transgressor is exempt.[5]

An objection was raised: If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath, or if a priest having a blemish performed Temple service while he was levitically unclean, the offences of service by a common man and the desecration of the Sabbath or those of service by a man with a blemish and levitical uncleanness are here respectively involved. These are the words of R. Jose. R. Simeon who said: Only the offence of service by a common man or that of service by a man with a blemish respectively is here involved.[6] [The case of] melikah, however, is here omitted.[7] Now, on account of whom was it omitted?[8] If it be suggested. on account of R. Jose[9] [it may be retorted]. if[10] R. Jose subjects one to two penalties where the prohibition is comprehensive, how much more so[11] when it is simultaneous. Consequently It must have been[12] on account of R. Simeon[13] who thus grants exemption only where the prohibition is comprehensive[14] but imposes both penalties when the prohibitions are simultaneous —[15] This, then, is a refutation against Bar Kappara![16] This is indeed a refutation.

'If a common man performed some Temple service on the Sabbath'. Of what nature? If slaughtering, slaughtering is permitted by a common man.[17] If reception[18] or carriage.[19] this involves only a mere movement.[20] If burning,[21] surely R. Jose said, 'The prohibition of kindling a fire [on the Sabbath][22] was mentioned separately[23] in order to [indicate that its transgression is] a prohibition only'![24] — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: The slaughtering of the bullock of the High Priest ,[25] and in accordance with the view of him who stated that the slaughtering of the bullock of the High priest on the Day of Atonement by a common man Is Invalid.[26] If so, what reason is there for mentioning a common man? EVen a common priest would have been equally forbidden![27] -What was meant was one who is a common man as far as It Is concerned.[28]

R. Ashi demurred: Was any mention made of sin-offerings or of negative precepts?[29] Surely, only forbidden acts were spoken of![30] — The point at issue is whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.[31]

MISHNAH. IF TWO MEN BETROTHED TWO WOMEN, AND AS THESE WERE ENTERING INTO THE BRIDAL CHAMBER, THEY EXCHANGED THE ONE FOR THE OTHER, BEHOLD, THEY[32] ARE GUILTY OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A MARRIED WOMAN. IF THEY[32] WERE BROTHERS THEY ARE GUILTY ALSO OF AN OFFENCE AGAINST A BROTHER'S WIFE. IF [THE BETROTHED WOMEN] WERE SISTERS, THEY[33] ARE GUILTY ALSO ON ACCOUNT OF THE PROHIBITION, [AND THOU SHALT NOT TAKE] A WOMAN TO HER SIster.[34] IF THESE[35] WERE MENSTRUANTS [THEY[33] ARE GUILTY ALSO] ON ACCOUNT OF [THE LAW OF THE] MENSTRUANT.[36]

THEY[35] MUST BE KEPT APART[37] FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT.[38] IF THEY[35] WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN, THEY MAY BE RESTORED[39] AT ONCE. IF THEY[35] WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED FROM THE PRIESTHOOD.[40]

GEMARA. THEY EXCHANGED?[41] Are we discussing wicked men![42] Furthermore, [there is the difficulty] of the statement made by[43] R. Hiyya. that[44] sixteen sin-offerings[45] are here [involved]. Is any sacrifice brought[46] where the act[47] was wilful?[48] Rab Judah replied: Read THEY WERE EXCHANGED.[49] This[50] may also be proved by logical reasoning. For in the latter clause it was stated, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE. Now, if the act[47] had been willful, would [this[51] have been] permitted! — This is no difficulty. The seduction of a minor is deemed to be an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted to an Israelite.[42] But, then, what of that which is stated, that THEY MUST BE KEPT

APART FOR THREE MONTHS, SINCE IT IS POSSIBLE THAT THEY ARE PREGNANT, implying that if they were not pregnant they would be permitted. Now if the act[52] had been wilful would she be permitted! Consequently[53] the reading must have been[54] THEY WERE EXCHANGED.[55] This may be taken as proved.

(1) Though when the prohibitions in these cases should happen to be simultaneous, the double penalty would undoubtedly be imposed.

(2) Lit., ‘mixed it up with them’; as those are cases where the transgressor is exempt from one of the penalties, so’ he thought. was that of melikah.

(3) Melikah.

(4) I.e., the same law is applicable to them whether the case is that of a comprehensive prohibition’ or, like melikah, one of ‘simultaneous prohibitions’.

(5) From one of the penalties.

(6) Tosef. Yeb. V.

(7) Implying that there is no difference of opinion regarding the case where a common man ate of melikah.

(8) I.e., who agrees with whom in this case that it should be excluded from the dispute.

(9) I.e., that R. Jose agrees in the case of melikah with R. Simeon.

(10) Lit., ‘now’.

(11) Lit., ‘is it required (to be stated)’?

(12) Lit., ‘but (is it) not’.

(13) Who, despite his opinion that in the two cases mentioned only one penalty is involved, agrees with R. Jose that in melikah two penalties are involved.

(14) As in the two cases mentioned.

(15) As in melikah, v. supra.

(16) Who maintained supra that even in simultaneous prohibitions R. Simeon exempts from one of the penalties.

(17) Hence no prohibition of ‘service by a common man’ is here involved.

(18) Of the sacrificial blood in a basin for sprinkling purposes.

(19) Bringing the blood near the altar.

(20) טלטול ‘moving an object from place to place’; and such movement on the Sabbath is no punishable offence.

(21) Of the sacrifices.

(22) In Ex. XXXV, 3.

(23) Lit., ‘went out’.

(24) Shab. 702, Sanh. 35b, 62a, supra 6b. A ‘prohibition’, i.e., a negative commandment that does not involve any of the death penalties of stoning or of kareth.

(25) On the Day of Atonement (v. Lev. XVI, 3ff) which happened to fall on a Sabbath.

(26) V. Yoma 42a. As it is invalid it is also forbidden on the Sabbath under the death penalties of stoning or kareth which are incurred by the performance of certain kinds of manual labour on the Sabbath.

(27) Lit., ‘also’, since the opinion that disqualifies the common man for this service disqualifies also the common priest.

(28) Lit., ‘who is a stranger to it , i.e., the particular service, including here even a common priest.

(29) Which entail flagellation.

(30) Since no actual penalty. either of a sin offering or flagellation, is involved, what matters it whether the two offences are regarded as one or as two? V. next note.

(31) V. supra p. 204, n. 1. [Aliter: Since no actual penalty is involved the reference might indeed be to ‘burning’, the practical point at issue being whether he is to be buried among confirmed sinners.]

(32) The men if they had intercourse with the women.

(33) The men if they had intercourse with the women.

(34) Lev. XVIII, 18.

(35) The women.

(36) Lev. XVIII, 19.

(37) Away from their husbands.

(38) Children from such a union are bastards and precaution must be taken that they are not allowed to pass as legitimate children.

(39) To their husbands.
(40) So Rashal. Cur. edd. ‘terumah’.
(41) החליפו Hif., 3rd plural.
(42) Who had deliberately exchanged their wives.
(43) Lit., ‘that which he taught’.
(44) Lit., ‘behold’.
(45) Four offerings, (one for each transgression enumerated) by each of the four persons mentioned.
(46) Lit., ‘is there?’
(47) In this case the exchange.
(48) V. supra notes 9 and 10. For wilful transgression other penalties are prescribed!
(49) הוחלפן (B.H. החלפו), Hof., i.e., accidentally.
(50) That the exchange was not a wilful act.
(51) The immediate restoration of the minors to their husbands. (20) Her husband. V. Keth. 51b.
(52) In this case the exchange.
(53) Lit., ‘but not’.
(54) Lit., ‘infer from this’.
(55) v. supra p. 211, n. 17.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 34a

And who is this Tanna[1] that admits the force[2] of a ‘comprehensive prohibition’, a ‘prohibition of a wider range’ and ‘simultaneous prohibitions’?[3] -Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: It is R. Meir; for we learnt:[4] A man may sometimes consume one piece of food[5] and incur thereby the penalty of four sin-offerings and one guilt.offering. [If. e.g., a man levitically] unclean ate suet[6] that remained over from holy sacrifices,[7] on the Day of Atonement[8] R. Meir said: If this happened on[9] the Sabbath and [the consumer] carried out [the suet] in his mouth, liability is incurred [for this act[10] also].[11] They said to him: This[10] is an offence of a different character.[12]

Whose view, however, IS R. Meir[13] following? If he follows R. Joshua.[14] surely the latter had said that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment[15] is exonerated![16] — Rather he follows the view of R. Eliezer.[17] If you prefer I might say: He may. in fact, follow the view of R. Joshua, for R. Joshua's statement, that he who made a mistake in respect of a commandment is exonerated, may only be applicable to the case of the children,[18] where one is pressed for time.[19] but not in such a case as this,[20] where time is not pressing.[21]

What about terumah,[22] where one is not pressed for time, and he[23] nevertheless exonerates! For we learnt: In the case of a priest who was In the habit of eating terumah and it then transpired that he was the son of a divorced woman or of a haluzah,[22] R. Eliezer imposes payment of the principal and of a fifth,[24] and R. Joshua exonerates![25] — Surely, in relation to this it was stated that R. Bibi b. Abaye said: We are here speaking of terumah[26] on the Eve of Passover when time is pressing.[27] If you prefer I might say: [Our Mishnah speaks] of simultaneous prohibitions, and may represent even the View of R. Simeon.[28]

All these,[29] it may well be conceded, may occur [simultaneously] where [the brothers] appointed an agent[30] and [the sisters also] appointed an agent[31] and one agent met the other;[32] but how could such [simultaneity] occur with menstruation?[33] - R. Amram in the name of Rab replied: When the women's menstrual discharge continued from [the men's] thirteenth, until after their thirteenth [birthday], when these become subject to legal punishments; and from their own twelfth, until after their twelfth [birthday], when they themselves become subject to punishments.[34]

THEY MUST BE KEPT APART. Surely, no woman conceives from the first contact.[35] R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abuha: Where contact was repeated. Why, then, did R.

Hiyya state, ‘Behold sixteen offerings are here involved’,[36] when, in fact,[37] there should be thirty-two?[38] And according to your line of reasoning, following the opinion of R. Eliezer who deems they are guilty for every sexual effort, are there not more?[39] But [your own answer would be] that he only takes into consideration the first effort. Well, here also, only the first contact is taken into consideration.

Said Raba to R. Nahman:

(1) In our Mishnah.

(2) Lit., ‘to whom there is’.

(3) Wherever they can all be applied to the same person. If, e.g., A the brother of B betrothed C the sister of D, C is forbidden to B as ‘his brother's wife’ and as ‘a married woman’, both prohibitions having come into force simultaneously. If B subsequently betrothed D, her sister C becomes forbidden to him, by the comprehensive prohibition of ‘his wife's sister’, (comprehending all the sisters of D inclusive of C). When C becomes a menstruant she is forbidden to B as a menstruant also, this last being a prohibition of a wider range extending as it does the prohibition of the woman to A also.

(4) Cur. edd., ‘it was taught’.

(5) Lit., ‘there is one eating’.

(6) Forbidden fat.

(7) Nothar, v. Glos.

(8) The four sin-offerings are due for the eating of (a) holy food while the man is levitically unclean, (b) forbidden fat, (c) nothar and (d) food on the Day of Atonement; while the guilt-offering (asham me'iloth) is incurred for the benefit the consumer (even though he were a priest) had from holy things which were to be burnt on the altar.

(9) Lit., ‘it was’.

(10) Carrying on the Sabbath.

(11) Thus it is shewn that R. Meir recognizes the validity of the three kinds of prohibition: When the animal was consecrated, the prohibition of having any benefit from any part of it has been added to that of eating its suet (wider range). and when a piece of the suet became nothar (since it is thereby forbidden to be offered up on the altar, which is an added restriction) the prohibition of nothar has also been imposed in respect of its consumption by the priests (again wider range). When the priest becomes unclean and is consequently forbidden to consume any holy meat he is also forbidden to consume the nothar (comprehensive), and with the advent of the Day of Atonement the prohibition of the consumption of food generally on that day falls also on the nothar (again comprehensive). Finally, at the moment Sabbath sets in two more prohibitions are imposed (simultaneous) that of carrying on the Sabbath and that of eating on the Day of Atonement (Rashi) or those of carrying on the Sabbath and on the Day of Atonement (Tosaf., s.v. והוצתאו a.I.).

(12) Lit., ‘it is not from the (same) designation’. Shab. 102a, Shebu. 24b, Ker. 13b.

(13) Who, as has been shown, is represented by the Tanna of our Mishnah who admits the imposition of one prohibition upon another even where the performance of a commandment (e.g.. marriage) was intended.

(14) Who is at variance on a similar question with R. Eliezer (Shab. 1370). Both R. Joshua and R. Eliezer were R. Meir's teachers.

(15) I.e., if his intention was to fulfil a precept and, through an error, his act resulted in a transgression. Cf. the case in our Mishnah and v. supra n. 1 —

(16) While our Mishnah declares the men guilty!

(17) v. supra. n. 2.

(18) One of whom had to be circumcised on the Sabbath and by mistake another child was circumcised who was born a day later. Only circumcision which takes place on the eighth day of birth is permitted on the Sabbath. Any other is forbidden like all manual labour.

(19) One is anxious to perform the commandment at its proper time, and one's anxiety that the day shall not pass without its performance may easily result In an error.

(20) Marriage. spoken of in our Mishnah.

(21) One may contract marriage during any time of his life.

(22) V. Glos.

(23) R. Joshua.

(24) The disqualified priest. having consumed terumah which was forbidden to him, must pay compensation as any layman, as prescribed in Lev. V, 16.

(25) Ter. VIII, 1; Pes. 72b, Mak. 11b.

(26) Containing 'leaven' or any other hamez.

(27) After a certain hour on that day all hamez, would have to be burnt.

(28) Who agrees with R. Meir that simultaneous prohibitions do rank as equal in force, and both may be imposed.

(29) Prohibitions, enumerated in our Mishnah.

(30) To betroth the women on their behalf.

(31) To accept on their behalf the tokens of betrothal.

(32) So that all prohibitions took effect at the very same moment.

(33) Which would naturally occur either before, and thus prevent the other three prohibitions from coming into force; or after, and thus be prevented itself from coming Into force.

(34) A male becomes legally liable to punishments on the termination of his thirteenth, and a female on that of her twelfth year of age. If the respective agents of the two parties who were of the same age to a day. met sometime prior to the conclusion of the last day of the year (twelfth of the females and thirteenth of the males), and arranged for the betrothals to take effect on the following day when both parties become 'of age' (as otherwise the betrothals would not be valid) the betrothals and the prohibitions simultaneously come into force.

(35) What, then, is the need for the precaution?

(36) Supra 33b.

(37) Since our Mishnah represents the view of R. Eliezer (or Eleazar).

(38) Sixteen for each contact. V. infra 92a, Ker. 15a.

(39) Sin-offerings involved.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 34b

Surely Tamar[1] conceived from a first contact! The other answered him: Tamar exercised friction with her finger;[2] for R. Isaac said: All women of the house of Rabbi who exercise friction[3] are designated Tamar. And why are they designated Tamar? — Because Tamar exercised friction with her finger. But were there not Er and Onan?[4] — Er and Onan indulged in unnatural intercourse.

An objection was raised: During all the twenty-four months[5] one may thresh within and winnow without;[6] these are the words of R. Eliezer. The others said to him: Such actions are only like the practice of Er and Onan![7] -Like the practice of Er and Onan, and yet not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan: 'Like the practice of Er and Onan', for it is written in Scripture, And it came to pass, when he went in unto his brother's wife, that he spilt it on the ground;[8] and 'not [exactly] like the practice of Er and Onan', for whereas there it was an unnatural act, here it is done in the natural way.

[The source for] Onan's [guilt] may well be traced, for it is written in Scripture, That he spilt it on the ground;[8] whence however, [that of] Er?-R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And He slew him also,[9] he also died of the same death.[10]

[The reason for] Onan's [action] may well be understood, because he knew That the seed would not be his;[8] but why did Er act in such a manner? — In order that she might not conceive and thus lose some of her beauty.

Our Rabbis taught [The woman also] with whom [a man shall lie],[11] excludes a bride;[12] so R. Judah. But the Sages say: This excludes unnatural intercourse.

Said Hon son of R. Nahman to R. Nahman: Does this imply that R. Judah is of the opinion that the Torah had consideration for the bride's make-up?[13] — The other replied: Because no woman conceives from her first contact —[14] On what principle do they differ? — The Rabbis are of opinion that ‘carnally’[11] excludes the first stage of contact, and ‘with whom’[11] excludes unnatural intercourse; but R. Judah is of the opinion that the exclusion of unnatural intercourse and the first stage of contact may be derived from ‘carnally’.[11] while ‘with whom’[11] excludes a bride.

When Rabin came[15] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A woman who waited ten years after [separation from] her husband, and then remarried, would bear children no more. Said R. Nahman: This was stated only in respect of one who had no Intention of remarrying: if, however, one's intention was to marry again she may conceive.

Raba said to R. Hisda's daughter:[16] The Rabbis are talking about you. She answered him: I had my mind on you.

A woman once appeared before R. Joseph, and said to him: Master, I remained unmarried after [the death of] my husband for ten years and now I gave birth to a child — He said to her: My daughter, do not discredit the words of the Sages. She thereupon confessed, ‘l had intercourse with a heathen’.[17]

Samuel said: All these women,[18] with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were minors, must wait three months.[19] An Israelitish minor, however, must wait three months. But how [was she separated]?[20] If by a declaration of refusal,[21] surely. Samuel said that she[22] need not wait![23] And if by a letter of divorce, surely Samuel has already stated this once! For Samuel said: If she’ formally refused him[21] she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months![24] -[It[25] was] rather in respect of unlawful intercourse,

(1) V. Gen. XXXVIII, 15, 18, 24ff.

(2) Having thus destroyed her virginity she was capable of conception from a first contact.

(3) To destroy their virginity.

(4) Who were married to Tamar prior to the incident with Judah (v. Gen. XXXVIII, 6ff) and her virginity would presumably have been destroyed then.

(5) After the birth of a child, i.e., during the period in which the mother is expected to breast-feed her child.

(6) Euphemism. This would prevent possible conception which might deprive the young child of the breast feeding of his mother.

(25) Samuel's statement.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 35a

the Rabbis having made the provision[1] in the case of a minor[2] as a precaution against one who is of age.[3] But is provision made in the case of a minor as a precaution against one who is of age? Surely we learnt, IF THEY WERE MINORS INCAPABLE OF BEARING CHILDREN THEY MAY BE RESTORED AT ONCE! — R. Giddal replied: This[4] was a special ruling.[5] Does this imply that such a case had actually occurred![6] — Rather [this is the meaning:] It[4] was like a special ruling, since the exchange of brides is an unusual occurrence.[7]

[Others adopt] a different reading: Samuel said: All these women,[8] with the exception of a proselyte and an emancipated slave who were of age. must wait three months.[9] An Israelitish minor, however, need not wait three months. But how [was she separated]? If by a declaration of refusal, Surely Samuel has already stated this one! And if by a letter of divorce, Samuel surely stated that she' must wait! For Samuel said: If she exercise her right of refusal against him, she need not wait three months; if he gave her a letter of divorce she must wait three months! [It was] rather in respect of harlotry. and harlotry with a minor[8] an unusual occurrence.[7]

Let, however, a preventive measure[10] be made in respect of a proselyte and an emancipated slave with whom harlotry is not unusual! — He holds the same view as R. Jose. For it was taught: Proselytes,[11] captivesl or slaves[11] who were redeemed, or embraced the Jewish faith or were emancipated, must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage.[12] Rabbah said: What is R. Jose's reason? He is of the opinion that a woman who plays the harlot makes use of an absorbent in order to prevent conception.[12]

Said Abaye to him: This[13] is intelligible in the case of a proselyte; as her intention is to embrace the Jewish faith she is careful[14] in order to know the distinction between the seed that was sown in holiness and the seed that was sown in unholiness. It[13] is also [intelligible In the case of] a captive and a slave; since on hearing from their masters[15] they exercise care.[16] How is this[13] to be applied. however, in the case of one who is liberated through the loss of a tooth or an eye?[17] And were you to suggest that wherever something unexpected happens[18] R. Jose admits,[19] surely it was taught:[20] A woman who had been outraged or seduced must wait three months; so R. Judah. R. Jose permits immediate betrothal and marriage![21] — Rather, said Abaye,[22] a woman playing the harlot turns over In order to prevent conception.[23] And the other?[24] -There is the apprehension that she might not have turned over properly.[25]

IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN etc. Only[26] priestly women but not an Israelitish woman?[27] -Read, 'If they were the wives of priests'.[28] Only' 'priests' wives,'[29] but not Israelites' wives?[30] Surely R. Amram said, 'The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth who threw light on the subject[31] from our Mishnah:[32] An Israelite's wife[33] who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood.[34] — Raba replied: It is this that was meant:[35] IF THEY WERE PRIESTLY WOMEN[36] married to Israelites THEY ARE DISQUALIFIED from eating terumah at their parents' home.[37] [

CHAPTER IV

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE[1] WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY FOUND TO BE PREGNANT, AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE IS, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE,[2] PERMITTED TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES,[3] AND HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT FOR THE PRIESTHOOD;[4] BUT WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE,[5] THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST.

IF A LEVIR MARRIED HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE[1] WHO IS FOUND TO HAVE BEEN PREGNANT,[6] AND SHE GAVE BIRTH, HE, WHEREVER THE CHILD IS VIABLE, MUST[7] DIVORCE HER. AND BOTH ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF BRINGING AN OFFERING;[8] BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD OF THE FIRST [HUSBAND] OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD OF THE SECOND [HUSBAND]. SHE MUST BE DIVORCED, AND

THE CHILD IS LEGITIMATE,[9] BUT THEY ARE UNDER THE OBLIGATION OF AN ASHAM TALUI.[10] GEMARA. It was stated: In the case of a levir who participated In halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, R. Johanan said, She need not perform the halizah with the brothers; and Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers. 'R. Johanan said, She need not perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah of a pregnant woman[11] is deemed to be proper halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is deemed to be proper marriage.[12] 'Resh Lakish said: She must perform halizah with the brothers', because the halizah with a pregnant woman is not deemed to be a proper halizah, nor is marital contact with a pregnant woman deemed to be a proper marriage. On what principle do they[13] differ? — If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text. And if you prefer I might say: On a logical point. 'If you wish I might say: In the interpretation of a Scriptural text';[14] R. Johanan is of the opinion that the All Merciful said, And have no child,[15] and this man[16] surely has none; while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that And have no [en lo] child[17] implies. 'Hold an inquiry[18] concerning him'.[19] 'And If you prefer I might say: On a logical point'; R. Johanan argues: Had Elijah[20] appeared and announced that the woman would miscarry. would she not have been subject to halizah or levirate marriage?[21] Now also[22] the fact is established retrospectively. And Resh Lakish maintains that a fact cannot be said to have been established retrospectively.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view: Since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah he, consequently, renders her unfit. According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not proper halizah, why does he render her unfit to marry a priest? — The other answered him: It[23] is only Rabbinical and it is a mere restriction.[24]

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: WHEREVER THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE THE LEVIR IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES, AND HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a proper halizah it was justly stated as a restriction,[25] that HE RENDERS HER UNFIT TO MARRY A PRIEST but not that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers';[26] according to you, however,[27] it should have been stated that 'she requires no halizah from the brothers'![28] — The other replied: It should have been indeed;[29] only because in the first clause it was stated, HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT[30] it was also[31] stated in the latter clause, HE RENDERS HER UNFIT.[32]

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE, HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a proper halizah and marital contact[33] with a pregnant woman is a proper marriage. it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER.[34] According to you, however, who maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and the marital contact[35] with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it should have been stated, 'He must repeat contact and only then he may retain her'! — The meaning of HE MAY RETAIN HER is that he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, but not otherwise.[36]

Others say: Resh Lakish raised an objection against R. Johanan: IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE HE MAY RETAIN HER. This is quite correct according to my view; since I maintain that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not a valid halizah and marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, it was rightly stated HE MAY RETAIN HER, [meaning that] he must repeat contact and then HE MAY RETAIN HER, since otherwise this[37] would not have been permitted.[38] According to you,[39] however, it should have been stated, 'If he wishes he may divorce her and if he prefers he may continue to live with her'! — It should have been indeed;[40] only because in the earlier clause it was stated HE MUST DIVORCE HER, it was also stated in the latter clause HE MAY RETAIN HER.

An objection was raised: ‘Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, since it is possible that the child would be viable’. On the contrary! If the child were viable her rival would be exempt![41] — But read: Since it is possible that the child would not be viable.[42] Now, if it could be imagined that marital contact with a pregnant woman is to be regarded as a valid marriage, why may not her rival be married? She should be exempted through the marital contact of her associate! — Abaye replied: Both[43] agree that by marital contact she does not exempt [her rival]; they differ only on the question of halizah. R. Johanan is of the opinion that the halizah of a pregnant woman is a valid halizah, though marital contact with a pregnant woman is not a valid marriage, while Resh Lakish is of the opinion that marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, nor is halizah with a pregnant woman a valid halizah. Said Raba: Whatever is your opinion? If marital contact with a pregnant woman is a valid marriage. the halizah of a pregnant woman should be a valid halizah; or if marital contact with a pregnant woman is no valid marriage, the halizah of a pregnant woman also should be no proper halizah; for we have an established rule

(1) Whose husband died without issue.

(2) Although the child died soon after.

(3) Since a viable child was born the halizah is rendered void.

(4) She, unlike any other haluzah, may marry a priest. V. n. 3 supra.

(5) I.e., if it was of a premature birth.

(6) Prior to the levirate marriage.

(7) Since the levirate marriage should not take place where the deceased brother has had any issue.

(8) A sin-offering for their unwitting transgression in contracting a forbidden marriage (one's brother's wife) where the precept of the levirate marriage did not apply. V. supra n. 7.

(9) Since in either case he has been born from a lawful union: If he is a nine-months child he is the legitimate offspring of the deceased brother; and if he is a seven-months child of the surviving brother, the deceased had died without issue and the marriage between the widow and the surviving brother was accordingly lawful.

(10) The offering prescribed for doubtful trespass. V. Lev. V, 17ff and cf. Ker. 17b.

(11) Who miscarried.

(12) The miscarriage proved that the previous halizah or marriage were lawful.

(13) R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

(14) V.Bah a.l. Cur. edd. reverse the order.

(15) Deut. XXV, 5.

(16) The deceased whose widow has now miscarried.

(17) ובין אין לו.

(18) עיין ‘consider’, ‘investigate’. The ‘Ayin (ע) of עיין is interchanged with the Aleph (א) of אין.

(19) Inquire whether the deceased has been survived by any kind of child. Even a miscarriage is deemed to be a child. Cf. B.B., Sonc. ed., p. 474. nn. 6ff.

(20) The prophet, who could predict the future.

(21) Of course she would.

(22) That she has actually miscarried, though after the halizah or levirate marriage.

(23) The prohibition for the woman to marry a priest.

(24) One not knowing the circumstances of this particular case would erroneously assume that any other haluzah may also be married to a priest.

(25) V. supra n. 2. Had not this been specifically stated it might have been assumed that, as the halizah is invalid, she is not rendered unfit at all.

(26) Because she does.

(27) Who regard the halizah as valid.

(28) And the prohibition to marry each other's relatives and his rendering her unfit for a priest would be inferred as self-evident.

(29) Lit., yes, thus also'.
(30) The ruling concerning halizah not being applicable in this context, since a viable child was born.
(31) So in old editions. Cur. edd. omit 'also'.
(32) Thus, as in the first clause, omitting all reference to halizah.
(33) Of the levir.
(34) Emphasis on MAY. No second contact is necessary after the miscarriage, (since the first was valid) and the levir may also, if he wishes, divorce her.
(35) Of the levir.
(36) Lit., 'it is not enough without such'. V. Emden, a.l. Cur. edd. omit the last two words.
(37) The option of either retaining or divorcing her.
(38) Cf. n. 3 supra.
(39) Who deem the marriage to be valid.
(40) Lit., 'yes thus also'.
(41) And free to marry. since her deceased husband is now survived by a living child, and neither she nor the other widow is subject to halizah or levirate marriage.
(42) So that his mother as well as her rival would be subject to the levir, the former's previous marital contact, during her pregnancy. being invalid.
(43) R. Johanan and Resh Lakish.

that whosoever is subject to the obligation of levirate marriage is also subject to halizah, and whosoever is not subject to the obligation of the levirate marriage is not subject to halizah![1] Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant:[2] Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and marital contact with a pregnant woman is no proper marriage nor is the halizah of a pregnant woman proper halizah, while the child does not bring exemption until he is actually born.[3]

It was taught in agreement with the view of Raba: Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married, because it is possible that the child would be viable, and neither marital contact nor halizah but only the child brings exemption; and the child brings exemption only after he is born.

The reason, then,[4] is because it is possible that the child might be viable, but where the child is not viable her rival is exempt;[5] does this imply an objection against Resh Lakish?[6] — Resh Lakish can answer you [that the Baraitha] is thus to be interpreted:[7] Where a levir married his yebamah who was found to be pregnant, her rival may not be married; since it is possible that the child may not be viable, and the halizah of a pregnant woman is no valid halizah nor is the marital contact with a pregnant woman a proper marriage; and were you to suggest that one should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear healthy children, [it could be retorted that] a child brings no exemption until he is actually born.[8]

Said R. Eleazar: Is it possible that there should exist [such a ruling as] that of Resh Lakish and that we should not have learnt it in a Mishnah? When he went out he carefully considered the matter and found one. For we learned: If people came to a woman whose husband and rival had gone to a country beyond the sea and told her, 'Your husband is dead',[9] she may neither be married[10] nor be taken in levirate marriage[11] until she has ascertained whether her rival[12] is pregnant.[13] One can well understand why she may not be taken in levirate marriage, since it is possible that the child[14] may be viable and [the levir] would thus[15] infringe the Pentateuchal prohibition against [marrying] a brother's wife: but why should she not perform the halizah? It is possible to understand the reason why she must not perform the halizah within the nine months[16] and also contract a marriage within nine months,[16] since such [procedure would naturally be forbidden on account of the] doubt;[17] but let her perform the halizah within the nine months[16] and be married after the nine months![18] — But even in accordance with your view,[19] let her perform the halizah and be married after the nine months![20] The fact, however, is that nothing may be inferred from this;[21] for both Abaye b. Abin[22] and R. Hinena b. Abin[22] stated:[23] It is possible that the child[24] might be viable[25] and you would then subject her to the necessity of an announcement[26] in respect of the priesthood.[27] — Well, let her be subjected![28] — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,[26] and would form the opinion that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

Said Abaye to him: Was it stated, ‘She shall neither perform halizah nor be taken in levirate marriage’? The statement, surely, was, ‘She shall neither be married nor be taken in levirate marriage’[29] without halizah; if halizah, however, had been performed[30] she would indeed have been permitted![31]

It was taught in agreement with Resh Lakish: Where a levir participated in the halizah with a pregnant woman who subsequently miscarried, she is required to perform halizah with the brothers.

Raba said: The law is in accordance with the views of Resh

!!

If on the other hand, a viable child had been born, exemption took effect at his birth, and subsequent marriage would consequently be lawful. As the Mishnah, however, forbids halizah and marriage even after the nine months, unless definite information about the rival had been received, it must be assumed to represent the view of Resh Lakish who deems a halizah invalid wherever the child is not viable and the ceremony took place during pregnancy. Lakish in the following three rulings.[32] One is the ruling just spoken of. Another is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:[33] If a man[34] distributed his property verbally[35] and gave to one [son] more and to another less, or if he assigned to the firstborn a share equal to that of his brothers,[36] his arrangements are valid.[37] If, however, he said, ‘As an inheritance’,[38] his instructions are disregarded.[39] If he wrote[40] either at the beginning or the end or the middle, ‘as a gift’,[41] his instructions are valid.[42]

(1) Supra 3a.

(2) By the Baraitha cited.

(3) Lit., ‘he went forth into the air of the world’.

(4) Why the rival is not exempt.

(5) On the strength of the marital contact which took place prior to the miscarriage of the child, no repeated contact being necessary.

(6) Who does not regard the marital contact of a pregnant woman as a valid marriage

(7) Lit., ‘thus he taught’.

(8) Lit., ‘he went forth unto the air of the world’.

(9) And has left no issue.

(10) To a stranger.

(11) By the levir.

(12) Who went together with her husband.

(13) Infra 119a. Only if she learns that her rival is not pregnant may she contract the levirate marriage.

(14) That might be born from the rival.

(15) By marrying the widow of his brother who did not die without issue.

(16) After the death of her husband.

(17) It being uncertain whether the child would be viable or not. Should he be viable, neither the halizah nor the marriage would be valid, while exemption on his account would not come into force until his actual birth.

(18) This should be permitted according to the view of R. Johanan at all events: If the rival had been pregnant and miscarried or had not been pregnant at all, the halizah was, surely, valid.

(19) That halizah is forbidden because of the possibility that the rival was pregnant at the time halizah took place.
(20) When all doubt as to pregnancy would have been removed. Why, then, has it been stated that she may not marry until she had ascertained (even though many years have passed), whether her rival had been pregnant.
(21) Mishnah. Lit., ‘but outside of that’. No support to the view of Resh Lakish may be derived from it.
(22) Cur. edd., ‘Abaye’.
(23) The reason why no halizah may take place.
(24) Of the rival.
(25) The birth of a viable child renders the halizah invalid and the woman is consequently permitted to marry a priest.
(26) That the halizah was unnecessary and therefore invalid.
(27) V. supra n. 7.
(28) Lit., ‘required’.
(29) [Rashi apparently omits this and reads: ‘She shall neither be married’ without halizah].
(30) Even within nine months.
(31) To marry at the end of that period; the Baraitha will then afford no support to Resh Lakish.
(32) B.B. 129b, Hul. 77a.
(33) Lit., ‘because we learned’.
(34) Lying on his death-bed.
(35) I.e., explicitly intimated his desire and did not die intestate (v. Rashi, a.l.).
(36) Lit., ‘he made the firstborn equal to them’, though Biblically he is entitled to a double portion.
(37) Lit., ‘his words stand’, because a man is entitled to dispose of his property, as a gift, in any manner that may appeal to him.
(38) I.e., if he distributed the shares as portions of an inheritance and not as gifts.
(39) Lit., ‘he said nothing’. One has no right to give instructions which are contrary to the law of the Torah which entitled every son to a portion and the firstborn to a double portion in the father's estate.
(40) In disposing of his property in a written will.
(41) I.e., used an expression denoting ‘gift’, even though it was accompanied by one denoting ‘inheritance’. If he wrote, for instance, let a certain field (a) be presented to X that he may inherit it (beginning), or (b) inherited by X and be presented to him that he may inherit it (middle), or (c) be inherited by X and be presented to him (end).
(42) B.B. 126b. V. supra note 6. So long as the expression of ‘gift’ was used, the other expression of ‘inheritance’ that may have been coupled with it, does not in any way affect the validity of the testator's instructions.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 36b

And [in connection with this] Resh Lakish stated: No possession is ever acquired,[1] unless the testator had said, ‘Let X and Y inherit this and that particular field which I have assigned to them as a gift, so that they may inherit them’.[2] And the third[3] is his ruling in connection with the following Mishnah:[4] If a man assigned all his estate, in writing, to his son[5] [to be his][6] after his[7] death, the father may not sell it[8] because it is assigned to the son, and the son may not sell it because it is in the possession of the father. If the father sold the estate, the sale is valid until his death.[9] If the son sold it, the buyer has no claim whatsoever upon it until the father's death.[10] And it was stated: If the son sold the estate[11] during the lifetime of his father, and died while his father was still alive, R. Johanan said: The buyer does not acquire ownership;[12] and Resh Lakish said: The buyer does acquire ownership.[13] R. Johanan said that ‘the buyer does not acquire ownership’, because possession of usufruct is like possession of the capital;[14] and Resh Lakish said that ‘the buyer does acquire ownership’, because possession of usufruct is not like possession of the capital.[15]

BUT IF THE CHILD IS NOT VIABLE etc. A Tanna taught: It has been said in the name of R. Eliezer that[16] he must put her out by means of a letter of divorce.[17]

Said Raba: R. Meir and R. Eliezer taught the same law.[18] R. Eliezer, in the ruling just mentioned, R. Meir [in the following Baraitha] wherein it was taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;[19] and if he married, he must put her out and never remarry her; so R. Meir.

But the Sages said: He shall let her go.[20] and at the proper time[21] he may marry her again.[22]

Abaye said to him:[23] How do you arrive at such a conclusion which may possibly be wrong?[24] R. Eliezer's ruling might extend to the present case[25] only because the levir is encroaching[26] upon the prohibition of ‘brother's wife’, which is Pentateuchal,[27] but there,[28] where the prohibition is only Rabbinical,[29] he may hold the same view as the Rabbis. Alternatively, it is possible that R. Meir's ruling extends only to that case because the prohibition is Rabbinical,[29] and the Sages have given more force to their provisions than to those which are Pentateuchal,[30] but not to the case here,[31] where the prohibition is Pentateuchal,[26] and people as a rule keep away from it.[32]

Raba said: Even according to the ruling of the Rabbis[33] he must let her go from him by means of a letter of divorce.[34] Said Mar Zutra: This may also be deduced, since the expression used was ‘he shall put her out’[35] and not ‘he shall let her part’.[36] This proves it.

R. Ashi said to R. Hoshaia son of R. Idi: ‘Elsewhere it was taught.[37] "R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human child[38] that survived for thirty days cannot be regarded as a miscarriage.[39] Had he not lived so long,[40] however, he would have been a doubtful case.[41] But it was also stated: Where he[42] died within thirty days[43] and she[44] was subsequently[45] betrothed,[46] Rabina said in the name of Raba that if she[44] was the wife of an Israelite[47] she must perform the halizah[48] and if she was the wife of a priest[49] she must not perform the halizah.[50] R. Mesharsheya[51] said in the name of Raba: The one as well as the other must perform the halizah. Said Rabina to R. Mesharsheya:[51]

(1) Where two fields were given to two persons and the expression of ‘inheritance was used together with that of ‘gift’.

(2) Both acquire possession of the respective fields because the testator had used the expression, ‘which I have assigned to them as a gift’, implying that the gift was made before it was assigned as an ‘inheritance’ (v. R. Gershom, B.B. 129a).

(3) Lit., ‘and the other’, the third ruling of Resh Lakish, which is an accepted halachah.

(4) Lit., ‘because we learned’.

(5) Inserting the formula ‘From this day and after my death’. The law that follows applies also to a gift made by any other person.

(6) The sons.

(7) The testator's.

(8) Either the land or its produce.

(11) Assigned to him by his father for possession after his death.

(12) Even after the father's death, since the estate has never come into the son's possession.

(13) After the death of the father, as the representative of the son, who, were he alive, would have been entitled to the inheritance.

(14) Since the usufruct was in the ownership of the father, the capital, i.e., the soil, is also regarded as being in his possession, and the son, therefore, during the lifetime of his father is not entitled to transfer it to the buyer.

(15) B.K. l.c., B.B. 136af. The soil, therefore, was the undisputed property of the son who, consequently. was fully entitled to transfer it to the buyer.

(16) Contrary to the law of our Mishnah which allows the levir to continue his connubial association with his sister-in-law wherever the child is not viable.

(17) Though the death of the child has proved retrospectively that the levirate marriage was lawful, divorce is imposed upon such a union as a penalty for contracting it at a time when, owing to the uncertainty of the result of the pregnancy, it was of doubtful legality.

(18) Lit., ‘said one word’, that the penalty of divorce is imposed upon any union the legality of which was doubtful at the time the marriage was contracted.

(19) Though she is now a widow or divorced.

(20) V. infra for meaning.

(21) Lit., ‘and when his time to marry arrives’, i.e. at the end of the period of twenty-four months allowed for the nursing of a child.

(22) Sot. 262.

(23) Raba.

(24) Lit., ‘from what? perhaps it is not (so)’.

(25) Lit., ‘R. Eliezer did not so far say (his ruling) here’.

(26) It being possible that the child would be viable.

(27) For such a serious offence a penalty is rightly imposed.

(28) Marriage with an expectant. or nursing mother.

(29) Biblically one need not wait twenty-four months before marrying her.

(30) As people might be lax in the observance of a Rabbinical law it was necessary to impose a penalty for its non-observance.

(31) Marriage with an expectant yebamah.

(32) Or ‘her’, i.e., from marrying an expectant yebamah. No penalty. therefore, need be imposed upon an occasional offender.

(33) Who permit marriage after the period of twenty-four months had elapsed.

(34) Mere separation is not enough.

(35) יוציא Hif. of יצא ‘to go out’.

(36) יפיש Hif. of פרש ‘to separate’.

(37) Cf. Tosaf. Hul. 87b, s.v. תנן and Bek. 49a s.v. מת. Cur. edd., ‘we learned’.

(38) Of doubtful premature birth. Lit., ‘among man’, opp. to cattle mentioned in the final clause.

(39) Tosef. Shab. XVI, Shab. 135b, Nid. 44b, infra 80b; and consequently exempts his mother from levirate marriage and halizah. In the case of a mature birth (cf. prev. note) the child exempts his mother on the first day of his birth. (V. Nid. 43b).

(40) [Rashi: By dying a natural death; Tosaf. If he was killed; for if he died a natural death within thirty days even the Rabbis would regard him as a miscarriage, v. Tosaf, s.v. הא].

(41) And his mother would have had to perform halizah only, but would not have been allowed to contract the levirate marriage.

(42) The child of a sister-in-law whose husband had died without having left any other issue.

(43) Of his birth.

(44) His mother, the widow of his deceased father.

(45) Lit., ‘stood up.’

(46) To a stranger; believing that the birth of the child was sufficient to exempt her from the obligations of the levirate marriage and the halizah.

(47) I.e., if the man who betrothed her was an Israelite who may marry a haluzah.

(48) With the levir.

(49) Cf. supra 8. A priest may not marry a haluzah.

(50) Were she to perform it. her husband could not subsequently be allowed to live with her. Hence she is granted exemption from halizah by virtue of the child's birth alone.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37a

Raba said so[1] in the evening, but on the following morning he retracted.[2] The other exclaimed, "So you have permitted;[3] would that you permitted also abdominal fat!"[4] Now, what is the law here in respect of the pregnant, or nursing wife of another man who was married to a priest? Did the Rabbis make any provision for a priest[5] or not?’ — The other[6] replied:[7] What a comparison![8] [The distinction][9] is well justified there;[10] since the Rabbis differ from R. Simeon b. Gamaliel in maintaining that the child is deemed to be sound even though he did not live long enough,[11] we may, in the case of a priest's wife, where no other course is open,[12] act in accordance with the view of the Rabbis.[13] Here,[14] however, in accordance with whose view could we act? If in accordance with that of R. Meir, he surely stated that he[15] must put her out and never remarry her! And if in accordance with the view of the Rabbis, they, surely, stated [that she must be sent away] by means of a letter of divorce![16]

It was stated: [The case of the man who] betrothed a woman[17] within the three [months][18] and fled, is one concerning which R. Aha and Rafram are at variance. One holds that the man is to be placed under the ban,[19] but the other holds that his flight is sufficient.[20] Such an incident once happened, and Rafram ruled,[21] ‘His flight is sufficient’.[20]

IF IT IS DOUBTFUL WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD etc. Said Raba to R. Nahman. Let the ruling be that one is to go by the majority of women, and the majority of women bear at nine months![22] — The other replied: Our women bear at seven months. ‘Are your women’, the first retorted, ‘the majority of the world’! — ‘What I mean’, the other replied, ‘is this: Most women bear at nine months and a minority at seven, and the embryo in the case of every woman who bears at nine is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy;[23] and in the case of this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy[23] [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired’.

If in the case of every woman, however, who bears at nine the embryo is recognizable after a third of the period of her pregnancy. it is obvious that with this [woman], since her embryo had not been recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, it must be a seven-months child of the second[24] husband! — But say rather: When a woman bears at nine months, her embryo in most cases is recognizable after a third of her pregnancy. and with this woman, since her embryo was not recognized after a third of the period of her pregnancy, [her presumption to belong to] the majority is impaired.

Our Rabbis taught: The first [child][25] is fit to be a High priest,[26] and the second[27] is deemed a bastard owing to his doubtful origin.[28] R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not of doubtful bastardy.[29] What does he[30] mean?[31] — Abaye replied: It is this that he meant, ‘The first child[25] is fit to be a High priest[26] while the seconds is one of doubtful bastardy[29] and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.[32] R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He is not one of doubtful bastardy but an assured bastard, and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard’. Raba replied: It is this that was meant: ‘The first[33] is fit to be a High priest[34] and the second,[35] on account of his doubtful origin,[36] is deemed to be an assured bastard and is consequently permitted to marry a bastard; but R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: He cannot be deemed an assured bastard on account of his doubtful origin;[36] he is, however, regarded as one of doubtful bastardy and is consequently forbidden to marry a bastard.[37] And they[38] differ in [the interpretation of a ruling] of R. Eleazar. For we learned: ‘R. Eleazar said, persons of confirmed illegitimacy may [intermarry] with others of confirmed illegitimacy, but those of confirmed illegitimacy may not intermarry with those of doubtful illegitimacy;[39] nor those of doubtful, with those of confirmed illegitimacy; nor those of doubtful, with others of doubtful illegitimacy. And the following are of doubtful legitimacy: The shethuki,[40] the asufi[41] and the Samaritan.[42] And [in connection with this] Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab, ‘The halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar, but when I stated this in the presence of Samuel[43] he said to me, "Hillel taught that the following ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:[44] priests, Levites, Israelites, profaned priests,[45] proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,[46] shetkuki[40] and asufi,[41] and all these may inter marry",[47] and you state that the halachah is in accordance with the ruling of R. Eleazar’![48] Now Abaye upholds the opinion of Samuel who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of Hillel and consequently brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah so that there may be no contradiction between the one halachah and the other.[49] Raba, on the other hand, upholds the opinion of Rab who stated that the halachah is in agreement with the ruling of R. Eleazar, and so he brings the ruling of R. Eliezer b. Jacob into harmony with the halachah in order that there may be no contradiction

(14) Where the levir married his sister-in-law while she was an expectant, or nursing mother.

(15) The levir.

(16) V. supra 36b and cf. p. 229, nn. 16 and 17.

(17) An expectant, or nursing mother who was a widow or divorcee.

(18) After she became a widow or divorcee.

(19) Until he consents to divorce the woman.

(20) He need not be compelled to give her a divorce, and no penalty need be imposed upon him, since his flight may be taken as an indication that it was not his intention to live with her before the lapse of a period of twenty-four months after the birth of a child.

(21) Lit., ‘said to them’.

(22) The child would consequently be deemed to be the son of the first husband, and the marriage of his mother with the levir would be a forbidden union. The levir who thus married unlawfully his brother's wife should bring a sin-offering and not, as stated in our Mishnah, an asham talui.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 37b

between one halachah and the other.

Said Abaye: Whence do I infer that R. Eliezer b. Jacob treats any doubtful case as a certainty? — [From] what was taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, 'Behold, when a man has intercourse with many women and does not know with which particular woman[1] he had intercourse, and, similarly, when a woman with whom many men had intercourse does not know to which particular man her conception is due, the consequences are that a father will be marrying his daughter and a brother his sister, and the whole world will be filled with bastards,[2] and concerning this it was said, And the land became full of lewdness'.[3] And Raba?[4] — He can answer you: It is this that was meant, 'What might be the result'?[5]

More than that[6] was said by R. Eliezer b. Jacob: A man shall not marry a wife in one country and then proceed to marry one in another country, since [their children][7] might marry one another and the result might be that a brother would marry his sister.[8]

But, surely, this could not be [the accepted ruling], for Rab, whenever he happened to visit Dardeshir,[9] used to announce, 'Who would be mine[10] for the day'! So also R, Nahman, whenever he happened to visit Shekunzib,[11] used to announce, 'Who would be mines for the day'![12] — The Rabbis came under a special category since they are well known.[13]

But did not Raba say: A woman who had an offer of marriage and accepted must allow a period of seven ritually clean days to pass![14] — The Rabbis sent their representatives and these presented the announcements to the women.[15] And if you prefer I might say: The Rabbis only had them[16] in their private rooms;[17] for the Master said, 'He who has bread in his basket cannot be compared to him who has no bread in his basket'.[18]

A Tanna taught: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said: A man must not marry a woman if it is his intention to divorce her, for it is written, Devise not evil against thy neighbour, seeing he dwelleth securely by thee.[19]

If the 'doubtful son'[20] and the levir came to claim a share[21] in the estate of the deceased,[22] the 'doubtful son' pleading, 'I am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine', while the levir pleads, 'You are my son and you have no claim whatsoever upon the estate',it is a case of money of doubtful ownership,[23] and money the ownership of which is doubtful must be divided.[24]

Where the ‘doubtful son’[20] and the sons of the levir came to claim their share[21] in the estate of the deceased, the ‘doubtful son’ pleading, ‘I[25] am the son of the deceased and the estate is mine while the sons of the levir plead, ‘You are our brother and you have only a share equal to ours’, it was the intention of the Rabbis to submit to R. Mesharsheya that this was a case [identical with that] of a Mishnah wherein we learned, ‘He[26] does not inherit from them[27] but they inherit from him’,[28] since here the case is just the reverse:[29] There they tell him, ‘produce proof and take [your share]’[30] while here he tells them, ‘produce proof and take your share’.[31] R. Mesharsheya, however, said to them, ‘Are [the two cases] equal? There, their claim is a certainty[32] while his is doubtful,[33] while here both are doubtful![34] If, however, a case is to be compared to a Mishnah it is to the following: That of a ‘doubtful son’[35] and the sons of the levir who came to claim[36] shares in the estate of the levir himself, where they can say to him: produce proof that you are our brother and take your share’.[37]

If a ‘doubtful son’[35] and the sons of the levir came to claim[36] their shares in the estate of the levir after the levir had received his share in the estate of the deceased, the sons of the levir pleading, ‘produce proof that you are our brother and you will receive [your share]’, the ‘doubtful son’ can tell them, ‘Whatever you wish: If I am your brother, give me a share among you;[38] and if I am the son of the deceased, return to me the half which your father received when he shared the estate with me’.

Said R. Abba in the name of Rab: The judgment must stand.[39] R. Jeremiah said: The judgment is to be reversed.[40]

May it be suggested that they[41] differ on the same principle as that which underlies the dispute between Admon and the Rabbis? For we learned: If a man went to a country beyond the sea and [in his absence] the path to his field was lost,[42] he shall, Admon said, use the shortest cut;[43] but the Sages said: He must purchase a path even though it will cost him a hundred maneh or else fly in the air.[44] And in discussing this [Mishnah it was pointed out] against the Rabbis that Admon was perfectly right; and Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab that here it is a case where [the fields of] four persons surrounded it on its four sides.[45] But [it was asked] what is Admon's reason? And Raba replied: Where four persons[46] derive their rights of possession from four persons[47] or where four persons derive it from one[45] all agree that these[48] can refuse[49] him; the dispute only concerns one person who derived his rights from four. Admon is of the opinion that he[50] can tell him, ‘At all events[51] my path is in your fields’,[52] while the Rabbis hold that the other can answer him, ‘If you will keep quiet, well and good;[53] and if not, I will return the deeds to their original owners whom you will have no chance to call to law’.[54] May it, then, be suggested that R. Abba[55] holds the view of the Rabbis[56] and R. Jeremiah[57] that of Admon?[58] R. Abba can tell you: I may even hold the view of Admon; he made his ruling there[59] only because he[60] can say to him,[61] ‘Whatever you wish to plead,

(27) Neither from the sons of his mother's first, nor from those of her second husband. As his claim is indefinite, since he cannot possibly know who his father really was, each group of heirs, whose claim to the estate of their respective fathers is definite and certain, can plead that he is not the son of their father.
(28) Infra 100b. When he dies, the two groups of brothers, since they have exactly equal claims upon his estate, are entitled to equal shares in it.
(29) While in the Mishnah cited their claim is certain and his is not, in this case his claim is certain while theirs is not. His claim is certain since at all events he is entitled either to all the estate (if he is the son of the deceased) or to a part at least (if he is the son of the levir), their claim, however, is doubtful since it is possible that he is the son of the deceased and they, as the sons of the levir, have no claim whatsoever upon the estate.

(39) Once the levir received a half of the estate of his deceased brother it cannot again be taken away from his heirs. The second claim of the ‘doubtful son’ is, therefore, invalid.

my only path lies in your fields’, but could such a plea be advanced here! And R. Jeremiah can tell you: I may uphold even the view of the Rabbis, for the Rabbis made their ruling there only because he can tell him, ‘If you keep silence, well and good, and if not I will return the deeds to their original owners and you will have no chance to call them to law’, but could such a plea be advanced here!

Where a ‘doubtful son’[1] and a levir came to claim their shares[2] in the estate of the grandfather,[3] the former[4] pleading, ‘I am[5] the son of the deceased and half of the estate belongs, therefore, to me’, while the levir pleads, ‘You are my own son and you have, therefore, no share whatsoever’, the levir's claim being a certainty[6] and that of the ‘doubtful son’ a doubtful one,[7] doubt may not supersede[8] a certainty.

Where the ‘doubtful son’[1] and the sons of the levir came to claim their shares[2] in the estate of their grandfather,[9] the former[4] pleading. ‘I am[5] the son of the deceased and half of the estate is, therefore, mine’[10] while the sons of the levir plead, ‘You are our brother and you have a share like one of us’,[11] they receive the half which he concedes to them while he receives the third[12] which they concede to him, and thus a sixth[13] remains,[14] which, being property[15] of uncertain ownership, is to be equally divided.[16]

Where the grandfather[17] and the levir [claim their shares] in the estate of the ‘doubtful son’ or where the grandfather[17] and the ‘doubtful son’ [claim their shares] in the estate of the levir, the estate is to be regarded as money of uncertain ownership and is to be equally divided.[16] MISHNAH. Wherein does the first clause[28] in which there is no dispute between them[29] differ from the final clause[30] in which they[29] do dispute?[31] ‘Ulla replied: The first clause deals with a woman who became subject to the levirate marriage[32] while betrothed, and the final clause with one who became subject to the levirate marriage[32] while married. And ‘Ulla is of the opinion that the levirate bond[33] of a betrothed woman renders her ‘doubtfully betrothed’[34] and the levirate bond of a married woman renders her ‘doubtfully married’.[1] ‘The levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her doubtfully betrothed’, for were we to assume that she is regarded as definitely betrothed, [how could both] BETH SHAMMAI AND BETH HILLEL AGREE THAT SHE MAY SELL IT OR GIVE IT AWAY AND THAT HER ACT IS LEGALLY VALID when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was betrothed, Beth Shammai said, she may sell it, and Beth Hillel said, she may not sell it, but both agree that if she had sold or had given it away her act is legally valid![2] Consequently[3] it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a betrothed woman renders her ‘doubtfully betrothed’.[4] ‘The levirate bond of a married woman renders her doubtfully married’, for had it been possible to assume that she is regarded as definitely married, [how could] Beth Shammai state that THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER when we learned: If she came into the possession of property while she was married, both[5] agree that, if she had sold or given it away, her husband may seize it from the hand of the buyers![6] Consequently it must be inferred that the levirate bond of a married woman renders her ‘doubtfully married’.[7]

Said Rabbah to him:[8] Why, then, do they[9] dispute on [the question of the estate] itself after the death [of the widow]? Let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct while she is alive! No, said Rabbah, both clauses deal with property which came into her possession while she was married; and the levirate bond of a married woman stamps her as doubtfully married. In the first clause, therefore, where she is alive, she is the certain possessor[10] while they are only doubtful possessors, and doubt cannot override a certainty.[11] In the final clause, however, where she is dead, both groups come equally as heirs[12] and are, therefore,[13] to take equal shares.[14]

Abaye pointed out an objection against him:[15] Cannot a doubt, in accordance with the view of Beth Shammai, override a certainty? Surely we learned: [In the case where] a[16] house collapsed upon a man[17] and his father or upon a man[17] and those whose heir he was,[18] and that man had against him the claim of his wife's kethubah[19] or that of a creditor,[20] [and in the first case], the heirs of the father plead that the son died first and the father afterwards,[21] while the creditor pleads that the father died first and the son afterwards,[22] Beth Shammai hold [that the amount in dispute is] to be divided,[23] and Beth Hillel hold that the estate is to remain in its former status.[24] Now here, surely, [the claim of] the heirs of the father is a certainty[25] and that of the creditor is only a doubt[25] and yet[26] the doubtful claim overrides the certainty![27] — Beth Shammai are of the opinion that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as [already] repaid![28]

And whence do you derive this?[29] — [From] what we learned: If their husbands[30] died before they drank,[31] Beth Shammai rule that they are to receive their kethuboth[32] and that they need not drink,[33] and Beth Hillel rule that they either drink[33] or they do not receive their kethuboth.[34] [But how can it be ruled,] ‘They either drink’, when the All Merciful said, Then shall the man bring his wife[35] and he is not there! Consequently [the meaning must be that] as they do not drink they are not to receive their kethuboth.[32] Now here, surely, it is a matter of doubt, it being uncertain whether she did play the harlot[36] or not,[37] and yet the doubt overrides the certainty.[38] Consequently[39] it must be inferred that a bond of indebtedness which is due for repayment is regarded as already repaid.[40]

Abaye,[41] then,[42] should have raised his objection from this![43] — [The law of] a wife's kethubah might be different owing to considerations of courtesy.[44]

Then let him[45] raise his objection from the law of the kethubah in our Mishnah![46] They[47] do not dispute this point.[48]

But do they not? Surely we learned,[49] IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER

KETHUBAH AND WITH PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER? BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE IT WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER; BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS! — It is this that was meant: IF SHE DIED, WHAT SHALL BE DONE WITH HER KETHUBAH? and then [the enquiry] was abandoned. As to PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, BETH SHAMMAI SAID: THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER AND BETH HILLEL SAID: THE PROPERTY IS TO REMAIN WITH THOSE IN WHOSE POSSESSION IT IS.

Said R. Ashi: The inference from the expressions in our Mishnah leads to the same conclusion;[50] for it was stated, THE HEIRS OF HER HUSBAND ARE TO SHARE WITH THE HEIRS OF HER FATHER[51] and it was not stated 'the heirs of the father [are to share it] with the heirs of the husband'.[52] This proves it.

[Reverting to the previous question,][53] Abaye replied: The first clause [deals with property] that came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir,[54] and the latter clause [with such] as came into her possession while she was still with her husband.

(3) Since in the case of a definite betrothal Beth Hillel, contrary to the opinion of Beth Shammai do not allow the widow the right of sale or gift, while in the first clause of our Mishnah they do.

(4) Hence Beth Shammai, who concede to the widow the right to sell and to give away even where her betrothal was certain, with all the more reason concede such rights to the widow spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah where her betrothal is only doubtful. Beth Hillel, too, since in the case of a definite betrothal they agree that a sale or gift that had already taken place is valid, may rightly concede to the widow in the case of doubtful betrothal the full rights of selling and giving away.

(5) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(6) Keth. loc. cit.

(7) And so both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel, who in the case of a definite marriage recognize the husband's right to seize from the buyers even property that his wife had already sold, agree that in the case of our Mishnah, the status of marriage being a matter of doubt, the husband's rights are also a matter of doubt. Hence Beth Shammai might well maintain that the property which is of doubtful ownership should be equally divided between the rival claimants, while Beth Hillel may maintain that the widow's right of possession is to be given priority since she came into the possession of the property at a time when her married status was a matter of uncertainty.

Had it not borne the same force as marriage the estate would have been given to her father's heirs only, and the levir would have had no claim whatsoever. The claims of either group are consequently evenly balanced.

(13) Since the claim of either is equally doubtful.

(14) According to Beth Shammai. Beth Hillel's view, on the other hand, may be justified on the ground that the widow's father's heirs are her certain relatives and are, therefore, entitled to inherit that which was in her possession. No such claim, however, could be advanced by the husband's relatives since the husband himself was never for one moment in definite and undisputed possession of the property in question.

(24) B.B. 157a; With the heirs of the father. The claim of the heirs is regarded by Beth Hillel as a certainty, since they are in possession of the estate either as heirs of the father or as heirs of the son, while the claim of the creditor, being dependent on his being put into possession of the estate by the court, is of doubtful validity, and ‘doubt cannot override a certainty’.

(25) v. supra n. 8.

(26) According to Beth Shammai.

(27) Lit., ‘and doubt comes and takes away from the hands of certainty’. V. supra n. 8.

(28) Sot. 25a. The amount of the debt is deemed to be in the virtual possession of the creditor. The claims respectively of the heirs and the creditor are, consequently, of equal force. If the father died first his son inherited his estate and the creditor had immediately come into the legal possession of a share of the estate equal to the amount of his debt. If the son died first the heirs come into possession of the entire estate. As it is not known who died first the claims of the two parties are equally doubtful and of equal validity.

(38) Cf. supra p. 243, n, 12. Despite the doubt as to whether she is entitled to her kethubah she receives it, according to Beth Shammai; and she thus takes away the amount of her kethubah from the heirs of her husband who are the undoubted successors to his property.

(39) Since the rule is that ‘doubt cannot override certainty's

(40) The kethubah is, therefore, deemed to have been collected as soon as the husband died, and the widow is consequently deemed to be the virtual possessor of such a portion of his estate as would cover the amount of her kethubah.

(41) Whose objection to Rabbah, supra, was based on a Mishnah from Baba Bathra.

(42) Since the principle of virtual possession did not occur to him as the reason for allowing a doubtful claim in face of certain one.

(43) The Mishnah just cited which is embodied in the Tractates of Sotah and Kethuboth both of which belong to the same order as our Tractate. Since the principles in both Mishnahs are identical, why did Abaye resort to a Mishnah in another order when one was available in our order of Nashim.

(44) חינא ‘gracefulness’, ‘loveliness’. It is possible that in order that pleasant and cordial relations may exist between husband and wife the law has been enacted that, despite the general rule that ‘doubt cannot override a certainty’, a woman shall be privileged to collect her kethubah even when her own claim is of a doubtful character and that of her litigants is a certain one. No objection could, therefore, be put forward from such a special case; and Abaye had consequently to resort to a Mishnah in Nezikin. Other explanations of משום חינא(v. Jast.): ‘In order to make her attractive’, ‘that women may be willing to marry’.

(45) Abaye.

(46) Where, according to Beth Shammai, the heirs of the father (by virtue of his being heir to his daughter, the widow), though their claim is of a doubtful nature, share the amount of the kethubah with the heirs of the husband whose rights to the amount of the kethubah (as the heirs of the husband) are certain. At the moment it is assumed that Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel extends to the KETHUBAH as well as to the PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER; and 'considerations of courtesy' could not, of course, apply when the woman is dead and the claimants are her male heirs. Cf. Keth. 97b.

(47) Beth Shammai.

(48) They agree with Beth Hillel that the KETHUBAH IS TO RETAIN IN THE POSSESSION OF THE HEIRS OF THE HUSBAND. V. supra p. 240, n. 8.

(49) So MS.M. Cur. edd. 'it was taught'.

(50) That Beth Shammai's disagreement with Beth Hillel does not extend to the question of the kethubah.

(51) I.e., the former take a share in that which is virtually in the possession of the latter, viz., the melog property which belongs to the heirs of the wife's father.

(52) Which would have referred to the kethubah which is in the virtual possession of the husband's heirs,

(53) Supra 38a, 'Whereby does the first clause etc.

(54) As the levirate bond is not strong enough to give the levir any right over that property, it is generally agreed that she and, in case of her death, her heirs also are entitled to dispose of it in any manner they like.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39a

And Abaye[1] maintains that a husband's rights[2] have the same force as his wife's.[3] Said Raba to him:[4] If she came into possession of property while she was still With her husband, no one[5] would dispute the view that his rights are superior to hers.[6] Both [clauses of our Mishnah], however, [deal with property] which came into her possession while she was awaiting [the decision of] the levir; the first clause speaking of one to whom a ma'amar had not been addressed,[7] and the final clause, of one to whom a ma'amar had been addressed.[8] And Raba is of the opinion that a ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, renders [the widow] definitely betrothed and doubtfully married. She is deemed to be definitely betrothed in respect of excluding her rival;[9] and she is deemed to be doubtfully married in respect of taking a share in the property.[10]

A statement was made in the name of R. Eleazar in agreement with Raba and a statement was made in the name of R. Jose son of R. Hanina in agreement with Abaye. Could R. Eleazar, however, have made such a statement? Surely R. Eleazar said: A ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, constitutes a kinyan in so far only as to keep out the rival![11] — Reverse [the statements]. If you prefer I might say: There is really no need to reverse [them, for] R. Eleazar can tell you, 'What I said [amounted to this]: that a letter of divorce alone is not enough[12] but that she requires also halizah; did I state, however, that the ma'amar constitutes no kinyan even in respect of taking a share in her property'![13]

Said R. Papa: The inference from our Mishnah is in agreement with the opinion of Abaye,[14] although 'IF SHE DIED' presents a difficulty.[15] Seeing that it was stated PROPERTY THAT COMES IN AND GOES OUT WITH HER, what is meant by COMES IN and what by GOES OUT? Obviously,[16] 'COMES INTO the possession of her husband'[17] and 'GOES OUT from the possession of her husband into the possession of her father'.[18]

'Although IF SHE DIED presents a difficulty': Why should they[19] dispute [on the question of the property] itself, which can arise only in the event of the woman's death[20] , let them rather dispute on the question of the usufruct which arises even when the woman is still alive![21] The fact is that no further objection [can be raised].[22]

WHERE HE MARRIED HER, SHE IS DEEMED etc. For what practical law [was this statement needed]? — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: To indicate that he may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce[23] and that he may remarry her.

'He may divorce her by means of a letter of divorce'; Is not this obvious?[24] — It might have been assumed that, since the All Merciful said[25] And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,[26] she retains the obligation of the first levirate relationship[27] and so may be set free[28] only through halizah but not through a letter of divorce, hence it was necessary to teach us [that the law is not so].

‘He may remarry her’; Is not this obvious?[29] — It might have been assumed that since he[30] has already performed[31] the commandment which the All Merciful has imposed upon him, she shall now be forbidden to him as the wife of his brother, hence it was necessary to teach us [that he may nevertheless remarry her]. Might it not be suggested that the law is so indeed?[32] — Scripture stated, And take her to him to wife;[33] as soon as he has taken her she is deemed to be his wife in every respect.

SAVE THAT HER KETHUBAH etc. What is the reason? — A wife has been given[34] to him[35] from heaven.[36] If, however, she is unable nothing more’. The inference from our Mishnah is undoubtedly in agreement with the view of Abaye, the only difficulty being the one mentioned. to obtain her kethubah from her first [husband], provision was made that she [is to receive it] from the second[37] in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.[38]

MISHNAH. THE DUTY OF THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IS INCUMBENT UPON THE ELDEST [OF THE SURVIVING BROTHERS].[39] IF HE DECLINES, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN.[40] IF THEY ALL DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED AND HE IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF HE[41] WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION[42] UNTIL A MINOR[43] BECOMES OF AGE, OR UNTIL THE ELDEST[43] RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA OR [UNTIL A BROTHER WHO WAS] DEAF[44] OR AN IMBECILE [SHOULD RECOVER],[45] HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO, BUT IS TOLD, ‘THE DUTY IS INCUMBENT UPON YOU; EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR PERFORM THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. It was stated: [On the relative importance of] the intercourse of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable and the other holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable. ‘One[46] holds that the intercourse of the younger is preferable,’ because the commandment, surely, is to perform the levirate marriage;[47] and ‘the other[46] holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable’, because in the presence of an elder brother the intercourse of the younger is valueless.[48]

We learned, IF HE DECLINED, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN. Does not this mean that he declined to contract the levirate marriage but [was willing] to submit to the halizah? And yet it was stated, ALL THE OTHER BROTHERS ARE APPROACHED IN TURN, which proves[49] that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred! — No; he wished neither to submit to halizah nor to perform the levirate marriage. Similarly, then, in the case of the other brothers, [the meaning is that] they declined both halizah and levirate marriage;[50] why, then, is THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of bringing pressure upon him? Let pressure be brought to bear upon them![51] — As the duty[52] is incumbent upon him, pressure also must be used against him.

We learned, IF HE WISHED TO SUSPEND ACTION UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE ... HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the intercourse of a minor is to be preferred, why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on becoming of age he might contract the levirate marriage! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wished to wait] UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS

NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since on his return he might contract the levirate marriage![53] The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.[54]

(1) Since he explains the latter clause to be dealing with property that came into the wife's possession while her husband was still alive.

(2) To his wife's melog property.

(3) Lit., ‘his hand is like her hand’. The husband's rights, according to Beth Hillel, he maintains, are in no way superior to those of his wife. Hence, when he dies and the widow comes only under the levirate bond, the levir's rights, which cannot have the same force as those of a husband, are inevitably inferior to those of the widow. The property, therefore, must remain in the possession of herself or her heirs. Beth Shammai, on the other hand, maintain that a husband's rights have more force than those of his wife. When he dies and the levir steps in by virtue of the levirate bond, the latter's rights, though inferior to those of the husband, are of equal force with those of the widow whose rights also are inferior to those of her husband.

(4) Abaye.

(5) Lit., all the world’, even Beth Hillel.

(6) Lit., ‘his hand is better than her hand’, and the husband's heirs would consequently have been entitled to the property.

(7) By the levir, before the property came into her possession. The levirate bond alone is not sufficient to effect a transfer of the property to the levir.

(8) And after that the property came into her possession. As the ma'amar, according to Beth Shammai, is regarded as virtual marriage (v. supra 29a), the levir also is entitled to the property. Hence it must be divided. Beth Hillel, on the other hand, not regarding a ma'amar as marriage, deny the levir all rights upon the property which is, therefore, to remain with the heirs of the woman.

(9) Her sister who does not cause her to be forbidden to the levir as ‘his zekukah's sister’. V. supra 29a.

(10) The levir is not entitled to all the property as if he had actually married the widow, but only to a share of it.

(11) Supra 29a, Ned. 74a.

(12) When a ma'amar had been addressed to the widow.

(13) Certainly not. Consequently his statement in agreement with the view of Raba may be perfectly authentic.

(14) That the final clause deals with property that came into the woman's possession while she was still living with her husband.

(15) This is explained infra.

(16) Lit., ‘not?’

(17) At the time they came into her possession.

(18) When she dies. The property must consequently have come into her possession when she was still living with her husband, as Abaye maintains.

(19) Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel.

(20) Lit., ‘and after death’.

(21) Lit., ‘in her life and concerning the fruit’.

(22) Lit., ‘and

(23) And no halizah is required.

(24) Since with the levirate marriage she assumes the status of a married woman.

(25) So MS.M. Cur. edd., add, ‘It is written, And take her to wife’.

(26) Deut. XXV, 5; although it was already stated in the same verse, and take her to wife.

(27) So MS.M., cur. edd., ‘the levirate relationship of the first’.

(28) Lit., ‘yes’.

(29) Cf. supra n. 2.

(30) The levir.

(31) By his first marriage.

(32) That a brother's widow with whom levirate marriage was performed still requires halizah and may not be remarried by the levir after he had divorced her.

(33) Deut. XXV, 5; where only the latter part of the verse, And perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her would have been sufficient. V. supra 8a.

(34) Lit., ‘they caused him to acquire’.

(35) The levir.

(36) He has neither chosen her nor has he undertaken any obligations towards her. She was imposed upon him by the divine law of the levirate marriage. The claim of her kethubah must, therefore, be a charge upon the estate of her first husband whose choice she had been.

(37) The levir.

(38) Lit., ‘that she may not be easy in his eyes to cause her to go out’.

(39) V. supra 24a.

(40) In the descending order of age.

(41) The eldest brother present on the spot. (Rashi).

(42) Lit., ‘he hung’ or ‘suspended’. [Aliter. He referred (the action) to; v. n. 9].

(43) Brother.

(44) in Rabbinic literature usually signifies one who is deaf from birth. Hence ‘a deaf-mute’.

(45) [Tosaf.: He referred her to a deaf brother etc.].

(46) Lit., ‘he who’.

(47) Halizah being merely a substitute for it.

(48) Since the duty is, in the first instance, incumbent upon the elder.

(49) Since the younger brothers are asked to contract the levirate marriage when the elder expressed his willingness to submit to halizah.

(50) Since the same expression of unwillingness is used.

(51) If the eldest had only refused marriage but was willing to submit to halizah, as has first been assumed, one could explain our Mishnah to mean that ‘THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED with a view to halizah’; he being the eldest, halizah also is first offered to him. If, however, he refused both halizah and marriage, as has now been explained, and the object of approaching him is coercion, why should the Beth din be troubled to summon him again in order to coerce him when any of the brothers who happens to be near at hand might just as well be coerced?

(52) Of the levirate marriage. V. our Mishnah.

(53) So marginal gloss. Cur. edd., ‘and submits to halizah’.

(54) And this is the only reason why his request is not granted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 39b

Some say: As regards intercourse all agree that the intercourse of a younger brother is preferred.[1] They only differ on the halizah of a younger brother. And the statement[2] ran thus: [On the relative importance of] the halizah of a younger, and the halizah of an elder brother there is a difference of opinion between R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi. One holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable, and the other holds that both are of equal importance. ‘One[3] holds that the halizah of the elder is preferable’[4] because the commandment surely, is incumbent upon the elder. And the other [maintains that] the statement, ‘the commandment is incumbent upon the elder’, [was made] in respect of the levirate marriage; in respect of the halizah, however, they are both of equal importance.

We learned, IF THEY ALSO DECLINE, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED. Does not this mean that they declined to contract the levirate marriage but [were willing] to submit to halizah? And yet it was stated, THE ELDEST IS AGAIN APPROACHED, which proves that the halizah of the elder is preferred! — No; they declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage.

Similarly, in the case of the eldest brother, he declined the halizah as well as the levirate marriage;[5] why, then, IS THE ELDEST AGAIN APPROACHED with the object of coercing him? Let coercion be used against them![6] — As the duty[7] is incumbent upon him, coercion also must be used against him.

Come and hear: IF HE WISHES TO SUSPEND ACTION . . . UNTIL THE ELDEST RETURNS FROM A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO. But if the halizah of the eldest is preferable why IS HE NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since it is possible that when he returns he will submit to halizah! — Following your view [it might similarly be objected], why [if he wishes to postpone action] UNTIL A MINOR BECOMES OF AGE . . . HE IS NOT TO BE LISTENED TO? Let us rather wait, since, on becoming of age, he might contract the levirate marriage![8] The fact is that the performance of a commandment must not be delayed.[9]

We learned elsewhere: At first, when the object was the fulfilment[10] of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage.[11] Rab said: But no coercion[12] may be used.[13]

When they[14] came before Rab he addressed them thus: ‘If you[15] wish, submit to halizah; if you prefer, contract the levirate marriage; the All Merciful has given you the choice:[16] And if the man like not to take his brother's wife,[17] implying, if he likes he may, whenever he wishes, submit to halizah or, if he prefers, contract the levirate marriage.’

Rab Judah also is of the opinion that no coercion may be applied; since Rab Judah has ordained [the following formula] for a deed of halizah: ‘[We certify] that So-and-so daughter of So-and-so brought before us into court her brother-in-law So-and-so, and we have ascertained him to be the paternal brother of the deceased. We told him, "If you wish to contract the levirate marriage, contract it, and if not, incline[18] towards her your right foot". He inclined[19] towards her his right foot and she removed his shoe from off his foot and spat out before him, a spittle which has been seen by the court upon the ground’.

R. Hiyya b. Iwya in the name of Rab Judah concluded[20] as follows: ‘And we read before them [the relevant passage] that is written in the Book of the Law of Moses’.

‘We ascertained him’. On this, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One says: Through [qualified] witnesses. The other says: Even a relative and even a woman[21] [may tender the evidence].

The law is that it[22] is a mere intimation, and that even a relative and even a woman [may tender the evidence].

‘At first, when the object was the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of the levirate marriage was preferable to that of halizah; now, however, when the object is not the fulfilment of the commandment, the precept of halizah, it was laid down, is preferable to that of the levirate marriage’. Said Rami b. Hama in the name of R. Isaac: It was re-enacted that the precept of the levirate marriage is preferable to that of halizah.

Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: Have the generations improved in their morals? — At first they held the opinion of Abba Saul, and finally they adopted that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, ‘If a levir marries his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed the law of incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [of such a union] is a bastard’. But the Sages said, ‘Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[23] whatever the motive’.[24]

Who is the Tanna of the following statement which our Rabbis taught: ‘Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[23] is a commandment; for originally[25] she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility, then[26] she was forbidden to him, and then again[27] permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[23] it is a commandment’. — Who, now, is the Tanna? — R. Isaac b. Abdimi replied. It is [the statement of] Abba Saul, and it is this that he meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[23] is a commandment; for originally[25] she stood in relation to him in the status of permissibility; he could have married her, if he wished, on account of her beauty and he could have married her, if he wished, in order to gratify his sexual desires; then[28] she was forbidden to him, and then again[29] permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she reverts to her original status of permissibility,[30] hence it Was specifically stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her[31] only with the intention of performing the commandment.[32]

Raba said: You may even say [that the authorship[33] is that of] the Rabbis,[34] and it is this that was meant: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[31] is a commandment; for originally[35] she was in the status of permissibility; he could have married her if he wished and, if he preferred, he could have abstained from marrying her; then[28] she was forbidden to him, and then again[29] permitted; consequently it might have been assumed that she was to revert to her original status of permissibility, so that, if he wished, he might marry her and, if he preferred, he could abstain from marrying her. [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from marrying her'? Surely she is tied to him;[36] can she be set free by no act whatever! — Say rather: [It might have been assumed that] if he wished he might marry her, and, if he preferred, he might submit to halizah, hence it was specifically stated her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[31] it is a commandment.[37]

Read, then,[38] the first clause: 'It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,[39] is a commandment;

for originally[1] its status in relation to him was one of permissibility; then[2] it was forbidden, and again[3] permitted; consequently one might assume that it reverts to its first status of permissibility, hence it was specifically stated, It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place,[4] it is a commandment'. Now, according to Raba who said that it[5] represents the view of[6] the Rabbis, one could well explain that what is meant here[7] is this: It shall be eaten without leaven in a holy place[4] is a commandment, for at first[8] its status in relation to him was one of permissibility since, if he desired, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it; then[9] it was forbidden, and again[3] permitted; consequently it might be assumed that it reverts to its first status of permissibility[10] so that, if he wished, he could eat it and, if he preferred, he could abstain from eating it. — [You say,] 'If he preferred he could abstain from eating it'? Surely it is written in the Scriptures, And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made[11] which teaches that the priests must eat them, and that the owner attains thereby atonement! Say rather: [it might be assumed that] if he wished, he[12] may eat it[13] himself and, if he preferred, another priest may eat it, hence it was specifically stated, It shall be eaten' without leaven in a holy place,[14] it is a commandment.[15] According to R. Isaac b. Abdimi, however, who said that it[16] [represents the view of] Abba Saul, what two alternatives[17] exist here?[18] And were you to suggest[19] that if he wished he could eat it[13] to appease his appetite and, if he preferred, he could devour it gluttonously can eating gluttonous]y [it may be retorted] be described as proper eating? Surely Resh Lakish said, 'He who eats gluttonously on the Day of Atonement[20] is exempt [from kareth],[21] since [Scripture has stated], Shall not be afflicted'![22] [Were you to suggest], however,[23] that if he wished he could eat it[24] unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it leavened, surely [it might be retorted] it is written in Scripture, It shall not be baked with leaven their portion[25] from which Resh Lakish inferred that even their portion[26] must not be baked with leaven! Again [Were you, to suggest,][23] that if he wished he could eat it[24] unleavened and, if he preferred, he could eat it as a dumpling,[27] how [it could be retorted] is one to imagine [such a dumpling]? If it is unleavened, well, then it is unleavened;[28] and if it is not unleavened, the All Merciful, surely, has said without leaven![29] — No;[30] it[31] may indeed be assumed to be unleavened; but the object of the exposition of the Scriptural text[32] was to forbid it.[33] In respect of what practical issue, then,[34] has it been stated that a dumpling may be regarded as unleavened bread? — [The statement was made] to indicate that a man may perform with it[31] his duty[35] on the Passover. Though he made it first into a dumpling, it is nevertheless designated the 'bread of affliction', since he subsequently baked it in an oven. Consequently a man may perform with it his duty[35] on the Passover. MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS IN RESPECT OF INHERITANCE.[36] IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER[37] WAS LIVING,[38] THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.[39]

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE GAINS POSSESSION OF HIS BROTHER'S[37] ESTATE. R. JUDAH SAID: IN EITHER CASE,[40] IF THE FATHER[37] WAS LIVING[38] THE ESTATE BELONGS TO THE FATHER.

GEMARA. Is not this[41] obvious? — It might have been presumed that halizah takes the place of the levirate marriage and he receives, therefore, all the estate, hence it was taught [that he does not].[42] If so,[43] why was it stated that HE IS REGARDED AS ONE OF THE OTHER BROTHERS when it should have been stated, he is to be regarded only as one of the brothers! — In truth [this is the purpose of our Mishnah]: It might have been assumed that because he deprived her [of levirate marriage][44] he shall be penalized,[45] hence we were taught [that he does receive a share].

IF, HOWEVER, THE FATHER WAS LIVING, [THE ESTATE BELONGS TO HIM], for a Master said that a father takes precedence over all his lineal descendants.[46]

HE WHO MARRIES HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE etc. What is the reason? — The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,[47] and behold he[48] has succeeded.

R. JUDAH SAID etc. Said ‘Ulla: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah, and R. Isaac Nappaha likewise said: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah.

‘Ulla, furthermore, (others say, R. Isaac Nappaha) said: What is R. Judah's reason? — Because it is written in Scripture, And it shall be, that the firstborn that he beareth,[49] [he is] like the firstborn; as the firstborn has nothing while his father is alive, so has this one[50] also nothing while his father is alive. If [one were to suggest that] as the firstborn receives a double portion after his father's death so shall this one also receive a double portion[51] after his father's death, [it might be retorted]: Is it written, ‘Shall succeed in the name of his father’? It is written, surely, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,[52] not ‘in the name of his father’.[53] Might it be suggested that, where the father is not alive to receive the inheritance,[54] the law of the levirate marriage should be carried out, but where the father is alive [and the levir] does not receive the inheritance the law of the levirate marriage shall not be carried out? — Has the All Merciful in any way made the levirate marriage dependent on the inheritance? The levir must contract the levirate marriage in any case, and if any inheritance is available he receives it; if not, he does not receive it.

The Bible teacher, R. Hanina, once sat before R. Jannai, and as he sat there he stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Judah. The other called out to him: Go out, read Biblical verses outside;[55] the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.

A tanna recited in the presence of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah. The other said to him: In agreement with whom, then? In agreement with the Rabbis? This is surely obvious, [since in a dispute between] one individual and a majority the halachah is in agreement with the majority! — ‘Shall I’, the first asked him, ‘reject it’?[56] ‘No’, the other replied, ‘you were taught [that] the halachah is [in agreement with R. Judah] which, presenting to you a difficulty,[57] you reversed;[58] and in so far as you reversed it your wording is well justified.[59]

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR PARTICIPATED IN HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES:[60]

(16) The first clause of the Baraitha cited.
(17) Analogous to those in the first clause.
(18) Acting (a) with, and (b) without the intention of fulfilling the commandment, which are the alternatives in the case of the levirate marriage in the first clause, are obviously inapplicable here, since whatever be the motive of one's eating, no prohibition, such as is the case with levirate marriages, is thereby infringed.
(19) As the two alternatives.
(20) When eating is prohibited.
(21) V. Glos.
(22) And whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from his people (Lev. XXIII, 29). An excessive meal being injurious to the body is deemed to be an affliction. Now, since such a meal is not regarded as eating in the case of the Day of Atonement, how could it be regarded as proper eating in the case of a meal offering?
(23) As the two alternatives.
(24) The meal-offering.

(26) That of the priests, the remnants of the meal-offering.
(27) חלוט(rt. to mix’), a paste prepared by stirring flour in hot water.
(28) And is not forbidden at all.
(29) Take the meal-offering . . . and eat it without leaven (Lev. X, 12); what need then was there for repeating the same prohibition in Lev. VI, 9?
(30) The eating of the meal-offering with leaven is not one of the alternatives.
(31) The dumpling.
(32) In the first clause of the Baraitha cited.
(33) Lit., ‘to prevent’. A meal-offering may not be prepared in the form of a dumpling even though that paste is unleavened.
(34) Since a meal-offering which must be unleavened may not be prepared in the form of a dumpling.
(35) Of eating unleavened bread. Cf. Ex. XII, 18.

(56) As a superfluous addition.
(57) How could the halachah be in agreement with an individual against the rule of a majority?
(58) Stating, 'the halachah is not in agreement with R. Judah.
(59) Lit., 'you reversed well'. [He, however, forgot that he had reversed it; cf, supra 33b, v. Strashun].
(60) All relatives that are Biblically forbidden to husband and wife respectively are Rabbinically forbidden to levir and haluzah respectively.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 40b

HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER, HER MOTHER'S MOTHER AND HER FATHER S MOTHER; HER DAUGHTER, HER DAUGHTER'S DAUGHTER AND HER SON'S DAUGHTER; AND ALSO HER SISTER WHILE SHE[1] IS ALIVE. THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED.[2] SHE[1] IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER;[3] HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON; HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON.

A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH BUT IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH.

GEMARA. The question was raised: Were relatives of the second degree[4] forbidden[5] in the case of a haluzah as a preventive measure,[6] or not? Did the Rabbis forbid marriage with relatives of the second degree, as a preventive measure,[6] only in respect of a relative who is pentateuchally forbidden,[7] but in respect of a haluzah[8] the Rabbis did not forbid relatives of the second degree as a preventive measure, or is there perhaps no difference?[9] — Come and hear: HE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HER MOTHER AND HER MOTHER'S MOTHER, but 'her mother's mother's mother' is not mentioned![10] [No.] It is possible that the reason why this relative was omitted[11] is because it was desired to state in the final clause, THE OTHER BROTHERS, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED, and, were 'her mother's mother's mother' also mentioned it might have been presumed that the brothers are permitted [to marry] her mother's mother's mother only[12] but not her mother's mother or her mother.[13] Then let 'her mother's mother's mother' be mentioned, and let it also be stated: The brothers are permitted to marry all of them![14] — This is a difficulty.

Come and hear: SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY HIS FATHER AND HIS FATHER'S FATHER. 'His father's father,' at any rate, was mentioned. Is not this[15] due to[16] the levir who participated in the halizah, through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his[17] son?[18] — No; this[19] is due to the deceased through whom she is the daughter-in-law of his[20] son.[21]

Come and hear: AND HIS SON'S SON, Is not this[19] due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is the wife of his[22] father's father?[18] — No; it[19] is due to the deceased through whom she is his[22] father's father's brother's wife.[21] But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife![23] — Amemar interprets that[24] to refer to the son of the grandfather.[25] If so, [HIS SON, AND SON'S SON] are the same as HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON![26] — Both his paternal brother and his maternal brother were specified.[27]

Come and hear what R. Hiyya taught:[28] Four [categories of relatives are forbidden][29] Pentateuchally[30] and four Rabbinically.[31] His[32] father and his[33] son, his[34] brother and his[35] brother's son are Pentateuchally forbidden;[30] his father's father[36] and his mother's father,[37] his son's son[38] and his daughter's son[39] are forbidden Rabbinically.[40] ‘His father's father’, at any rate, is mentioned here. Is not this[41] due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his son's daughter-in-law?[42] — No; it[41] is due to the deceased[43] whose son's daughter-in-law she is.

Come and hear: ‘His mother's father’.[44] Is not this[41] due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his[45] daughter's daughter-in-law?[46] — No; it[41] is due to the deceased[47] through whom she is his[45] daughter's daughter-in-law.

Come and hear: ‘And his son's son’.[48] Is not this[41] due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife?[42] — No; it[41] is due to the deceased[47] through whom she is his father's father's brother's wife. But, surely, Amemar permitted the marriage of one's father's father's brother's wife![49] — Amemar explains that[50] to be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,[51] but is of the opinion that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in respect of a haluzah.[52]

Come and hear: ‘And the son of his daughter’.[48] Is not this[41] due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his mother's father's wife?[42] — No; it[41] is due to the deceased[47] through whom she is his mother's father's brother's wife. But, surely, no prohibition as a preventive measure was made in respect of the second degrees of incest![53] Consequently[54] it must be due to the levir who participated in the halizah,[55] and thus it may be inferred that relatives of the second degree were forbidden as a preventive measure even in the case of a haluzah. This proves it.

A MAN IS PERMITTED etc. R. Tobi b. Kisna said in the name of Samuel: Where a man had intercourse with the rival of his haluzah the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. What is the reason? — Because she[56] remains under her original prohibition.[57]

Said R. Joseph: We also have learned [to the same effect]: A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH. Now, if you grant that the rival is excluded[58] one can well understand why the man is permitted to marry her sister.[59] If it be maintained, however, that the rival has the same status as the haluzah, why [should her sister] be permitted [to him]?[60]

May it be suggested that this[61] furnishes an objection against R. Johanan who stated: Neither he[62] nor the other brothers are subject to kareth either for [the betrothal of] a haluzah or for [the betrothal of] her rival?[63] — R. Johanan can answer you: Do you understand it![64] Is the sister of a haluzah Pentateuchally forbidden?[65] Surely Resh Lakish said: Here[66] it was taught by Rabbi that the prohibition to marry the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical![67]

Why is there a difference [in the law] between the one and the other?[68]

---

(1) The haluzah (v. Glos.).

(2) To marry the enumerated relatives of the haluzah.

(3) Bomberg ed. adds, ‘and his mother's father’.

(4) E.g., the haluzah's mother's mother's mother or her father's mother's mother (Rashi). Cf. supra 21a.

(5) Rabbinically.

(6) Against marriage with relatives of the first degree.

(7) I.e. ‘ a wife's relatives whose prohibition is specifically stated in the Pentateuch.

(8) Whose relatives, even of the first degree, are only Rabbinically forbidden.

(9) In respect of the law of incest, between the relatives of a wife who are Pentateuchally forbidden and those of a haluzah who are only Rabbinically forbidden.

(10) V. supra p. 259, n. 9.

(11) Lit., ‘that he did not teach’.

(12) Because even in the case of one's wife she is not Biblically forbidden.

(13) Who, in the case of one's wife, are Pentateuchally prohibited.

(14) And the possible misinterpretation would thus be avoided.

(15) Prohibition to marry a father's father.

(16) Lit., ‘what not, owing to’.

(17) The father's father.

(18) I.e., a relative of the second degree, which proves that even such relatives were forbidden in respect of a haluzah.

(19) V. supra note 9.

(20) V. supra n. 20.

(21) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal and provides no answer to our enquiry.

(22) The son's son.

(23) Supra 21b. How, then, according to Amemar, could this case be included among forbidden relatives?

(24) The SON'S SON in our Mishnah.

(25) The father of both the deceased and of the levir who submitted to the halizah. Our Mishnah is thus interpreted: HIS FATHER is the father of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the halizah; HIS SON, i.e., the son of the FATHER mentioned, who is the brother of the deceased and of the levir who participated in the halizah; and HIS SON'S SON is the son of the son of the father mentioned, to whom the haluzah is forbidden as the wife of his father's brother.

(26) V. supra n. 1.

(27) The former by HIS SON AND HIS SON'S SON (v. supra n. 1) and the latter by HIS BROTHER AND HIS BROTHER'S SON, the prohibitions being Pentateuchal since they are due to the woman's relationship with the deceased as his wife, and not to her relationship with the levir as haluzah, the prohibitions resulting from which could only be Rabbinical.

(28) In respect of a haluzah.

(29) To marry her.

(30) Lit., ‘from the words of the Torah’, i.e., owing to their relationship to the haluzah as the wife of the deceased, and the prohibition to marry whom is specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch.

(31) Lit., ‘from the words of the Scribes’.

(32) The levir's (who participated in the halizah). The prohibition is Pentateuchal, it being due to his brother, the deceased, whose wife and whose father's daughter-in-law the haluzah was.

(33) The levir's (v. supra n. 8). The haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally as the wife of his father's brother.

(34) The levir's (v. supra n. 8), who is also the brother of the deceased, and the haluzah is forbidden to him Pentateuchally.

(35) The levir's (v supra n. 8), the deceased also having been his father's brother, and the prohibition is consequently Pentateuchal.

(36) To whom the haluzah is forbidden as his son's daughter-in-law.

(37) The prohibition being that of one's daughter's daughter-in-law.

(38) It is now assumed that the prohibition to marry this relative is due to the levir who participated in the halizah through whom she is his father's father's wife.

(39) Whose mother's father's wife she was.

(40) Cf. supra note 7, all being cases of the second degree, forbidden by a provision of the Rabbis only.

(41) The prohibition to marry this relative.

(42) Which proves that, even in respect of a haluzah, relatives of the second degree are prohibited.

(43) In whose case the prohibition is Pentateuchal, and supplies no answer to our enquiry.

(44) This is a citation from R. Hiyya's Baraitha supra.

(45) His mother's father's.

(46) V. supra n. 2.

(47) The prohibition being a preventive measure against the infringement of a Pentateuchal law. Consequently it supplies no proof in respect of our enquiry which is concerned with a preventive measure against an infringement of a Rabbinical law.

(48) V. supra n. 4.

(49) How then could such a case be included among forbidden relatives?

(50) ‘Son's son’ in R. Hiyya's Baraitha.

(51) The prohibition being that of ‘his father's father's wife’, as first assumed.

(52) According to those, however, who, contrary to the opinion of Amemar, forbid marriage with a father's father's brother's wife, the prohibition in R. Hiyya's Baraitha might still be attributed to the deceased (v. supra n. 7), and the original enquiry as to whether relatives of the second degree were forbidden in the case of a haluzah still remains unanswered.

(53) How then could it be suggested that the prohibition is due to the fact that the haluzah is the ‘wife of the mother's father's brother’ of the deceased?

(54) Lit., ‘what, not’?

(55) The prohibition being that of ‘his mother's father's wife’ who is a relative of the second degree.

(56) The rival.

(57) Of ‘brother's wife’, which is subject to the penalty of kareth. Children born from a union that is forbidden under such a penalty are deemed to be bastards.

(58) [Lit., ‘outside’. Rashi reads: ‘Stands outside’.] From the restrictions of the haluzah, the latter not being regarded as her agent or representative.

(59) Since she herself remains forbidden to the levir as ‘brother's wife’, her sister is not the ‘sister of a haluzah’.

(60) She should be forbidden as the sister of a haluzah! As she is permitted, however, it must be granted that the rival of a haluzah remains under the original prohibition of ‘brother's wife’, which entails the penalty of kareth. (V. supra n. 5).

(61) The inference from our Mishnah. (V. supra n. 8 second clause).

(62) The levir who submitted to halizah.

(63) Supra 10b; while from the inference of our Mishnah, as has been proved, the penalty for contracting a union with the rival of a haluzah is kareth!

(64) R. Joseph's argument.

(65) As R. Joseph implies by his assumption that if the rival had the same status as the haluzah her sister would be forbidden.

(66) In the following Mishnah to which he refers.

(67) The reason why the sister of a rival of a haluzah is permitted is not that assumed by R. Joseph. but the following: As the prohibition of the sister of a haluzah herself is only Rabbinical, the prohibition was not extended to the sister of the rival of the haluzah also.

(68) The first and second case of the final clause of our Mishnah. THE RIVAL OF THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is surely as much of a stranger to him as THE RELATIVE OF THE RIVAL OF HIS HALUZAH.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41a

— The Rabbis have enacted a preventive measure[1] in respect of her who accompanies the haluzah to court;[2] in the case, however, of her who does not accompany her to court[3] the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.[4]

MISHNAH. WHERE HE PARTICIPATED IN A HALIZAH WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE, AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED,[5] THE WIDOW[6] MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[7]

SIMILARLY[8] WHERE A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND HIS BROTHER MARRIED HER SISTER AND DIED[5] THE WIDOW IS EXEMPT.[9]

IF A BROTHER OF THE LEVIR HAD BETROTHED THE SISTER OF THE WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR S DECISION, HE IS TOLD, SO IT HAS BEEN STATED IN THE NAME OF R. JUDAH B. BATHYRA, WAIT[10] UNTIL YOUR BROTHER HAS ACTED’.[11] IF

HIS BROTHER HAS PARTICIPATED WITH THE WIDOW IN THE HALIZAH OR CONTRACTED WITH HER THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, HE MAY MARRY HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE. IF THE SISTER-IN-LAW DIED HE MAY ALSO MARRY HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE. BUT IF THE LEVIR DIED, HE[12] MUST RELEASE HIS [BETROTHED] WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.[13]

GEMARA. What [is meant by] SIMILARLY?[14] — Read: BUT WHERE A MAN DIVORCED.

Resh Lakish said: Here[15] it was taught by Rabbi[16] that [the prohibition to marry the] sister of a divorced wife is pentateuchal [and that of] the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical.

HAD BETROTHED [THE SISTER OF THE] WIDOW WHO WAS AWAITING THE LEVIR'S DECISION etc. Samuel said: The halachah is in agreement with the view of R. Judah b. Bathyra.[17]

The question was raised: If his wife[18] died may he marry his sister-in-law?[19] — Both Rab and R. Hanina stated: If his wife died he is permitted to marry his sister-in-law. But both Samuel and R. Assi stated: If his wife died he is forbidden to marry his sister-in-law. Said Raba: What is Rab's reason? — Because she is a deceased brother's wife who was permitted[20] then forbidden[21] and then again permitted[22] and who consequently reverts to her first state of permissibility.

R. Hamnuna raised an objection: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters’ husbands died the unmarried brother addressed to the widow a ma'amar, and then the second brother[23] died,[24] and after him his wife also died,[25] that sister-in-law must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.[26] But why?[27] Let her be regarded[28] as a deceased brother's wife who was permitted[29] then forbidden,[30] and then again permitted[22] who reverts to her former state of permissibility![31] He remained silent. After the other went out he said: I should have told[32] him that it[33] represents the view of R. Eleazar who maintains that once she has been forbidden to him for one moment she is forbidden to him for ever! Subsequently he remarked: It might be contended that R. Eleazar held that view only where she was not fit[34] at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage;[35] did he express such an opinion, however, in the case where she was fit[34] at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage?[36] Subsequently however, he said: Yes,[37] for, surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar said: If his[38] yebamah died, his wife is permitted to him; if his wife died, that yebamah must perform halizah but may not be taken in levirate marriage.

Must it then be assumed that Samuel and R. Assi are of the same opinion as R. Eleazar?[39] — The may be said to be in agreement even with the Rabbis. For the Rabbis differed from R. Eleazar[40] only because from the time she became subject to the levirate marriage and onward she was no longer forbidden to him.[41] Here,[42] however,where she was so forbidden[43] even the Rabbis agree.[44]

MISHNAH. THE DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE[45] SHALL NEITHER PERFORM THE HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED.[46] SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN[47] SHALL BE NEITHER BETROTHED NOR MARRIED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED[46] WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS, WHETHER DIVORCEES OR WIDOWS,[48] WHETHER MARRIED OR BETROTHED.

R. JUDAH SAID: THOSE WHO WERE MARRIED MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH], AND THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED [FORTHWITH], WITH THE EXCEPTION OF THE BETROTHED WOMEN IN JUDAEA, BECAUSE THERE THE BRIDEGROOM WAS TOO INTlmate[49] WITH HIS BRIDE.[50]

R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN[51] MAY BE BETROTHED [FORTHWITH] EXCEPTING THE WIDOW[52]

(1) The prohibition to marry the rival of the relative of one's Haluzah.

(2) I.e., her sister whom she takes with her to court when she goes to perform the halizah. The public, not being aware which of the sisters is the haluzah, might subsequently mistake the one for the other. Hence the rival of the sister was forbidden to the levir who participated in the halizah in order that people might not think that he married the rival of the haluzah herself.

(3) The widow does not take her rival with her when she goes to court to perform halizah.

(4) Since no one is likely to mistake the rival for the haluzah. Hence the law that the relative of the rival is permitted.

(5) Without issue.

(6) Being the sister of a haluzah.

(7) The sister of a haluzah is (a) Pentateuchally permitted but (b) Rabbinically forbidden. Because of (a) she is subjected to the levirate bond and requires halizah, and because of (b) she is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage.

(8) This expression is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(9) From the halizah as well as from the levirate marriage. The sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchally forbidden to the divorcee.

(10) With the consummation of the marriage.

(11) I.e., until he had either contracted the levirate marriage or submitted to halizah. Before such action the sister of the widow is forbidden to him, as to all the other brothers, as the sister of their zekukah.

(12) Being the only surviving brother and, consequently, the only one to whom the widow is subject.

(13) Being the sister of his divorced wife she is not permitted to contract with him the levirate marriage. (Cf. supra p. 264, n. 11.

(14) Seeing that the clause introduced by this expression is not at all similar to the previous one.

(15) In the first two clauses of our Mishnah,

(16) R. Judah the Prince, Redactor of the Mishnah.

(17) That the levirate bond between the widow and all the surviving brothers remains in force until one of the brothers has contracted the levirate marriage or has submitted to halizah.

(18) The sister of the widow of his deceased brother.

(19) I.e., the widow whose deceased sister is now no more his wife.

(20) When her husband died without issue.

(21) When the brother had betrothed her sister.

(22) When her sister died.

(23) Of the two who married the two sisters.

(24) And his widow, the sister of the first widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed by the third brother, had thus come under the levirate bond and consequently caused her sister's prohibition to the third brother as ‘the sister of his zekukah’.

(25) When the first widow, the surviving sister, is no more the ‘sister of his zekukah’.

(26) Cf. supra 29a.

(27) If Rab's reason as given by Raba is to be accepted, why should not the widow, now that her sister had died, be permitted to enter into levirate marriage?

(28) On the analogy of Rab's reasoning.

(29) When her husband died and the unmarried brother addressed a ma'amar to her.

(30) When the second brother, the husband of the other sister, died.

(31) Why then was it stated that she may not contract the levirate marriage and that she is restricted to halizah only?

(32) Lit., ‘why did I not tell’.

(33) The Baraitha cited by R. Hamnuna.

(34) To be married by the levir.

(35) R. Eleazar's view was expressed in connection with a woman who had been divorced (and had thus become forbidden to the levir as the ‘divorcee of his brother’), and then was remarried, and finally, on the death of her husband, became subject to the levir as the wife of his deceased childless brother (v. infra 108bf). In this case, when the widow became subject to the levirate obligations, she had been already, for a time, forbidden to the levir as the ‘divorcee of his brother’.

(36) As is the case in the Baraitha cited by R. Hamnuna. The prohibition there arose after she had become subject to the obligations of the levirate.

(37) I.e., R. Eleazar forbids levirate marriage for ever, if the widow was unfit for such a marriage for one single moment, even if at the time when she became subject to the levirate obligations she (the widow) was quite fit to contract the carriage.

(38) The levir's, who betrothed the sister of his yebamah.

(39) Who is in a minority, against that of the Rabbis. Would they agree with a minority against the ruling of the majority?

(40) In the case of a woman who had been divorced and then remarried and then became subject to the levirate obligation, infra 108b. Cf. supra p. 266, n. 16.

(41) The prohibition having ceased with the death of her husband when the obligation of the levirate had arisen.

(42) The case cited by R. Hamnuna.

(43) Because after she became subject to the levirate obligations he was for a time, owing to the death of his second brother, forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah.

(44) That only halizah must be performed, levirate marriage being forbidden.

(45) Whose husband died without issue, and who became subject to the levirate obligations.

(46) From the date of her husband's death. The reasons are discussed in the Gemara infra.

(47) Whose husbands have died.

(48) The distinctions between these classes are discussed in the Gemara.

(49) Lit., ‘his heart is bold’, and cohabitation might have taken place.

(50) Cf. Keth. 12a,

(51) Whose husbands have died.

(52) Who must allow a period of thirty days to pass.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 41b

OWING TO HER MOURNING.[1]

GEMARA. It is quite reasonable that she[2] shall not be taken [forthwith] in levirate marriage, since the child [whom she might bear] may be viable,[3] and the levir would thus infringe the prohibition of marrying a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not [forthwith] perform the halizah?[4] Does this,[5] then, present an objection against R. Johanan who said that the halizah of a pregnant woman is deemed to be a valid halizah?[6] But has not an objection against R. Johanan once been raised?[7] — [The question is whether] it may be assumed that an objection arises from here also?[8] — No; here, the reason[9] is this: The child might be viable;[10] and you would in consequence subject her to the need for an announcement[11] in respect of the priesthood.[12] Well, let her be subjected![13] — It may happen that some people would be present at the halizah but would not be present at the announcement, and they would consider her ineligible to marry a priest.

This quite satisfactorily explains the case of a widow; what can be said, however, in respect of a divorced woman?[14] — Because she would thereby[15] lose her maintenance.[16] This provides a quite satisfactory explanation in the case of a married woman; what can be said, however, in respect of a betrothed divorcee?[17] — The reason[18] is rather the ruling of[19] R. Jose. For it was taught: A man once appeared before R. Jose and said to him; ‘May halizah be performed within three months’? The master replied, ‘She must not perform the halizah’. — ‘Let her perform the halizah! What would she lose’?[20] Thereupon he recited for him this Scriptural text: If the man like not,[21] [implying] that if he likes he may contract the levirate marriage; whosoever may go up[22] to contract the levirate marriage may also go up to perform the halizah etc.[23]

R. Hinena raised an objection: In doubtful cases halizah is performed and no levirate marriage may be contracted. Now, what is meant by ‘doubtful cases’? If it be assumed to mean doubtful betrothal;[24] why, indeed, should no levirate marriage be contracted? Let the widow be taken in levirate marriage since no objection could possibly be raised![25] Consequently,[26] the doubt must consist in the betrothal of two sisters when the man is uncertain which of them he betrothed;[27] and yet it was stated that halizah was to be performed![28] — How now! There,[29] if Elijah were to come and point out the sister that was betrothed, she would be eligible for both halizah and levirate marriage;[30] here,[31] however, were Elijah to come and declare that the widow was not pregnant, would anyone heed him and allow her to contract the levirate marriage? Surely even a minor who is incapable of pregnancy must wait three months![32]

Our Rabbis taught: A yebamah[33] is maintained during the first three months out of the estate of her husband. Subsequently[34] she is not to be maintained either out of the estate of her husband or out of that of the levir. If, however, the levir appeared in court[35] and then absconded, she is maintained out of the estate of the levir. If she became subject to a levir who was a minor she receives nothing from the levir. Does she, however, [receive her maintenance] from her husband's estate? — On this question, R. Aha and Rabina are in dispute. One holds that she receives and the other holds that she does not. And the law is that she receives nothing; for her penalty comes from heaven.

Our Rabbis learned: A yebamah,[36] with whom the brothers had participated in halizah within the three months, must wait three months.[37]

---

(1) Which terminates on the thirtieth day.

(2) The deceased brother's wife spoken of in our Mishnah.

(3) And the levirate obligations would thereby be removed.

(4) Marriage with an outsider could thus take place after three months, if she is found to be without child or if she miscarried.

(5) The implication that halizah is forbidden because it is possible that the woman will miscarry after the ceremony and, believing the halizah to have been valid, would remarry without performing the ceremony again while, in fact, the law is that the halizah of a pregnant woman is not valid.

(6) Supra 35b.

(7) V. n. 11; why then doubt it?

(8) So that if the first objection should ever be removed the second would still remain.

(9) Why halizah also must be postponed until three months have passed.

(10) And his birth would render the halizah invalid, and his mother would consequently be permitted to marry a priest whom, as a haluzah, she would not have been allowed to marry.

(11) That the halizah was invalid and that the widow is eligible to marry a priest.

(12) V. p. 268 n. 15.

(13) To the necessary announcement. What loss could such an announcement cause her?

(14) I.e., who had been a divorcee prior to her marriage with the deceased brother. Having been divorced once, she is for ever ineligible to marry a priest, even though she were no haluzah. Why, then, should she be forbidden to perform the halizah forthwith?

(15) By performing the halizah before the three months have passed.

(16) Which she receives from her deceased husband's estate for a period of three months. This would cease with the performance of the halizah. [On this view the Mishnah does not state a prohibition but a piece of sound advice (Tosaf.)]

(17) A woman who has been betrothed whilst she was a divorcee and became a widow before the marriage took place. As a betrothed she is not entitled to maintenance from the dead man's estate, and as a divorcee she is not eligible to marry a priest. Why, then, should she not be allowed forthwith to perform the halizah?

(18) V. supra p. 268, n. 14.

(19) Lit., ‘because of’.

(20) Lit., ‘and what in it’.

(21) Deut. XXV, 7.

(22) Sc. to the gate (cf. loc. cit.) i.e., to court.

(23) ‘And whosoever may not go up to contract the levirate marriage may not go up to perform the halizah’ (v. supra 20a, 36a, infra 44a). Since the widow may not contract levirate marriage within three months, she may not perform halizah either. This,' however, presents no objection to R. Johanan's ruling since, though it is improper to arrange a halizah within the three months, if halizah had actually taken place it is valid.

(24) Such as are dealt with in the Mishnah and subsequent Gemara supra 30b.

(25) Lit., 'and there is nothing in it'. If the widow's betrothal by the deceased was valid, the levirate marriage is also valid; and if it was not valid, the so-called widow is in reality an unmarried woman and may be married as a stranger.

(26) Lit., 'but not?'

(27) And he died without issue.

(28) Though no levirate marriage may be contracted owing to the doubt in the case of each sister that she might be the 'sister of a zekukah'. How, then, could it be said that halizah may be performed only where levirate marriage also is possible?

(29) Where it is uncertain which sister was betrothed.

(30) Each sister may consequently be regarded as virtually fit for the levirate marriage.

(31) A widow within the first three months after her husband's death.

(32) As levirate marriage is thus absolutely forbidden for the time being, the halizah also must be postponed until the time when levirate marriage would be permitted. [Where, however, the prohibition to contract levirate marriage is absolute, as, for example, in the case of a sister of a haluzah (supra 41a) halizah may be performed (Rashi).]

(33) Who awaits halizah or levirate marriage which is not to take place before three months have passed.

(34) Lit., 'from now and onwards'.

(35) In response to the widow's claim that he should contract levirate marriage or submit to halizah.

(36) V. p. 270, n. 10.

(37) Dating from her husband's death, and may contract marriage after that period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 42a

If [the halizah was performed] after the three months, she need not wait three months.[1] Thus it may be inferred that the three months spoken of are [to be dated] from the time of the husband's death and not from the time of the levir's halizah.

Why [is the law here][2] different from that of a letter of divorce where Rab maintains [that the waiting period is to date] from the time of the delivery[3] and Samuel maintains [that it is to date] from the time of writing?[4] — Raba replied: A minori ad majus, if you permitted marriage[5] where a prohibition under the penalty of kareth is involved,[6] how much more so [should marriage be permitted[5] where only] an ordinary prohibition[7] [is involved]![8]

SIMILARLY ALL OTHER WOMEN. The case of a sister-in-law[9] one can well understand, as has just been explained,[10] but why ALL OTHER WOMEN?[11] — R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: Because Scripture said, To be a God unto thee and unto thy seed after thee,[12] a distinction must be made between the seed of the first husband and the seed of the second.

Raba raised an objection: Hence must a male proselyte and a female proselyte[13] wait three months.[14] Now, what distinction is there to be made here? — Here also there is the distinction to be made between seed that was sown in holiness and seed that was not sown in holiness.

Raba said: This[15] is a preventive measure against the possibility of his[16] marrying his paternal sister,[17] contracting levirate marriage with the wife of his maternal brother,[18] setting his mother free to marry anybody[19] and releasing his sister-in-law to all the world.[20]

R. Hanania raised an objection: In all these[21] I read a provision against incest, but here[22] it is a provision in favour of the child.[23] Now, if this[24] is tenable, all[25] would be due to a provision against incest! — The meaning of 'a provision in favour of the child' is that the child might not infringe a prohibition of incest'.[26]

It is easy to understand why [a divorcee or widow] shall not marry after waiting a period of just two months because that would create a doubt as to whether the child is a nine-months one of the first[27] or a seven-months one of the second.[27] Let her wait, however, one month only and then marry, so that, should she give birth at seven months, the child would be a seven-months one of the last husband;[28] and should she give birth at eight months the child would obviously be a nine-months one of the first![27] — Even if she gave birth at eight months it might still be assumed to be the child of the last husband since it may be that her conception was delayed one month.[29]

Let her, then, wait two months and a half and marry, so that, were she to give birth at seven months, the child would obviously be a seven-months one of the last,[27] and were she to give birth at six months and a half, the child would naturally be a nine-months one of the first;[30] for had he been the son of the last he would not be viable as a six-and-a-half-months child. — Even if she gave birth at six and a half months it is still possible to assume the child to be that of the last husband, for Mar Zutra stated: Even according to him who said that a woman who bears at nine months does not give birth before the full number of months had been completed,[30] a woman who bears at seven months ‘does give birth before the full number of months has been completed;[30] for it is stated in Scripture, And it came to pass, after the cycles of days,’[31] the minimum of ‘cycles’[32] is two, and the minimum of ‘days’ is two.[33] Let her, then, wait a little[34] and marry, and when the three months[35] will have been fulfilled she might be examined![36] — R. Safra replied: Married women are not examined, in order that they may not become repulsive to their husbands. Then let her be examined by her walk![37] — Rami b. Mama replied: A woman conceals the fact[38] in order that her child may inherit his share in her [second] husband's estate. Where, however, it has been ascertained that she[39] was pregnant, let her be permitted to marry! Why then was it taught: A man shall not marry the pregnant, or nursing wife of another;[40] and if he married, he must divorce her and never again remarry her! — This[41] is a preventive measure against the possibility of turning the foetus into a sandal.[42] If so, [this should apply in the case] of one's own wife also![43] — If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’,[44] she uses[45] an absorbent; and if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’,[46] mercy will be shewn from heaven. Here also[47] [it could be argued]: If according to him who said, ‘With an absorbent’, she uses an absorbent; if according to him who said, ‘Mercy will be shewn from heaven’, mercy will be shewn from heaven! — [The prohibition][48] is due, rather, to [the danger of abdominal] pressure.[49] If so, [this[50] applies in the case] of one's own wife also![51] — A man has consideration for his own.[52] Here also[53] one would have consideration for the child![54] — [The reason is][55] rather because a pregnant woman is usually expected to breast-feed her child [and were she to marry during pregnancy] she

(3) Of the letter of divorce to the woman.

(4) Git. 18a. Why, then, should not here also a period of three months after halizah be required to pass before the widow is allowed to remarry?

(5) Three months after the death of the husband.

(6) The marriage with the levir, where the widow gives birth to a viable child, is an act of incest which is punishable by kareth.

(7) Marriage by the widow with a stranger during pregnancy.

(8) Hence, whenever the halizah was performed three months after the husband's death, the widow may forthwith be permitted to marry.

(16) The son born from a widow or divorcee who married within the three months, and who is a nine-months child of her first husband but is assumed to be a seven-months child of the second.

(17) A daughter of the first husband from another wife, believing her to be a stranger.

(18) He, if his mother bore a son to her second husband, and that son died childless, would be contracting levirate marriage with his widow in the belief that he is the paternal brother while in fact he is his maternal brother whose wife is, therefore, forbidden to him under the penalty of kareth.

(19) Lit., ‘to the market’. Should his mother's second husband die without having had any other children his mother would be deemed to be free from the levirate obligations on the assumption that he was the son of the second husband.

(20) Lit., ‘to the market’. If his brother (the son of his mother's first husband from another wife) dies childless and is survived by no other known brother his widow would be released to marry any stranger on the assumption that he had no surviving brother, while in reality the widow is bound to him by the levirate bond.

might conceive again, her milk would become turbid, and she might thereby[1] cause the death of the child. If so, [this applies in the case] of the man's own child also! — His own child she would sustain with eggs and milk. Would she not sustain her own child also with eggs and with milk? — Her husband would not give her the means. Let her claim it[2] from the heirs![3] — Abaye replied: A woman would shrink from going to court[4] and would rather let her child die.

WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS. Who are the VIRGINS and who are the BETROTHED?[5] Who are NON-VIRGINS and who are MARRIED women?[6] — Rab Judah replied, It is this that was meant: WHETHER VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS who became widows or were divorced[7] either after betrothal or after marriage.[8]

R. Eleazar did not go one day[9] to the Beth Hamidrash. On meeting R. Assi he asked him, ‘What did the Rabbis discourse at the Beth Hamidrash’? The other replied ‘Thus said R. Johanan: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose’.[10] — Does this, then, imply that only individual opinion[11] is against him?[12] — Yes; and so it was taught: A [married woman] who was always anxious[13] to spend her time[14] at her paternal home,[15] or who had some angry quarrel at her husband's home,[16] or whose husband was in prison[17] or was old or infirm,[16] or who was herself infirm,[18] or had miscarried after the death of her husband, or was barren, old, a minor, incapable of conception or in any other way incapacitated from procreation, must[19] wait three months.[20] These are the words of R. Meir. R. Judah[21] permits immediate betrothal and marriage.[22]

R. Hiyya b. Abba said: R. Johanan retracted.[23] Said R. Joseph: If he retracted, he did so on account of what has been taught at the Vineyard.[24] For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: I heard from the mouth of the Sages in the Vineyard of Jabneh that all women must wait three months.[25]

Said R. Jeremiah to R. Zerika: When you visit R. Abbahu point out to him the following contradiction: Could R. Johanan have said, ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose’ seeing that he stated elsewhere ‘the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah’,[26] and we learned, ALL OTHER WOMEN SHALL BE NEITHER MARRIED NOR BETROTHED BEFORE THREE MONTHS HAVE PASSED, WHETHER THEY WERE VIRGINS OR NON-VIRGINS![27] The other replied, ‘The one who pointed out to you this contradiction did not care much for [the quality of] flour.[28] This is an anonymous Mishnah that was followed by a dispute,[29] where the halachah does not agree with the anonymous Mishnah; for R. Papa or, some say, R. Johanan stated: When a disputed ruling is followed by an anonymous one,[30] the halachah is in agreement with the anonymous ruling; when, however, an anonymous ruling is followed by a dispute,[31] the halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous ruling.

R. Abbahu once walked leaning upon the shoulder of his attendant,[32] R. Nahum, whilst gathering from him information as to traditional rulings.[33] He inquired of him: What [is the halachah] where a dispute is followed by an anonymous statement? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement, ‘What [is the halachah’, the first enquired, ‘when] an anonymous statement is followed by a dispute’? The other replied: The halachah is not in agreement with the anonymous statement. ‘What if the anonymous statement occurs in a Mishnah and the dispute in a Baraitha’? The other replied: The halachah is in agreement with the anonymous statement. ‘What if the dispute is in the Mishnah and the anonymous statement in the Baraitha'? The other replied:

If Rabbi[1] has not taught it,[2] whence would R. Hiyya[3] know it! The first said to him: Surely we learned: A hackle for flax, whose teeth were broken off and two remained, is [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness, but [if only] one [tooth remained,[4] it is levitically] clean.[5] All the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually [susceptible to levitical] uncleanness.[6] A wool [comb] whose alternate teeth[7] are broken off is levitically clean.[8] If three consecutive[9] teeth, however, remained, it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness. If one of these was a side tooth,[10] [the comb] is levitically clean.[11] If two [teeth] were removed and someone used them as pincers, they are susceptible to levitical uncleanness. One [tooth also] that was adopted for [snuffing] the light,[12] or as a spool,[13] is susceptible to levitical uncleanness.[14] And we have it as a traditional ruling that the halachah is not in agreement with this Mishnah![15] — The other replied, ‘With the exception of this;[16] for both R. Johanan and Resh Lakish stated: This is not [an authoritative] Mishnah’.

What is the reason? — R. Huna b. Manoah replied in the name of R. Idi son of R. Ika: Because the first clause is in contradiction to the second one. For at first it was stated that ‘a wool comb whose alternate teeth are missing is levitically clean’ from which it follows that if two consecutive teeth did remain it would be susceptible to uncleanness, while immediately afterwards it was stated, ‘If three consecutive teeth, however, remained it is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ from which it follows that only three but not two! — What difficulty is this? It is possible that one[17] refers to the internal,[18] and the other[19] the external teeth![20]

The contradiction, however, arises from the following.[21] It was taught first, ‘all the teeth, however, if they were removed one by one are individually susceptible to levitical uncleanness’ [implying], even though each tooth was not adapted [for the purpose] . Now read the final clause: ‘One tooth that was adapted for snuffing the light, or as a spool, is susceptible to levitical uncleanness’, [implying,] only when he adapted it but not when he did not adapt it! — Abaye replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one [refers to a tooth] with a handle[22] and the other [to a tooth] without a handle! R. Papa replied: What is the difficulty? It is possible that the one refers to small,[23] and the other to thick teeth.[24] [The reason][25] is rather because accurate scholars add this conclusion: ‘These are the words of R. Simeon’.[26]

R. Hiyya b. Abin sent the following message: Betrothal may take place within the three months, and the practice [of the Sages][27] is also in accordance with this ruling. And R. Eleazar, too, taught us the same law in the name of R. Hanina the Great: The greater part of the first month, the greater part of the third one, and the full middle month.[28]

Amemar permitted betrothal on the ninetieth day.[29] Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, both Rab and Samuel stated that the widow must wait three months exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day of her betrothal! — This ruling was stated in connection with a nursing mother; for both Rab and Samuel stated: She must wait twenty-four exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day of her betrothal.[30] Did not, however, a man once arrange a betrothal feast on the ninetieth days[31] and Raba spoilt his feast![32] — That was a wedding feast.

The law is that [a nursing mother] must wait twenty-four months, exclusive of the day on which the child was born and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed. Similarly. One [who is not a nursing mother] must wait three months, exclusive of the day on which her husband died and exclusive of the day on which she is to be betrothed.

EXCEPTING THE WIDOW etc. R. Hisda said: [Cannot the law[33] be deduced by inference] from major to minor?[34] If when washing of clothes is forbidden,[35] betrothal is permitted, how much more should betrothal be permitted when the washing of clothes is permitted![36] What is it?[37] — We learned: During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair and to wash clothes. On the Thursday, however, this is permitted in honour of the Sabbath.[38] And [in connection with this Mishnah] it was taught: Before this time[39] the public must restrict their activities in commerce, building and plantings but it is permissible to betroth though not to marry, nor may any betrothal feast be held![40] — That was taught in respect of the period before that time.[41] Said Raba, Even in respect of the 'period before that time'[42] [the law might be arrived at by inference from] major to minor: If where it is forbidden to trade it is permitted to betroth,how much more should betrothal be permitted where trade also is permitted! — Do not read, R. JOSE SAID: ALL [MARRIED] WOMEN[43] MAY BE BETROTHED but read, 'ALL MARRIED WOMEN[43] may be married'.[44]

(20) Two of which are useless. A wool comb had two sets of teeth, external and internal. The former were used for the main work, and no less than three were required. The latter served only the purpose of holding up the wool, and two of these were quite sufficient for that purpose. (44) R. Jose's disagreement with R. Judah has no bearing on the question of marriage during mourning on which R. Judah and R. Jose are in agreement, the former also admitting that no marriage may be celebrated during the mourning period. R. Jose's disagreement relates to the general question of the remarriage of a married woman within three months after her husband died (or divorced her). While R. Judah permits a married woman within three months betrothal only, but not marriage, R. Jose permits marriage also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 43b

Does not R. Jose, then, hold the view that it is necessary to make a distinction?[1] — If you wish I might say[2] that he does not. And if you prefer I might say that he does,in fact, hold [this view],[3] but read, 'R. Jose said: All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'.[4] If so, it[5] is the same view as that of R. Judah![6] — The point at issue between them is the question of the betrothal[7] of a married woman. R. Judah maintains that a married woman may be betrothed,[7] while R. Jose maintains that a married woman may not be betrothed.[7] But is R. Jose of the opinion that a married woman is forbidden betrothal?[7] Surely it was taught, 'R. Jose said: All women[8] may be betrothed,[7] excepting the widow, owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And all these must not marry before three months have passed'! — What an objection is this![9] If it be argued: Because it was stated, 'R. Jose said: All women may be betrothed', is this [it may be retorted] of greater force than our Mishnah? As that was interpreted to mean that 'betrothed women who were divorced may be married' so here also [it might be interpreted to mean], 'All betrothed women who were divorced may be married'! — [The objection,] however, [arises from] the final clause where it was stated, 'And all these must not marry before three months have passed', [implying that] only marriage is forbidden to them but they may well be betrothed![10] — Raba replied: Explain and reconstruct it[11] as follows:[12] R. Jose said: Betrothed women who were divorced may be married, excepting the widow owing to her mourning. And how long does her mourning continue? Thirty days. And married women may not be betrothed before three months have passed.[13] But is any mourning to be observed by an erusin[14] widow? Surely R. Hiyya b. Ammi taught: In the case of a betrothed wife,[15] the husband is neither subject to the laws of onan[16] nor may he defile himself[17] for her;[18] and she, [in his case,] is likewise not subject to the laws of onan[16] nor may she defile herself for him;[19] if she dies he does not inherit from her, though if he dies she collects her kethubah![20] — The fact, however, is that this[21] is a question in dispute between[22] Tannaim. For it was taught: From the first day of the month[23] until the fast,[24] the public must restrict their activities in trade, building and planting, and no betrothals or marriages may take place.[25] During the week in which the Ninth of Ab occurs it is forbidden to cut the hair, to wash clothes;[26] and others say that this is forbidden during the entire month.[27] R. Ashi demurred: Whence is it proved that betrothal means actual betrothal! Is it not possible that it is only forbidden to give[28] a betrothal feast but that betrothal itself is permitted?[29] — If so, does 'no marriage may take place' also mean that the giving of a wedding feast is forbidden but marriage itself is permitted! — How now! In the case of a marriage without a feast there is still sufficient rejoicing;[30] in the case of betrothal, however, is there any rejoicing when no feast is held?[31] The fact is, said R. Ashi, that recent mourning[32] is different from ancient mourning,[33] and public mourning[33] is different from private mourning.[34] MISHNAH. (1) Between a child of the first, and one of the second husband. (V. supra 42a). If he does, how could he permit marriage within the three months?

(2) V. Bah a.l. Wanting in cur. edd.

(3) He admits the necessity for a distinction between the children of the two husbands.

(4) Forthwith. In such cases the question of pregnancy does not arise. Hence, immediate marriage is permitted except in the case of mourning (v. our Mishnah final clause).

(5) R. Jose's view.

(6) Who stated, THOSE WHO WERE BETROTHED MAY EVEN BE MARRIED FORTHWITH.

(7) Forthwith.

(8) Even married women.

(9) The point of the objection is explained infra.

(10) How, then, could R. Jose say here that betrothal is forbidden.

(11) The second Baraitha cited.

(12) Lit., ‘and say thus’.

(13) R. Jose in the Baraitha, in thus forbidding betrothal, advances the same opinion as R. Jose in our Mishnah in accordance with the interpretation supra.

(14) V. Glos.

(15) Before her marriage has taken place.

(16) A mourner for certain relatives prior to their burial (v. Glos.) who is subject to a number of restrictions.

(17) If he is a priest who is forbidden to come in contact with dead bodies except those of very near relatives among whom a wife is included. Aliter: ‘nor need he defile himself’; v. supra 29b.

(18) A ‘betrothed wife’ not being regarded as being as near of kin as a married wife.

(19) During a festival when Israelites and women (and not only priests) are forbidden to attend on a dead body (unless they are engaged in its burial) if they are not near relatives (cf. R.H. 16b). Others render, ‘nor need she . . . him’. (V. Rashi a.l. and Tosaf. supra 29b s.v.).

(20) V. Glos. in a case where the document was given to her at the betrothal. Supra 29b, B.M. 18a, Keth. 53a. The reference in the Mishnah hence cannot be to an erusin widow but to the prohibition of the betrothal of a widow within thirty days, which brings us back to the original question of R. Hisda.

(21) Whether betrothal is forbidden or permitted before the Fast of Ab.

(22) Lit., ‘but it’.

(23) Of Ab.

(24) On the ninth of the month.

(25) Ta'an. 26b.

(26) Cut. edd. insert in parentheses, ‘and it is forbidden to betroth’.

(27) Ta'an. 29b. The Tanna of this Baraitha thus forbids betrothal before the Ninth of Ab though the Tanna of the Baraitha previously cited (supra 43a) permits it. The objection against R. Jose raised by R. Hisda from the first Baraitha is, therefore, untenable, since R. Jose may disagree with that Tanna and follow the view of the one in the second Baraitha, who forbids betrothal. R. Jose's statement in our Mishnah may consequently be read and interpreted as originally assumed, viz., that ALL (MARRIED) WOMEN MAY BE BETROTHED, the point at issue between him and R. Judah being the question of mourning during which in the opinion of the first betrothal is, and in the opinion of the latter is not forbidden.

(28) Lit., ‘to make’.

(29) Cf. infra note 10.

(30) Hence it is quite conceivable that marriage, even though no wedding feast is held, should be forbidden.

(31) It is quite possible, therefore, that the ‘betrothal’ forbidden is only one celebrated with the holding of a festive meal, while betrothal alone is permitted. The second Baraitha would thus be in agreement with the first. How, then, could R. Jose, contrary to the rulings of the two Baraithas maintain that betrothal during mourning is forbidden?

(32) After a personal bereavement.
(33) That before the Fast of Ab in commemoration of historical events.
(34) Personal and recent grief is more poignant, and is subject to more stringent regulations than those of public mourning which is less rigid. Hence there need be no contradiction between R. Jose's ruling concerning the prohibition of betrothal during the widow's personal mourning and the permission of betrothal in the Baraithas which speak of public mourning. Consequently the assumption that the two Baraithas are in disagreement and that R. Jose follows the latter is no longer necessary. Both Baraithas, in fact, may permit betrothal before the Fast of Ab, and R. Jose also may share the same view.
(35) Surviving brother; v. Gemara.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44a

IF ONE OF THESE, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE[1] AND THE OTHER INELIGIBLE,[1] THEN IF HE[2] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH IT MUST BE FROM HER WHO IS INELIGIBLE,[3] AND IF HE CONTRACTS LEVIRATE MARRIAGE IT MAY BE EVEN WITH HER WHO IS ELIGIBLE.

GEMARA. FOUR BROTHERS? Is this conceivable![4] — Read, FOUR of the BROTHERS.

MAY. And is he allowed?[5] Surely it was taught: Then the elder's of his city shall call him,[6] ‘they’ but not their representative; ‘and speak unto him’[6] teaches that he is given suitable advice. If he,[2] for instance, was young and she[7] old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, ‘What would you with[8] a young woman’? or ‘What would you with an old woman’? ‘Go to one who is [of the same age] as yourself and create no strife in your house’![9] — This is applicable to that case only where he can afford it.[10] If so, even more wives also![11] — Sound advice was given: Only four but no more, so that each may receive one marital visit a month.[12]

WHERE A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED etc. Let him contract levirate marriage with both! — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, That doth not build up his brother's house,[13] he builds one house[14] but does not build two houses. Then let him submit to halizah from both of them! — Mar Zutra b. Tobia replied: Scripture stated, The house of him who had his shoe drawn off,[15] he submits to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of one house but must not submit to the drawing off of the shoe in respect of two houses. Then let him submit to halizah[16] from one and contract levirate marriage with the other! — Scripture stated, That doth not build,[17] as he has not built[18] he must never again build. Then let him contract levirate marriage with one and submit to halizah from the other! — Scripture states, If he like not,[19] if, however, he liked, he may contract levirate marriage; whosoever may go up[20] to contract levirate marriage, may also go up to perform halizah and whosoever may not go up[17] to contract levirate marriage[21] may not go up to perform halizah. Furthermore, in order that it be not said that the same house[22] is partially ‘built’ and partially ‘drawn off’. But let them say! — If he had first contracted levirate marriage and then submitted to halizah this would have been so indeed;[23] it is possible, however, that he may submit to halizah and subsequently contract levirate marriage and thus place himself under the prohibition of that doth not build.[24]

Might it be suggested that where there is only one,[25] the law of the levirate marriage shall be observed, but that where there are two, the law of levirate marriage shall not be observed! — If so, what need was there for the All Merciful to prohibit marriage with the rival of a forbidden relative? If any two rivals,it has been said, are not both subject to halizah and the levirate marriage, was there any need [to mention the exemption of] a rival of a forbidden relative! Why not? It is certainly needed! For it might have been assumed that the forbidden relative stands excluded, and her rival may, therefore, be taken in levirate marriage, hence it was taught that she also was forbidden! — But in fact [this is the proper explanation:] The repetition of his brother's wife[26] widened the scope.[27]

IF ONE OF THEM, HOWEVER, WAS ELIGIBLE. Said R. Joseph: Here[28] it was taught by Rabbi[29] that a man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it.[30]

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE,[31] OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH, OR MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH MUST DIVORCE HER, AND THE CHILD[32] IS A BASTARD; THESE ARE THE WORDS OF R. AKIBA. BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE CHILD IS NOT A BASTARD. THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHERE A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD[32] IS A BASTARD.

GEMARA. Does R. Akiba hold the view that the child of a man who MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH is a bastard? Surely Resh Lakish stated: Here[33] it was taught by Rabbi[34] [that the prohibition to marry] the sister of a divorced wife is Pentateuchal and that that of the sister of a haluzah is Rabbinical![35] — Read,[36] THE RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee. This view may also logically be supported. For it was stated in the final clause, THEY AGREE, HOWEVER, THAT WHEN A MAN MARRIED THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE THE CHILD IS A BASTARD. Now, if you grant that her case[37] was under discussion one can well see the reason why the expression of THEY AGREE had been used; if you contend, however, that her case[37] was not under discussion what is the purport of THEY AGREE?[38]

Is it not possible that we were informed[39] that the [offspring of a union] of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth is a bastard?[40] — This surely is taught below: ‘Who is a bastard? [The offspring of a union with] any consanguineous relative with whom cohabitation is forbidden; so R. Akiba. Simeon[41] the Temanite said: [The offspring of any union] the penalty for which is kareth at the hands of heaven. And the halachah is in agreement with his view.[42] But is it not possible that the Tanna[43] intended to indicate by his anonymous statement that the halachah is according to Simeon[41] the Temanite?[44] — If so, he should have stated, ‘Others who are subject to the penalty of kareth’, why then [specify] THE RELATIVE OF HIS DIVORCEE? Consequently it must he inferred that this case[45] was under discussion. But is it not indeed possible to maintain that it[45] was not under discussion, but because THE MAN WHO REMARRIED HIS DIVORCED WIFE OR MARRIED HIS HALUZAH OR THE RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH was spoken of,[46] he also introduced THE RELATIVE OF his divorcee’?[47]

Would consequently [the offspring of a union with] the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, according to R. Akiba,[48] be a bastard![49] — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan, This is R. Akiba's reason: Because Scripture stated, The house of him that had his shoe drawn off;[50] Scripture thus called it his house.[51]

R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi: All agree that, where a man remarried his divorced wife,

(34) The Redactor of the Mishnah.
(35) Supra 40b, 41a. The offspring of a union that is only Rabbinically forbidden would not be a bastard.
(36) In R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.
(37) That of the relative of a divorcee.
(38) One does not AGREE in respect of a case that never was in dispute!
(39) By the use of the expression AGREE.
(40) I.e., the Rabbis AGREE in this case because it involves kareth, though they maintain that the offspring of those who are subject to the penalty of flogging only is not a bastard, AGREE would consequently provide no proof that R. Akiba spoke of the relative of a divorcee!
(41) Cur. edd. add ‘R’.
(42) Infra 49a. The halachah must obviously be in agreement with the Rabbis who form the majority. Consequently there was no need for the Rabbis to state the same halachah in our Mishnah also. THEY AGREE must, therefore, imply that R. Akiba also spoke of the relative of a divorcee.
(43) Of our Mishnah.
(44) Hence the repetition in Our Mishnah of the one infra 49a. Cf. supra n. 5 second clause.
(45) The case of the relative of one's divorcee.
(46) And on which the Rabbis disagreed with R. Akiba. In the case of the RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH, however, R. Akiba, it might still be contended, regards the child as a bastard.
(47) In whose case the Rabbis agree with R. Akiba.
(48) Since the expression RELATIVE OF HIS HALUZAH in R. Akiba's statement is not amended to ‘RELATIVE OF HIS divorcee’.
(49) On what ground could R. Akiba maintain such an opinion?
(50) Deut. XXV, 10.
(51) The relative of a haluzah, according to R. Akiba, is consequently, like that of a divorcee, forbidden Pentateuchally. The offspring of a union with such a relative is, therefore, a bastard.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 44b

the child[1] is tainted in respect of the priesthood.[2] Who [is meant by] ‘All agree’? — Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is not a bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.[3] This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,[4] her son[1] is tainted,[3] how much more should the son of a divorcee be tainted, whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.[5] [This argument, however], may be refuted: A widow's case may well be different[6] because she herself becomes profaned and;[7] and, furthermore, it is written in Scripture, She is an abomination,[8] ‘she’[9] only is an abomination but her children are not an abomination. — Furthermore, it was taught: Where a man remarried his divorced wife, or married his haluzah, or married the relative of his haluzah, R. Akiba said, his betrothal of her is not valid,[10] she requires no divorce from him, she is disqualified,[11] her child is disqualified,[12] and the man is compelled to divorce her. And the Sages said: His betrothal of her is valid, she requires a divorce from the man, she is fit, and her child is fit. Now, in respect of what?[13] Obviously in respect of the priesthood![14] — No; in respect of entering the congregation.[13]

If so, in respect of whom is she[15] fit? If it be suggested ‘in respect of entering the congregation’, is not this [it may be retorted] obvious? Has she become ineligible to enter the congregation because she played the harlot![16] Consequently it must mean in respect of the priesthood. Now, since she is [untainted] in respect of the priesthood, her child also must be [untainted] in respect of the priesthood![14] — Is this an argument? The same term may bear different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects.[17] This[18] is also logically sound. For in the first clause[19] it was stated, ‘She is disqualified and her child is disqualified’. Now, in respect of what is ‘she disqualified’? If it be suggested, ‘in respect of entry into the congregation’, does she [it may be retorted] become disqualified for entry into the congregation because she played the harlot![20] Consequently it must mean ‘in respect of the priesthood!’ Now, again, in respect of what is ‘her child disqualified’? If it be suggested, ‘in respect of the priesthood’ thus implying that he is permitted to enter the congregation, surely [it may be objected] R. Akiba stated that the child is a bastard![21] Obviously then ‘in respect of entry into the congregation’.[22] And, as in the first clause the same term bears different interpretations in harmony with its respective subjects, so may the same term in the final clause bear different interpretations in agreement with its respective subjects.[23] Also as to the expression[24] , This is an abomination it [may be interpreted]: ‘She is an abomination but her rival is no abomination’.[25] Her children, however, are an abomination.[26]

The objection. however, from the ‘widow’ [still remains, thus]: ‘A widow's case may well be different[27] because she herself becomes[28] profaned’![29] — But [the fact is that] if any statement was made[30] it was as follows:[31] R. Joseph stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Rabbi, ‘All agree that where a man cohabited with any of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth[32] the child[33] is tainted’.[34] Who [is referred to by] ‘All agree’? — R. Joshua. For although R. Joshua stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is not a bastard, he agrees that, though he is no bastard, he is nevertheless tainted.[35] This is deduced a minori ad majus from the case of a widow: If in the case of a widow married to a High Priest, the prohibition of whom is not applicable to all,[36] her son[37] is tainted,[35] how much more should the son of this woman be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.[38]

And were you to object: A widow's case may be different[39] because she herself becomes profaned,[40] [it may be retorted that], here also, as soon as the man had any connubial relations with her he stamped her as a harlot.[41]

Rabbah b. Bar Hana said in the name of R. Johanan: All agree that where a slave or an idolater had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite the child is a bastard. Who is meant by ‘All agree’? —

Simeon the Temanite. For although Simeon the Temanite stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging is not a bastard, his statement applies only

(1) The offspring of such a union.

(2) פגום defective, inferior (in status). If a male he is disqualified from the priesthood: and if a female she is ineligible to marry a priest. [Rashi reads simply: ‘the child is tainted’, so MS.M.]

(3) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(4) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or an Israelite.

(5) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(6) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(7) Having once married a High Priest unlawfully, she may not marry after his death even an ordinary priest (v. Kid. 77a), and if she is a priest's daughter she loses her privilege to eat terumah (v. infra 68a). In the case of a remarried divorcee these restrictions do not apply, since she is permitted to eat terumah if she is a priest's daughter (v. infra 69a) while her prohibition to marry a priest is not due to her remarriage, but to her previous divorce.

(8) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(9) היא rendered by E.V., it; lit, ‘she’, is taken to refer to the woman. The Talmudic text here is not very clear. (V. supra 11b for a smoother text and further notes, and cf. Bah a.l.).

(10) Unions subject to the penalty of flogging are in his opinion invalid.

(11) May not marry a priest.

(12) Being deemed a bastard.

(13) Is the child regarded as fit. I.e. fit to marry a proper Israelite; v, Deut. XXIII, 1ff.

(14) Which is contrary to the conclusion arrived at by the argument a minori ad majus!

(15) The remarried divorcee.

(16) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(17) Lit., ‘that as it is and that etc,’. The term ‘untainted’ in the case of the woman may have reference to priesthood, but in the case of the child it may refer to entry into the congregation; while in respect of the priesthood the child may well be regarded as tainted.

(18) The thesis that the interpretation of the same term may vary in harmony with its respective subjects though both appear in the same context.

(19) Of the cited Baraitha.

(20) I.e., contracted a forbidden marriage.

(21) Who may not enter into the congregation. (V. Deut. XXIII, 3).

(22) Although the same term, in the same context, when applied to the mother, referred to the priesthood.

(23) V. supra p. 289. n. 10, for lit. meaning.

(24) From which it has been sought to prove supra that the inference from the case of a widow married to a High Priest cannot be upheld.

(25) I.e., the exclusion refers to her rival who may contract levirate marriage.

(26) I.e., disqualified from the priesthood. as has been inferred supra.

(27) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(28) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.

(29) Which leads to the conclusion that no inference a minori ad majus may be drawn from the case of the widow. How, then, could R. Joseph state in the name of R. Simeon, supra, that all agree that the child is disqualified?

(30) By R. Joseph in the name of R. Simeon, on the subject under discussion.

(31) Lit., ‘thus it was said’.

(32) For that cohabitation.

(33) The offspring of such a union.

(34) V. supra p. 282, no. 8ff.

(35) And disqualified for the priesthood.

(36) A widow is forbidden to a High Priest only, but not to an ordinary priest or Israelite.

(37) The offspring of such a union.

(38) No one, priest or Israelite, may remarry his divorced wife after she had been married to another man.

(39) I.e., her son may indeed be tainted.

(40) V. supra p. 288, n. 13.

(41) Because of the forbidden union, and she, like the widow who was married to a High Priest, is in consequence forbidden to marry even a common priest.

to the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of flogging, since the betrothal in such a case is valid[1] but here, in the case of an idolater and a slave, since betrothal in their case is invalid,[2] they are like those whose union is subject to the penalty of kareth.[3]

An objection was raised: If a slave or an idolater had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard. R. Simeon b. Judah said: A bastard is only he who [is the offspring of a union which] is forbidden as incest and is punishable by kareth![4] — No, said R. Joseph, who [is referred to by] 'all cable only according to the view of R. Akiba who regards a haluzah as a forbidden relative',[5] while he himself does not share the same view,[6] he agrees[7] in the case of an idolater and a slave. For when R. Dimi came[8] he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi in the name of our Master,[9] 'If an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard'.

R. Aha, the governor of the castle,[10] and R. Tanhum son of R. Hiyya of Kefar Acco[11] once redeemed some captives who were brought from Armon to Tiberias,[12] [Among these] was one who had become pregnant from an idolater. When they came before R. Ammi he told them: It was R. Johanan and R. Eleazar and R. Hanina who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child born is a bastard.

Said R. Joseph: Is it a great thing to enumerate persons?[13] Surely it was Rab and Samuel in Babylon and R. Joshua b. Levi and Bar Kappara in the Land of Israel — (others say, 'Bar Kappara' is to be altered to[14] the 'Elders of the South')[15] — who stated that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child born is untainted! — No, said R. Joseph, it[16] is [the opinion of] Rabbi.[17] For when R. Dimi came[8] he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abudimi that it was reported in the name of our Masters that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: The child[18] is tainted. In respect of what?[19] If it be suggested in respect of entry into the congregation, surely [it may be retorted] R. Joshua b. Levi stated that the child was fit! It must be then in respect of the priesthood;[19] for all Amoraim who declare the child[18] fit admit that he is ineligible for the priesthood.[20] This is inferred by deduction from the case of a widow a minori ad majus. If in the case of a widow who was married to a High priest whose prohibition is not equally applicable to all[21] her son[22] is tainted,[23] how much more should the son of this woman[24] be tainted whose prohibition is equally applicable to all.[25] The case of a widow who was married to a High Priest may be different, since she herself becomes profaned![26] — Here also,[27] as soon as cohabitation occurred the woman is disqualified;[28] for R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Simeon:[29] Whence is it inferred that if an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite, he disqualified her?[30] It was stated But if a priest's daughter be a widow, or divorcee;[31] Only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;[32] an idolater and a slave are consequently excluded since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.[33]

Said Abaye to him:[34] What reason do you see for relying upon R. Dimi?[35] Rely rather on Rabin![36] For when Rabin came[37] he reported that R. Nathan and R. Judah the Prince ruled that such a child is legitimate;[38] and[39] R. Judah the Prince is, of course, Rabbi!

And Rab also ruled that the child is legitimate.[40] For once a man[41] appeared before Rab and asked him, ‘What [is the legal position of the child] where an idolater or a slave had intercourse with the daughter of an Israelite’? ‘The child is legitimate’, the Master replied. ‘Give me then your daughter’ said the man. ‘I will not give her to you’ [was the Master's reply]. Said Shimi b. Hiyya to Rab. ‘People say that in Media[42] a camel can dance on a kab;[43] here is the kab, here is the camel and here is Media, but there is no dancing’![44] ‘Had he been[45] equal to Joshua the son of Nun I would not have given him my daughter’, the Master replied. ‘Had he been like Joshua the son of Nun’, the other retorted, ‘others would have given him their daughters, if the Master had not given him his; but with this man, if the Master will not give him, others also will not give him’.[46] As the man refused to go away he fixed his eye upon him and he died. R. Mattena also ruled that the child is legitimate.[47] Rab Judah also ruled that the child is legitimate.[47] For when one[48] came before Rab Judah, the latter told him, ‘Go and conceal your identity[49] or marry one of your own kind’.[50] When such a man[51] appeared before Raba he told him, ‘Either go abroad or marry one of your own kind’.[52]

The men of Be-Mikse[53] sent [the following enquiry] to Rabbah: What [is the law in respect of the legitimacy of the child of] one who is a half slave and half freed man[54] who cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite? — He replied: If [the child of] one who is fully a slave has been declared legitimate, is there any need [to question the case of the child of one who is only] a half slave!

R. Joseph said: The author of this traditional ruling[55]

(4) Now this Tanna, whose view is exactly the same as that of Simeon the Temanite, indicates quite clearly that the offspring of a union with an idolater or slave is not a bastard! (V. supra n. 10). is, of course,[1] Rab Judah.[2] But surely Rab Judah had explicitly stated: Where one who is a half slave and half freed man cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child born from such a union can have no redress![3] — Rab Judah's ruling[4] was made only in the case where he[5] betrothed[6] the daughter of an Israelite,[7] in consequence of which his partial slavery cohabits with a married woman.[8]

But did not the Nehardeans state in the name of R. Jacob that according to him who regards [the offspring][9] as illegitimate, the child is so regarded even [where cohabitation had taken place] with an unmarried woman; and according to him who regards [the child] as legitimate, the child is so regarded even [if the cohabitation had taken place] with a married woman! And the deduction by both[10] was made from none other than the wife of one's father.[11] He who regards the child[9] as illegitimate is of the opinion that as with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid, the child is a bastard. So is the child a bastard in the case of all those[12] betrothal with whom is invalid. And he who regards the child as legitimate is of the opinion [that the comparison is]: As with the wife of one's father, betrothal with whom is invalid in the case of the son only,[13] but is valid in the case of others;[14] an idolater and a slave betrothal with whom is in all cases invalid are consequently excluded![15]

Hence the statement of R. Judah[16] must have been made in respect of one[17] who had intercourse with a married woman, so that his emancipated side[18] cohabits with a married woman.[19]

Rabina said: R. Gaza told me, ‘R. Jose b. Abin happened to be at our place when an incident[20] occurred with an unmarried woman and declared the child to be legitimate: [and when it occurred] with a married woman he declared the child to be illegitimate’.

R. Shesheth said: R. Gaza told me that it was not R. Jose b. Abin but R. Jose son of R. Zebida, and that he declared the child to be legitimate, both in the case of the married, as well as in that of the unmarried woman.[21]

R. Aha son of Raba[22] said to Rabina: Amemar once happened to be in our place and he declared the child[23] to be legitimate in the case of a married, as well as in that of an unmarried woman.

And the law is that if an idolater or a slave had cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is legitimate, both in the case of a married, and in that of an unmarried woman.[21]

Raba declared R. Mari b. Rachel[24] to be a legitimate Israelite and appointed him among the pursers[25] of Babylon. And although a Master said: Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee . . . one from among thy brethren,[26] all appointments which you make must be made only ‘from among thy brethren’, [means that] such a man,[27] since his mother was a descendant of Israel, may well ‘be regarded as ‘one from among thy brethren’.

The slave of R. Hiyya b. Ammi once made a certain idolatress bathe for a matrimonial purpose.[28] Said R. Joseph: I could declare her to be a legitimate Jewess[29] and her daughter[30] to be of legitimate birth.[31] In her case, in accordance with the view of R. Assi; for R. Assi said, ‘Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation’?[32] In the case of her daughter, because when an idolater or a slave has intercourse with a daughter of an Israelite, the child [born of such a union] is legitimate.[33]

A certain person was once named ‘son of the female heathen’.[34] Said R. Assi, ‘Did she not bathe for the purpose of her menstruation’?’

A certain person was once named ‘son of the male heathen’.[35] Said R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘Did he[36] not bathe in connection with any mishap[37] of his’?[38]

R. Hama b. Guria said in the name of Rab: If a man bought a slave from an idolater and [that slave] forestalled him and performed ritual ablution with the object of acquiring the status of a freed man, he acquires thereby his emancipation. What is the reason?

---

(1) Lit., ‘who is it’?

(2) So that Rabbah's decision in the case of the half slave is based on a ruling of Rab Judah.

(3) I.e., he is a bastard, and may never marry a Jewess, How, then, could Rabbah regard the child of such a union as legitimate?

(4) That he can have no redress.

(5) The half slave,

(6) Not merely cohabited without betrothal.

(7) The betrothal, as far as his partial status of a slave is concerned, is invalid, while in respect of his partial state of emancipation it is valid. The Jewess is consequently his legal wife.

(8) The slave in him having cohabited with the woman who is legally betrothed to the emancipated part of him causes the offspring of the union to be deemed a bastard, as is the case with the offspring of any union between a betrothed or married woman and a stranger, be the latter Israelite, idolater or slave. If, however, cohabitation only between the half slave and a Jewess took place, ‘without previous betrothal, the woman is not the legal wife of the ‘half freed man’ and the child born from the union is the child of an unmarried woman and is consequently legitimate, as Rabbah ruled. In the case of a full slave the question of betrothal does not arise since even if betrothal did take place it is invalid and the woman is legally deemed to be unmarried.

(9) Of a union between a Jewess and an idolater or a slave.

(10) He who regards the child as legitimate and the other who regards him as illegitimate.

(11) Betrothal of whom by the son is invalid and the offspring of any union between them is a bastard.

(12) Such as an idolater or a slave,

(13) Lit,, ‘to him’.

(14) So in all such cases, A child born from such unions only is illegitimate.

(15) The cases of these being different from that of ‘father's wife’, the child born from a union between a Jewess and any of these must be deemed to be legitimate. The father is entirely eliminated and the child is ascribed to the mother. Now, since the statement of the Nehardeans proves that there is no difference between an unmarried and a married (or betrothed) woman, the distinction drawn supra between cohabitation after a betrothal and one in the absence of betrothal is obviously untenable. The objection then against Rabbah's ruling remains!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46a

— The idolater has no title to the person [of the slave][1] and he can transfer to the Israelite only that which is his. And [the slave], since he forestalled him and performed ritual ablution for the purpose of acquiring the status of a freed man, has thereby cancelled the obligations of his servitude, in accordance with the ruling of Raba. For Raba stated: Consecration,[2] leavened food[3] and manumission[4] cancel a mortgage.[5]

R. Hisda raised an objection: It happened with the proselyte Valeria[6] that her slaves forestalled her and performed ritual ablutions[7] before her. And when the matter came before the Sages they decided that the slaves had acquired the status of freed men.[8] [From here it follows that] only if they performed ablution before her,[9] but not if after her![10] — Raba replied: 'Before her' they acquire their emancipation whether the object of their bathing had, or had not been specified;[11] 'after her' emancipation is acquired only when the object had been specified,[12] but not when it had not been specified.[13]

R. Iwya said: What has been taught[14] applies only to one[15] who buys[16] from an idolater; but the idolater himself[17] may well be acquired;[18] for it is written in Scripture, Moreover from the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy:[19] you may buy of them but they may not buy of you, nor may they buy of one another.[20] 'But they may not buy of you'. — What can this refer to? If it be suggested [that it refers] to one's manual labour, may not an idolater, [it may be asked,] buy an Israelite to do manual labour? Surely it is written, Or to the offshoot of a stranger's family,[21] and a Master said that by 'stranger's family' an idolater was meant?[22] Consequently it must refer to his person;[23] and the All Merciful said, 'You may buy of them,[24] even their persons'. R. Aha objected: It[25] might be said [to refer to acquisition] by means of money and ritual ablution![26] — This is a difficulty.

Samuel said: He[27] must be firmly held[28] while he is in the water;[29] as [was done with] Menjamin, the slave of R. Ashi who wished to perform ritual ablution,[30] and was entrusted to Rabina and R. Aha son of Raba. 'Note', [R. Ashi] said to them, 'that I shall claim him from you'.[31] They put a chain[32] round his neck, and loosened it and again tightened it. They loosened it in order that there might be no interposition.[33] They then tightened it again in order that he might not forestall them and declare,[34] 'I perform the ablution in order to procure thereby the status of a freed man'. While he was raising his head from the water they placed upon it a bucket full of clay and told him, 'Go, carry it to your master's house.

R. Papa said to Raba: The master must have observed the men of Papa b. Abba's house who advance sums of money on people's accounts in respect of their capitation taxes,[35] and then force them into their service. Do they,[36] when set free, require a deed of emancipation or not? He replied: Were I now dead I could not have told you of this ruling. Thus said R. Shesheth: The surety for these people[37] is deposited in the king's archive, and the king has ordained that whosoever does not pay his capitation tax shall be made the slave of him who pays it for him.[38]

R. Hiyya b. Abba once came to Gabla[39] where he observed Jewish women who conceived from proselytes who were circumcised but had not performed the required ritual ablution;[40] he also noticed that idolaters were serving[41] Jewish wine and Israelites were drinking it,[42] and he also saw that idolaters were cooking lupines and Israelites ate them;[43] but he did not speak to them on the matter at all. He called, however, upon R. Johanan who instructed him: Go and announce that their children are bastards; that their wine is forbidden as nesek wine;[44] and that their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because[45] they[46] are ignorant of the Torah.

'That their children are bastards', R. Johanan ruling in accordance with his view. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man cannot become a proper proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed ritual ablution; when, therefore, no ablution has been performed he is regarded as an idolater; and Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan that if an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite the child [born from such a union] is a bastard.

'That their wine is forbidden as nesek wine', because a nazirite[47] is told, 'Keep away; go round about; approach not the vineyard'.[48]

'That their lupines are forbidden as food cooked by idolaters, because they are ignorant of the Torah'. [Would their lupines have been] permitted if the men had been acquainted with the Torah? Surely R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, 'Any foodstuff that may be eaten raw does not come under the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters', and since lupines cannot be eaten raw the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters should apply![49] — R. Johanan holds the view as expressed in a second version. For R. Samuel b. R. Isaac stated in the name of Rab, 'Whatever is not served on a royal table as a dish to be eaten with bread is not subject to the prohibition of food cooked by idolaters The reason, therefore,[50] is because they were ignorant of the Torah;[51] for had they been acquainted with the Torah [their lupines would have been] permitted.

Our Rabbis taught: 'If a proselyte was circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, R. Eliezer said, 'Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that our forefathers[52] were circumcised and had not performed ritual ablution'. If he performed the prescribed ablution but had not been circumcised, R. Joshua said, 'Behold he is a proper proselyte; for so we find that the mothers[53] had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised'. The Sages, however, said, 'Whether he had performed ritual ablution but had not been circumcised or whether he had been circumcised but had not performed the prescribed ritual ablution, he is not a proper proselyte, unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.

Let R. Joshua also infer from the forefathers, and let R. Eliezer also infer from the mothers! And should you reply[54] that a possibility[55] may not be inferred from an impossibility,[56] surely [it may be retorted] it was taught: R. Eliezer said, 'whence is it deduced that the paschal lamb[57] of later generations[58] may be brought from hullin[59] only? Those in Egypt were commanded to bring[60] a Paschal lamb and those of later generations were commanded to bring a Paschal lamb; as the Paschal lamb spoken of in Egypt could be brought from hullin[59] only, so may also the paschal lamb which had been commanded to later generations be brought from hullin only'. Said R. Akiba to him, 'may a possibility be inferred from an impossibility!'[61] The other replied. 'Although an impossibility, it is nevertheless a proof of importance and deduction from it may be made'![62] — But

(1) As will be explained infra, no idolater may acquire the person of another idolater.

(2) For the altar, of a pledged animal,

(3) Which is pledged to a non-Israelite but kept in the possession of an Israelite when the time for its destruction on the Passover Eve arrived. No leavened food may be kept in Jewish possession (though pledged to a non-Jew) from midday of Passover Eve until the conclusion of the Passover festival.

(4) Of a mortgaged slave, v, Git. 40b.

(5) Similarly here, the ritual ablution of the slave, for the purpose of procuring his manumission, cancelled his obligations to his idolatrous master, and ipso facto to his Jewish master who is only the representative of the former and can lay no greater claim to the slave than he.

(6) Heb. בלוריא.

(7) For the purpose of conversion to Judaism, and thereby procuring their manumission.

(8) Infra 66b, Keth, 59b, Git, 40b, Ned, 86b, B.K. 89b.

(9) Are they manumitted; because, in that case, they were already proselytes while she was still an idolatress with no title to them.

(10) Lit,, 'before her, yes: after her, no'. Thus it has been shewn that if the owner is an Israelite, ritual ablution does not procure the slave's manumission, which is in contradiction to what R. Hama stated in the name of Rab!

(11) Lit., 'whether specified or unspecified'.

(12) When the slave specifically stated that his ablution was performed for the purpose of procuring his manumission: cf. the statement of R. Hama b. Guria.

(13) Lit., 'by specified, yes: by unspecified. no'.

(14) That by ritual ablution a slave procures his emancipation.

(15) Lit., 'they did not teach but'.

(16) A slave.

(17) If he sold his own person.

(18) And a ritual ablution does not procure his liberation.

(19) Lev, XXV, 45.

(21) Lev. XXV, 47.

(22) How then could it be suggested that an Israelite may not sell his manual labour to an idolater!

(23) An idolater cannot acquire the person of an Israelite,

(24) Of then, may ye by, Lev, XXV, 45.

(25) The authorization to buy the person of an idolater.

(26) As a slave of a Jew. A heathen, bought as a slave by a Jew, had to submit to circumcision and ritual ablution and thereby acquired partly the status of a Jew: in respect of observances he was on the same footing as Jewish women and minor sons. What proof, however, is there that an idolater does not acquire his freedom if he performed ritual ablution with the specific object of procuring thereby his manumission?

(27) An idolatrous slave who is performing his ablution on his initiation into Judaism as a slave of a Jew.

(28) To indicate that he is performing his ablution as a slave.

(29) Unless some outward mark of slavery accompanied the ablution the slave can procure his manumission by making a declaration, while he is still in, the water, that he performs his ablution for the purpose of procuring thereby his freedom.

(30) On his initiation as the slave of a Jew.

(31) If, while in the water, he will declare that his ablution was performed for the purpose of procuring his emancipation.

(32) ארויסא 'chain' (Aruk): — Persian arvis, 'rope' (Perles, Ety. Stud.); 'halter' (Jast.); v. Levy.

(36) These temporary slaves who were heathens.

(40) Ritual ablution is an essential part of the ceremonial of initiation into Judaism.

(41) The verb מזג (cf. Gr.  Lat. misceo). lit., 'to mix', sc. wine with water or spices, also signifies 'to fill the cup, 'to serve'.

(42) Wine that has been touched by an idolater suspected of dedicating it to idolatrous purposes is forbidden to an Israelite.

(43) Although an Israelite is forbidden to eat of the food which an idolater has cooked.

(44) יין נסך 'wine of libation', applied to wine that has been, or is suspected of having been dedicated as a 'drink offering' to an idol or idolatrous purpose.

(45) The reason applies to the prohibition of the lupines. v. infra.

(46) The men of Gabla.
(47) V. Num. VI, 2ff.
(48) I.e,, a man must be so careful in the observance of a commandment that he must not only keep away from a prohibition itself but also from that which is permitted but might lead to an infringement of a prohibition, A nazirite who is forbidden to drink wine must not even approach a vineyard. Similarly nesek wine is forbidden only when an idolater has actually touched it; but as a preventive measure it has been forbidden, as here, even when contact was indirect.
(49) What need then was there to give as a reason, 'because they are ignorant of the Torah'?
(50) Why the lupines of the men of Gabla were forbidden,
(51) The restriction having been imposed upon them as a preventive measure against their possible laxity in the general laws concerning food cooked by idolaters; cf. parallel passage 'A.Z. 59a.

(55) It is possible to circumcise a male proselyte.
(56) The mothers who left Egypt may have been admitted to Judaism by ritual ablution only because the other rite was in their case an impossibility.
(57) V. Ex. XII, 3ff.
(58) Subsequent to the generation that brought the first Paschal lamb in Egypt.
(59) חולין 'profane', animals that had not previously been consecrated. In the case of the Paschal lamb consecrated animals could only be such as had been set aside as 'second tithe' the law of which had not been promulgated till after the Exodus.
(60) Lit., 'it was said'.
(61) The Paschal lamb in Egypt could not possibly have been brought from consecrated animals. V. supra n. 7, second clause.
(62) Men. 82a, which proves that even from an impossibility an inference may be drawn. The difficulty, therefore, remains, why does not R. Eliezer, like R. Joshua, infer from the mothers?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 46b

all agree[1] that ritual ablution without circumcision is effective; and they differ only on circumcision without ablution. R. Eliezer infers from the forefathers,[2] while R. Joshua [maintains that] in the case of the forefathers also ritual ablution was performed. Whence does he[3] deduce it?[4] If it be suggested, 'From that which is written, Go unto the people, and sanctify them to-day and to-morrow, and let them wash their garments,[5] if where washing of the garments is not required[6] ablution is required,[7] how much more should ablution be required where washing of the garments is required',[8] [it may be retorted that] that[9] might have been a mere matter of cleanliness.[10] — It is rather from here:[11] And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people,[12] and we have a tradition that there must be no sprinkling without ritual ablution.[13]

Whence does R. Joshua infer that the mothers performed ritual ablution? — It is a logical conclusion, for, otherwise,[14] whereby did they enter under the wings of the Shechinah![15]

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: A man can never become a proselyte unless he has been circumcised and has also performed the prescribed ritual ablution.[16] Is not this obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, surely, in agreement with the majority![17] — The expression 'Sages' is in fact meant for[18] 'R. Jose'. For it was taught: If [a proselyte] came and stated, 'I have been circumcised but have not performed ritual ablution' he is 'permitted to perform the ablution[19] and [the proper performance of the previous circumcision] does not matter;[20] so R. Judah.

R. Jose said: He is not to be allowed ablution,[21] Hence[22] it is permissible for a proselyte[23] to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath;[24] so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution.[25]

The Master said, ‘Hence it is permissible for a proselyte to perform the prescribed ablution on the Sabbath; so R. Judah’.[26] Seeing that R. Judah stated that one[27] suffices is it not obvious that, if circumcision has been performed in our presence, he is permitted to perform ablution! Why then, ‘Hence’?[28] — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Judah, ablution forms the principal [part of the initiation],[29] and that ablution is not to take place on the Sabbath because, thereby, a man is improved;[30] hence we were taught[31] that R. Judah requires either the one or the other.[32]

‘R. Jose, however, said: He is not to be allowed to perform the ablution’. Is not this obvious? Since R. Jose said that both[33] are required [ablution must be forbidden as] the improvement of a man[34] may not be effected on the Sabbath! — It might have been assumed that in the opinion of R. Jose circumcision forms the principal [part of the initiation] and that the reason there[35] is because the circumcision had not been performed in our presence[36] but where the circumcision had taken place in our presence[37] it might have been assumed that a proselyte in such circumstances[38] may perform the prescribed ablution even on the Sabbath, hence we were taught[39] that R. Jose requires both.[33]

Rabbah stated: It happened at the court of R. Hiyya b. Rabbi(and R. Joseph taught: R. Oshaia b.[40] Rabbi;[41] and R. Safra taught: R. Oshaia b. Hiyya)[41] — that there came before him a proselyte who had been circumcised but had not performed the ablution.[42] The Rabbi told him, ‘Wait here until tomorrow[43] when we shall arrange for your ablution’. From this incident three rulings may be deduced. It may be inferred that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men;[44] and it may be inferred that a man is not a proper proselyte unless he had been circumcised and had also performed the prescribed ablution; and it may also be inferred[45] that the ablution of a proselyte may not take place during the night.

Let it be said that from this incident it may also be inferred that qualified scholars are required![46] — Their presence might have been a mere coincidence.[47]

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three men; for law[48] has been written in his case.[49]

Our Rabbis taught: As it might have been assumed that if a man came and said, ‘I am a proselyte’ he is to be accepted,[50] hence it was specifically stated in the Scriptures With thee,[51] only when he is well known to thee. Whence is it inferred that if he came, and had his witnesses with him, [that his word is accepted]? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, And if a proselyte sojourn . . . in your land.[52]

Whether the circumcision had been valid, having been performed for the specific ritual purpose of the proselyte's initiation into Judaism, or whether it had been invalid because it was carried out as a mere surgical operation or as a non-Jewish sectarian rite, is of no consequence, since the present performance of the ritual ablution is alone sufficient for the initiation.
(21) Because both circumcision and ablution are required. As the validity of the former is in doubt (v. supra note 1) the latter most nut be allowed unless some act of circumcision (causing a few drops of blood to flow) had again been carried out specifically for the purpose of the initiation.
(22) Since according to R, Akiba one act, either ablution or circumcision, suffices.
(23) Who had been circumcised on Sabbath Eve in the ritually prescribed manner.
(24) The ablution being of no consequence (v. supra on. 3 and 4), the proselyte's person in no way being improved by it, it is an act which is permitted on the Sabbath.
(25) The ablution completes the initiation and thus effects the proselyte's improvement, which is an act forbidden on the Sabbath. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the view that both ablution and circumcision are required, given supra as the opinion of 'the Sages', is in fact R. Jose.

(51) Lev. XIX, 33. And if a proselyte (גר E.V., ‘stranger’) sojourn with thee.

(52) Ibid., i.e., as lung as he is in your land even if he is not well known to you. Cf. n. 4, supra. Cur. edd. include here ‘with thee’ which should be omitted since the phrase has been previously employed as proof to the contrary that the proselyte must be well known.

From this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., 'wherever he is with thee'.[1] If so, why was the Land of Israel specified? — In the Land of Israel[2] proof must be produced;[3] outside the Land of Israel[4] no such proof need be produced; these are the words of R. Judah. But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land.

'If he came and had witnesses with him,' what need is there for a Scriptural text?[5] R. Shesheth replied: Where they[6] state, 'We heard that he be came a proselyte at a certain particular court'. As It might have been taught that we are not to believe them,[7] we were taught [that we do believe them].

'In your land;[8] from this I only know [that the law is applicable] within the Land of Israel, whence is it inferred [that it is also applicable] within the countries outside the Land? — It was specifically stated in Scripture, With thee, i.e., wherever he is with thee'. But this,[9] surely, had been expounded already![10] — One is derived from With thee[11] and the other from With you.[12]

'But the Sages said: Proof must be produced both within the Land of Israel and outside the Land'. But, it is written, surely, in your land![13] — That expression is required [for the deduction] that proselytes may be accepted even in the Land of Israel. As it might have been assumed that there they become proselytes only on account of the prosperity of the Land of Israel, and at the present time also, when there is no prosperity, they might still be attracted[14] by the Gleanings,[15] the Forgotten Sheaf,[16] the Corner[17] and the Poor Man's Tithe,[18] hence we were taught [that they may nevertheless be accepted].

R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The halachah is that proof must be produced[19] both in the Land of Israel and outside the Land'. Is this not obvious? [In a dispute between] an individual and a majority the halachah is, of course, in agreement with the majority![20] — It might have been suggested that R. Judah's view is more acceptable since he is supported by Scriptural texts, 'A hence we were taught [that the halachah is in agreement with the Sages].

Our Rabbis taught: And judge righteously between a man and his brother, and the proselyte that is with him;[21] from this text[22] did R. Judah deduce that a man who becomes a proselyte[23] in the presence of a Beth din is deemed to be a proper proselyte; but he who does so privately is no proselyte.[24]

It once happened that a man came before R. Judah and told him, 'I have become a proselyte privately'. 'Have you witnesses'? R. Judah asked. 'No', the man replied. 'Have you children'? — 'Yes', the man replied. 'You are trusted', the Master said to him, 'as far as your own disqualification is concerned but you cannot be relied upon to disqualify your children.[25]

Did R. Judah, however, state that a proselyte is not trusted in respect of his children? Surely it was taught: He shall acknowledge[26] implies, 'he shall be entitled to acknowledge him before others?[27] From this did R. Judah deduce that a man is believed when he declares, 'This son of mine is firstborn',[28] And as a man is believed when he declares, 'This son of mine is firstborn' so is he believed when he declares, 'This son of mine is the son of a divorced woman' or 'the son of a haluzah'.[29] But the Sages say: He[30] is not believed![31] — R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is this that he[32] really told him,[33] 'According to your own statement you are an idolater, and no idolater is eligible to tender evidence'.[34]

Rabina said: It is this that he[35] really told him,[36] 'Have you children'? [And when the other replied] ‘Yes’ [he asked] ‘Have you grandchildren’. [The reply being again] ‘Yes’, he told him ‘You are trusted so far as to disqualify your own children[37] but you cannot be trusted so far as to disqualify your grandchildren’.

Thus it was also taught elsewhere: R. Judah said, ‘A man is trusted in respect [of the status of] his young son but not in respect of that of his grown-up son; and R. Hiyya b. Abba explained in the name of R. Johanan that ‘young’ does not mean actually a minor and ‘grown-up’ does not mean one who is actually ‘of age’, but any young son who has children is regarded as of age while any grown-up son who has no children is deemed to be a minor. And the law is in agreement with R. Nahman b. Isaac.[38] But, surely, [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rabina![39] — That statement was made with reference to the law of acknowledgement.[40]

Our Rabbis taught: If at the present time a man desires[41] to become a proselyte, he is to be addressed as follows: ‘What reason have you for desiring[42] to become a proselyte; do you not know that Israel at the present time are persecuted and oppressed, despised, harassed and overcome by afflictions’? If he replies, ‘I know and yet am unworthy’,[43] he is accepted forthwith, and is given instruction in some of the minor and some of the major commandments. He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandments of] Gleanings,[44] the Forgotten Sheaf,[45] the Corner[46] and the Poor Man's Tithe.[47] He is also told of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments. Furthermore, he is addressed thus: ‘Be it known to you that before you came to this condition, if you had eaten suet[48] you would not have been punishable with kareth, if you had profaned the Sabbath you would not have been punishable with stoning; but now were you to eat suet[48] you would be punished with kareth; were you to profane the Sabbath you would be punished with stoning’. And as he is informed of the punishment for the transgression of the commandments, so is he informed of the reward granted for their fulfilment. He is told, ‘Be it known to you that the world to come was made only for the righteous, and that Israel at the present time are unable to bear either too much prosperity. or too much suffering'. He is not, however, to be persuaded or dissuaded too much.[1] If he accepted,[2] he is circumcised forthwith. Should any shreds[3] which render the circumcision invalid remain, he is to be circumcised a second time. As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution, when two learned men must stand by his side and acquaint him with some of the minor commandments and with some of the major ones.[4] When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects.

In the case of a woman proselyte, women make her sit in the water up to her neck, while two learned men stand outside and give her instruction in some of the minor commandments and some of the major ones.

The same law[5] applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave; and only where a menstruant may perform her ablution[6] may a proselyte and an emancipated slave perform this ablution;[7] and whatever is deemed an interception in ritual bathing[8] is also deemed to be an interception in the ablutions of a proselyte, an emancipated slave and a menstruant.[9]

The Master said, 'If a man desires to become a proselyte . . . he is to be addressed as follows: "What reason have you for desiring to become a proselyte . . ." and he is made acquainted with some of the minor, and with some of the major commandments'. What is the reason? — In order that if he desire to withdraw let him do so;[10] for R. Helbo said: Proselytes are as hard for Israel [to endure] as a sore,[11] because it is written in Scripture. And the proselyte[12] shall join himself with them, and they shall cleave[13] to the house of Jacob.[14]

'He is informed of the sin [of the neglect of the commandment of] Gleanings, the Forgotten Sheaf, the Corner and the Poor Man's Tithe'. What is the reason? — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because a Noahide[15] would rather be killed than spend so much as a perutah[16] which is not returnable.[17]

'He[18] is not, however, to be persuaded, or dissuaded too much'. R. Eleazar said: What is the Scriptural proof? — It is written, And when she saw that she was steadfastly minded to go with her, she left off speaking unto her.[19] 'We are forbidden', she[20] told her,[21] '[to move on the Sabbath beyond the] Sabbath boundaries'![22] — 'Whither thou goest' [the other replied] 'I will go'.[23]

'We are forbidden private meeting between man and woman'![24] — 'Where thou lodgest. I will lodge'[23]

'We have been commanded six hundred and thirteen commandments'! — 'Thy people shall be my people'.[23]

'We are forbidden idolatry'! — 'And thy God my God'.[23]

'Four modes of death[25] were entrusted to Beth din'![26] — 'Where thou diest, will I die'.[27]

'Two graveyards[28] were placed at the disposal of the Beth din'! — 'And there will I be buried'.[27] Presently she saw that she was steadfastly minded etc.[19]

'If he accepted, he is circumcised forthwith'. What is the reason? — The performance of a commandment must not in any way be delayed.

'Should any shreds which render the circumcision invalid remain etc.', as we learned: These are the shreds which render the circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona,[29] [a priest having been so circumcised] is not permitted to eat terumah; and R. Jeremiah b. Abba explained in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.[30]

'As soon as he is healed arrangements are made for his immediate ablution'. Only after he is healed but not before![31] What is the reason? — Because the water might irritate the wound.

'When two learned men must stand by his side'. Did not R. Hiyya, however, state in the name of R. Johanan that the initiation of a proselyte requires the presence of three? — But, surely. R. Johanan told the tanna:[32] Read, 'three'.

'When he comes up after his ablution he is deemed to be an Israelite in all respects'. In respect of what practical issue? — In that if he retracted and then betrothed the daughter of an Israelite he is regarded as a non-conforming Israelite and his betrothal is valid.[33]

‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’. Assuming this[34] to apply to the acceptance of the yoke of the commandments,[35] the following contradiction may be pointed out: This[36] applies only to a proselyte. but an emancipated slave need not accept![37] — R. Shesheth replied: This is no contradiction, One statement is that of R. Simeon; the other, that of the Rabbis. For it was taught: And bewail her father and her mother etc.[38] This only applies when she did not accept,[39] but if she did accept,[39] her ablution may be arranged, and he is permitted to marry her forthwith. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Even though she did not accept[39] he may force her to perform one ablution as a mark of her slavery and a second ablution as a mark of her emancipation, and having liberated her

he is permitted to marry her forthwith.[1]

Raba said: What is R. Simeon b. Eleazar's reason?[2] — Because it is written, Every man's slave that is bought for money;[3] [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?[4] But [this is the implication]: The slave[5] of a man may be forcibly circumcised but no son of a man[6] may be forcibly circumcised. And the Rabbis?[7] — ‘Ulla replied: As you, admittedly, may not by force circumcise the son of a man[8] so you may not forcibly circumcise the slave of a man. But, surely, there is the Scriptural text, Every man's slave![9] — That text is required for a deduction made by Samuel. For Samuel stated: If a man declared his slave to be ownerless that slave acquires thereby his freedom and requires no deed of emancipation; for it is stated in Scripture. Every man's slave that is bought for money,[3] [could it mean] the slave of a man and not the slave of a woman?[10] But [the meaning is that] a slave who is under his master's control is a proper[11] slave but he who is not under his master's control is not a proper[11] slave.[12]

R. Papa demurred: It might be suggested that the Rabbis were heard[13] in respect of a woman of goodly form[14] only,[15] because she[16] is under no obligation to observe the commandments; but that in respect of a slave,[17] who is under the obligation of observing commandments, even the Rabbis agree![18] For it was indeed taught. ‘Both a proselyte and a slave bought from an idolater must make[19] a declaration of acceptance’.[20] Thus it follows[21] that a slave bought from an Israelite need not make a declaration of acceptance.[20] Now, whose view is this? If that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar, he, surely, had stated that even a slave bought from an idolater need make no declaration of acceptance![22] Consequently it must be the view of the Rabbis; and so it may be inferred that only a slave bought from an idolater is required to make a declaration of acceptance[20] but a slave bought from an Israelite is not required to make a declaration of acceptance.[23] But then the contradiction from the statement ‘The same law applies to a proselyte and to an emancipated slave’[24] remains! — That[25] was taught only with reference to the ablution.[26]

Our Rabbis taught: And she shall shave her head, and do[27] her nails,[28] R. Eliezer said, ‘She shall cut them’.[29] R. Akiba said, ‘She shall let them grow’. R. Eliezer said:[30] An act[31] was mentioned in respect of the head, and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;[32] as the former signifies removal, so does the latter also signify removal. R. Akiba said:[30] An act[31] was mentioned in respect of the head and an act was mentioned in respect of the nails;[32] as disfigurement is the purpose of the former so is disfigurement the purpose of the latter. The following, however, supports the view of R. Eliezer: And Mephibosheth the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and he had neither dressed his feet, nor had he done[33] ‘his beard;[34] by ‘doing’[35] removal was meant.

Our Rabbis taught: And bewail her father aid her mother;[36]

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 48b

R. Eliezer said: ‘Her father’ means her actual father; ‘Her mother’, her actual mother. R. Akiba said: ‘Her father and her mother’ refer to idolatry; for so Scripture says, Who say to a stock;[1] ‘Thou art my father', etc.[2] A full month, 'month' means thirty days. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: Ninety days. For 'month' means thirty days; 'full',[3] thirty days; 'and after that' thirty days. Rabina demurred: Might it not be suggested that 'month' means thirty days; 'full', thirty days; 'and after that' as many again![4] — This is a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: Uncircumcised slaves may be retained; this is the opinion of R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: They may not be retained.[5] Said R. Ishmael to him: Behold it is written, And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed![6] 'This text', the other replied. speaks of a slave that has been bought at twilight,[7] when there was not time enough to circumcise him.[8]

All at any rate agree that And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed[6] was written in respect of an uncircumcised slave; whence may this be inferred? — From what has been taught: And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed,[6] Scripture speaks of an uncircumcised slave. You say. 'Of an uncircumcised slave'; perhaps it is not so[9] but of a circumcised slave? Since it has been stated 'That thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou,[10] the circumcised slave has already been spoken of; to what then is one to apply 'And the son of thy handmaid may be refreshed?'[11] Obviously to an uncircumcised slave. And the stranger[12] refers to a domiciled proselyte.[13] You say. 'It refers to a domiciled proselyte'; perhaps it is not so,[14] but to a true proselyte?[15] Since it was stated, No' thy strange' that is with its thy gates,[10] the true proselyte has already been mentioned; to what then is one to apply, and the stranger?[12] Obviously, to the domiciled proselyte.

R. Joshua b. Levi said: If a man bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he may bear with him for twelve months. [If by that time he had] not been circumcised, he must re-sell him to idolaters.

The following was said by the Rabbis in the presence of R. Papa: In accordance with whose view?[16] Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he[17] stated [that uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained.[18] R. Papa answered them: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba; for this[19] applies when no definite consent has ever been given;[20] but where definite consent[21] had once been given,[22] his original decision is taken into consideration.[23]

R. Kahana stated: I mentioned this reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea and he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba replying[24] that '[the text speaks] of a slave that has been bought at twilight'. he should rather have given this reply![25] — He gave him one of the two available solutions.

Rabin sent a message in the name of R. Il'ai, [adding]. 'All my masters have so reported in his name': Who is an uncircumcised slave that may be retained? He who was bought by his master with the intention of not having him circumcised.

The Rabbis argued the following in the presence of R. Papa; In accordance with whose view?[26] Obviously not in accordance with that of R. Akiba, since he[27] stated that [uncircumcised slaves] may not be retained! R. Papa answered: It may be said to be the view even of R. Akiba, for this[28] applies where he had made no stipulation with him,[29] but where a stipulation[29] was made, that stipulation must be taken into consideration.[30]

R. Kahana said: When I mentioned the reported discussion in the presence of R. Zebid of Nehardea, he said to me: If so, instead of R. Akiba having recourse to the answer[31] [that 'the text speaks] of a slave who has been bought at twilight when there was not time enough to circumcise him' he should rather have given this reply![32]

But even if your argument is admitted he should rather have given that reply![33] But [the fact is], he mentioned one of two or three solutions.

R. Hanina b. Papi. R. Ammi, and R. Isaac Nappaha once sat in the ante-chamber[34] of R. Isaac Nappaha, and while there, they related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel where slaves refused to be circumcised, and after bearing with them for twelve months they re-sold them to idolaters. In accordance with whose view? — In accordance with that of the following Tanna. For it was taught: If one bought a slave from an idolater, and the slave refused to be circumcised, he bears with him for twelve months. [If by that time] he has not been circumcised, he re-sells him to idolaters. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: In the Land of Israel he must not be kept owing to [possible] damage to levitically clean foodstuffs,[35] and in a town which is near the frontier[36] he must not he kept at all, since he might overhear some secret and proceed to report it to a fellow idolater.[37]

It was taught: R. Hanania son of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Why are proselytes at the present time oppressed and visited with afflictions? Because they had not observed the seven Noahide[38] commandments.[39]

R. Jose said: One who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.[40] Why then are proselytes oppressed? — Because they are not so well acquainted with the details of the commandments as the Israelites.[41]

Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eleazar: Because they do not do it[42] out of love[43] but out of fear.[44] Others said: Because they delayed their entry under the wings of the Shechinah. Said R. Abbahu, or it might be said R. Hanina: What is the Scriptural proof?[45] — The Lord recompense thy work, and be thy reward complete from the Lord, the God of Israel, under whose etc. thou art cone to take refuge.[46]

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 49a

MISHNAH. WHO IS DEEMED TO BE A BASTARD?[1] [THE OFFSPRING OF A UNION WITH] ANY CONSANGUINEOUS RELATIVE WITH WHOM COHABITATION IS FORBIDDEN;[2] THIS IS THE RULING OF R. AKIBA. SIMEON THE TEMANITE SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION] THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS KARETH AT THE HANDS OF HEAVEN; AND THE HALACHAH IS IN AGREEMENT WITH HIS VIEW, AND R. JOSHUA SAID: [THE OFFSPRING OF ANY UNION]. THE PENALTY FOR WHICH IS DEATH AT THE HANDS OF BETH DIN.

SAID R. SIMEON B. ‘AZZAI: I FOUND A ROLL OF GENEALOGICAL RECORDS IN JERUSALEM, AND THEREIN WAS WRITTEN, SO-AND-SO IS A BASTARD [HAVING BEEN BORN] FROM [A FORBIDDEN UNION WITH] A MARRIED WOMAN’,[3] WHICH CONFIRMS THE VIEW OF R. JOSHUA.

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE DIVORCED HER AND THEN SHE DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS[4] MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW[5] DIED, HE MAY MARRY HER SISTER. IF HE SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH AND THEN SHE DIED, HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER. IF SHE WAS MARRIED[6] TO ANOTHER MAN AND THEN DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HER SISTER.

GEMARA. What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written A man shall not take his father's wife and shall not uncover his father's skirt,[7] he shall not uncover the skirt which his father saw; and he[8] holds the same opinion as R. Judah who said that this Scriptural text[7] speaks of a woman whom his father had outraged,[9] and who is classed among those forbidden to him under the penalty for a negative precept;[10] and since close to this [text occurs the commandment], A bastard shall tot enter the assembly of the Lord,[11] it is obvious that the offspring of any such union[12] is deemed to be a bastard. According to R. Simai also who includes[13] [the offspring of] any other union that is forbidden by a negative precept even though [the offenders are] not consanguineous relatives,[14] and according to R. Yeshebab who includes[13] even the offspring of a union forbidden under a positive commandment,[15] the deduction[16] is made from And . . . not.[17]

And Simeon the Temanite?[18] — He holds the same opinion as the Rabbis who stated that the text[17] speaks of a woman[19] awaiting the levirate decision of his father,[20] the union with such a woman[21] being forbidden under the penalty of kareth; and since close to this text appears. A bastard shall not enter,[11] it proves that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of kareth is deemed to be a bastard.

And R. Joshua?[22] — The All Merciful should have written[23] ‘Shall not uncover’ only![24] What need was there for ‘Shall not take’?[25] Must it not, consequently. be concluded that it is this that was meant:[26] [The offspring] of [a union with her who is explicitly mentioned between] ‘Shall not take’ and ‘Shall not uncover’[27] is deemed to be a bastard, but no others[28] are to be regarded as bastards.[29]

(18) Whence, in view of R. Akiba's deduction, dues he derive his ruling in our Mishnah?

(19) Whose husband died without issue.

(20) Who most decide whether to contract with her the levirate marriage or to submit to halizah from her.
(21) As one's father's brother's wife.
(22) Whence does he derive his ruling in out Mishnah?
(23) If the text of Deut. XXIII, 1b speaks of a woman outraged by one's father (as R. Judah maintains) or of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir (as Simeon the Temanite asserts).
(24) From which text alone R. Judah and the Rabbis could have deduced their respective rulings, while the case of one's father's wife would follow logically by inference a minori ad majus.
(25) Cf. Rashal. Cur. edd. insert in parentheses, ‘And shall not uncover.
(26) By the addition of the text Shall not take.
(27) I.e., one's father's wife, forbidden under the death penalty at the hands of Beth din.
(28) The offspring of unions which are forbidden under the penalty of kareth or flogging.
(29) The proximity of Deut, XXIII, 3 (the text relating to the bastard) to that of v. 1, according to R. Joshua, beats on the case of a father's wife only (v. 2a). The mention of ‘shall not uncover’ (v. 1b) implies, if it refers to one's father's brother's widow awaiting the levir's decision (the view of the Rabbis and Simeon the Temanite), that cohabitation with her is forbidden to the levir's sun by two negative precepts, those of Lev. XVIII, 24 and Deut. XXIII, 1b; and if it refers to a woman whom one's father has outraged (the view of R. Akiba and R. Judah). the text is required to lay down this very prohibition.

or with a sotah,[1] the child [born from either union] is no bastard.[2] ‘A menstruant’, since betrothal with her is valid because it is said, And her impurity be upon him,[3] even at the time of her menstruation betrothal with her is valid.[4] ‘A sotah’ also, since her betrothal is valid.[5] It has been taught likewise: All agree that if one cohabited with a menstruant or with a sotah or with a widow awaiting the decision of a levir, the child [born from any such union] is no bastard.[6] And Abaye?[7] — He was in doubt in the case of a widow awaiting the decision of the levir as to whether [the law[8] is] in agreement with Rab or with Samuel.[9]

SAID R. SIMEON B. AZZAI etc. [A tanna] recited: Simeon b. ‘Azzai said, ‘I found a roll of genealogical records in Jerusalem and therein was written "So-and-so is a bastard [having been born] from a forbidden union with] a married woman" and therein was also written "The teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity[10] but thoroughly sifted".[11] And in it was also written, "Manasseh slew Isaiah"’.

Raba said: He[12] brought him to trial and then slew him. He[12] said to him: Your teacher Moses said, ‘For men shall not see Me and live’[13] and you said, ‘I saw the Lord sitting on a throne, high and lifted up’.[14] Your teacher Moses said , ‘For what [great nation is there, that hath God so nigh unto them], as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon him’,[15] and you said, ‘Seek ye the Lord when he may be found’.[16] Your teacher Moses said, ‘The number of thy days I will fulfil’[17] but you said, ‘And I will add on to your days fifteen years’.[18] ‘I know’, thought Isaiah, ‘that whatever I may tell him he will not accept; and should I reply at all, I would only cause him to be a wilful [homicide]’. He thereupon pronounced [the Divine] Name and was swallowed up by a cedar. The cedar, however, was brought and sawn asunder. When the saw reached his month he died. [And this was his penalty] for having said, ‘And I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips’.[19]

[Do not] the contradictions between the Scriptural texts, however, still remain? — ‘I saw the Lord’,[20] [is to be understood] in accordance with what was taught: All the prophets looked into a dim glass,[21] but Moses looked through a clear glass.[22] As to ‘Seek ye the Lord when he may be found [etc.’] one [verse][16] applies to an individual,[23] the other[24] to a congregation. When [is the time for] an individual? — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: The ten days between the New Year[25] and the Day of Atonement.[25] Concerning the number of thy days I will fulfil,[26] Tannaim are in disagreement. For it was taught: The number of thy days I will fulfil[26]

(1) סוטה a woman known to be, or suspected of being faithless to her husband. V. Num. V, 22ff. Such a woman is forbidden to her husband under the penalty of flogging. (V. supra 11b).

(2) Even R. Akiba admits in the latter case though the penalty is flogging (v. supra n. 5), and even Simeon the Temanite admits in the former case though the penalty is kareth.

(4) The offspring of a forbidden but valid union cannot be considered a bastard.

(7) Why did he omit the mention of the third case?

(8) As to the validity of her betrothal by a stranger.

refers to the years of the generations.[1] If one is worthy one is allowed to complete the full period; if unworthy. the number is reduced; so R. Akiba. But the Sages said: If one is worthy years are added to one's life;[2] if unworthy, the years of his life are reduced. They said to R. Akiba: Behold, Scripture says,[3] And I will add unto your days fifteen years![4] He replied: The addition was made of his own,[5] You may know [that this is so][6] since the prophet[7] stood up and prophesied: Behold, a son shall be born to the house of David, Josiah by name,[8] while Manasseh[9] had not yet been born.[10] And the Rabbis![11] — Is it written ‘from Hezekiah’? It is surely written, ‘To the house of David’;[8] he[12] might be born either from Hezekiah or from any other person.[13]

IF A MAN'S WIFE DIED etc. IF A MAN'S SISTER-IN-LAW DIED etc. R. Joseph said: Here Rabbi taught an unnecessary Mishnah.[14]

CHAPTER V

MISHNAH. R. GAMALIEL SAID: THERE IS NO [VALIDITY IN A] LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,[15] NOR IN A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR[16] NOR IN AN ACT OF COHABITATION AFTER ANOTHER ACT OF

COHABITATION,[17] NOR IN A HALIZAH AFTER ANOTHER HALIZAH.[18] THE SAGES, HOWEVER, SAID: A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE,[19] AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR;[20] BUT THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT AFTER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH.[21]

HOW [IS THE RELEASE FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND[22] EFFECTED]? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.[23] IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND PARTICIPATED IN THE HALIZAH, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN FROM HIM A LETTER OF DIVORCE.[24] IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT.[25]

IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE[26] AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.[27] IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.[28] IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT[29] AFTER HALIZAH HAD BEEN PERFORMED.

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER HALIZAH[30]

(1) The span of life allotted to every human being at his birth.

(2) The meaning of fulfil is addition to the allotted span of life.

(3) II Kings XX, 6.

(4) Emphasis on add.

(5) Years which were originally allotted to him and then curtailed.

(6) That the years added were only those allotted to Hezekiah at his birth and reduced at his illness.

(7) In the days of Jeroboam, long before the birth of Hezekiah.

(8) I Kings XIII, 2.

(9) From whom Josiah descended.

(10) At the time of Hezekiah's illness. Manasseh, in fact, was born three years after his father's illness (v. II Kings XXI, 2); and since the birth of his sun Josiah was prophetically announced long before the birth of his father Hezekiah, it is obvious that the years allotted to Hezekiah at his birth extended beyond the year of his illness (to include the year of Manasseh's birth). Consequently, the original number must have been reduced at his illness; and, at his recovery, only that was added which was first reduced.

(11) How could they, in view of the argument advanced, maintain that view years were added to Hezekiah's life?

(12) Josiah.

(13) Of the house of David.

(14) Since the laws therein enumerated are self-evident. Lev. XVIII, 18, from where the prohibition of marrying the sister of one's wife originates, distinctly limits the prohibition to the wife's life-time: And thou shalt not take a woman to her sister . . . in her life-time. V. Rashi a.l. According to Tosaf (s.v. שנה a.l. q.v.) the unnecessary Mishnah is only that portion which relates to the sister-in-law whose case could be inferred from that of the wife a minori ad majus.

(15) Given in succession by one levir to two sisters-in-law, i.e., the widows of a deceased childless brother, or by two levirs to one sister-in-law. (The term sister-in-law used throughout this chapter is to be understood in the sense defined). The second divorce is invalid and the relatives of the second widow are, therefore, permitted to the levir, and so are the relatives of the one widow to the second levir. Whether the first divorce is valid or not, the second is at all events valueless. For if the first is valid the levirate bond with both the widows is thereby severed and the second widow (in the case of one levir) or the one widow (in the case of two Levirs) when receiving the second letter of divorce, is a complete stranger to the levir. If, on the other hand, the first divorce was invalid, the second also, for the same reason, is invalid.

(16) Addressed in succession (a) by one levir to two sisters-in-law or (b) by two levirs to one sister-in-law. The first ma'amar has satisfied all the requirements of the levirate obligations and, consequently, (a) the second widow, or (b) the one widow to whom the second ma'amar was addressed, requires no letter of divorce from (a) the one levir or (b) the second levir respectively. The second widow, moreover, does nor cause the prohibition to the levir of the first widow, and her relatives also are permitted to the levir as are those of the one widow to the second levir.

(17) The second act by the one levir with the second widow or by the second levir with the one widow respectively, is deemed to be one of mere adultery and has no matrimonial validity to cause the prohibition of her relatives to the levir.

(18) Cf. supra n. 2. The first halizah has finally severed the levirate bond between the levir or the levirs and the widow or the widows. The second halizah is, therefore, valueless.

(19) The relatives of the second widow are, therefore, forbidden to the levir (as relatives of his legal divorcee), and the relatives of the one widow are similarly forbidden to the second levir. The first letter of divorce, the Sages maintain, is only partially valid since halizah also is required. The levirate bond consequently is not thereby completely severed and the second divorce brings the widow under the category of a divorced woman. Cf supra 327 n. 1.

(20) The first ma'amar effected only partial matrimony and the levirate obligations were not fully satisfied before the consummation of the marriage took place. The second ma'amar, since it was made before consummation had taken place, is, therefore, valid.

(21) Either of these acts satisfies fully all the requirements of the levirate obligations. The former effected complete union; the latter final severance. No act in connection with the levirate obligations that follows either of these can, therefore, have any validity.

(22) Between one levir and one sister-in-law. This section has no reference to the dispute in the previous section. V. Gemara infra.

(23) But no levirate marriage may now he contracted. The ma'amar alone has not completely satisfied the requirements of the levirate obligations (cf. supra n. 1), hence the need for halizah. Since, however, a divorce had been given the levir had placed himself under the prohibition of Deut. XXV, 9 ‘That doth not build’: if he once refused to build he must never again build (v. supra 10b), hence the prohibition of the levirate marriage.

(24) To annul the ma'amar which, in some respects, has the force of a betrothal. The halizah alone is not enough since it only severs a levirate bond but does not annul a ma'amar.

(25) This is discussed in the Gemara infra.

(26) Even according to R. Gamaliel. The divorce is required to annul the ma'amar since it is possible that the first divorce was invalid and the ma'amar had, therefore, been valid. According to the Sages, who regard the divorce as partially valid, the ma'amar also is partially valid and a divorce is required to annul that part.

(27) In order to sever thereby the levirate bond. Levirate marriage, however, must not take place now after the delivery of the first letter of divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4 final clause).

(28) Levirate marriage is forbidden owing to the first divorce (v. supra p. 325, n. 4, final clause), a letter of divorce is required owing to the act of cohabitation, while halizah is necessary to sever the levirate bond.

(29) Whether it be the addressing of a ma'amar or cohabitation. The levirate bond has completely disappeared.

(30) Cf. supra n. 3. This refers to the cases where halizah was performed first. With reference to the last three cases, where cohabitation took place first, the expression should be ‘no act is valid after cohabitation’. V. Gemara infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 50b

AND THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW TO ONE LEVIR.

HOW?[1] — IF THE LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE[2] AND A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER,[2] TWO LETTERS OF DIVORCE[3] AND ONE HALIZAH[4] ARE REQUIRED.[5] IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE OTHER, [THE ONE] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE[6] AND [THE OTHER MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.[7] IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE

OTHER, BOTH REQUIRE LETTERS OF DIVORCE[8] AND [ONE MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH.[9] IF HE ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, IT IS NECESSARY FOR THE FIRST TO OBTAIN A LETTER OF DIVORCE.[10]

IF THE LEVIR GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER, HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH.[11] IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND COHABITED WITH THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE[12] AND MUST ALSO PERFORM THE HALIZAH.[13] [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO THE OTHER, [THE SECOND] REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND [ONE OF THEM MUST PERFORM] THE HALIZAH. [IF HE GAVE] A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS THE HALIZAH.[14]

IF THE LEVlr SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH [FROM ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH THE ONE AND WITH THE OTHER, OR COHABITED [WITH THE ONE] AND ADDRESSED [TO THE OTHER] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH.[15] [THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW] WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS TO ONE SISTER-IN-LAW.[16]

[IF THE LEVIR,][17] SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER[18] A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER; OR IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, NO ACT IS VALID AFTER THE HALIZAH, WHETHER [IT WAS PERFORMED] IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE,[19] OR AT THE END.[20] IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY; IF IT OCCURRED, HOWEVER, IN THE MIDDLE[21] OR AT THE END[22] SOMETHING VALID[23] STILL REMAINS.[24] R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH, WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE IN THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.[25]

GEMARA. Their difference[26] concerns only a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce and a ma'amar after another ma'amar, but one letter of divorce to one sister-in-law or one ma'amar to one sister-in-law is valid.[27]

Why did the Rabbis say that a letter of divorce to one sister-in-law is valid?[28] — Because it is also valid elsewhere.[29] For should you suggest that it is not valid,[30] it might be argued that since a letter of divorce serves to release a woman and halizah serves to release a woman, as the letter of divorce is of no effect,[31] so is the halizah also of no effect, and thus one would come to consummate marriage after halizah.[32]

And why did the Rabbis say that a ma'amar with one sister-in-law is valid?[33] — Because it is valid elsewhere.[34] For should you say that it is not valid,[35] it might be argued that since a ma'amar serves the purpose of acquisition[34] and cohabitation serves the purpose of acquisition,[36] as a ma'amar is of no effect,[37] so is cohabitation also of no effect[38] and one would thus consummate marriage[39] after an act of cohabitation.[40]

And why did the Rabbis say that after an invalid cohabitation something[41] lingers?[42] — It might be replied that if it is a cohabitation[43] after a letter of divorce,[44] a preventive measure was made[45] against cohabitation after halizah;[46] and if it is a cohabitation[43] after a ma'amar[44] a preventive measure had to be made[47] against cohabitation after cohabitation.[48]

And why did the Rabbis say that after the invalid halizah[49] nothing lingers?[50] — It may be replied: What kind of preventive measure could have been enacted! Should halizah after a letter of divorce be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after halizah?[51] Under such circumstances, surely, halizah might well be indefinitely continued![52] And should halizah after a ma'amar be forbidden as a preventive measure against halizah after cohabitation?[53] Surely [it may be replied] is not in the case of halizah after a ma'amar, a letter of divorce required in respect of one's ma'amar? So also in the case of halizah after cohabitation, a letter of divorce is required in respect of one's cohabitation.[54]

Raba said:

(1) How are the obligations of the levirate carried out where there is one levir and two sisters-in-law?

(2) Sister-in-law.

(3) One for each woman, in accordance with the view of the Sages in our Mishnah that a ma'amar after a ma'amar is valid.

(4) With either. The halizah with one exempts her rival.

(5) Levirate marriage, however, is now forbidden since one must not build two houses'. V. supra.

(6) Marriage with her must not be consummated on account of the divorce of the second; hence the necessity for a divorce to annul the ma'amar which the halizah cannot do.

(7) To sever thereby the levirate bond which a letter of divorce cannot do.

(8) On account of the ma'amar and the cohabitation respectively. The second widow may not be retained in matrimony owing to the bond of the ma'amar with the first.

(9) The other becoming thereby exempt from the levirate obligations. The divorce alone does not set the second free because the cohabitation with her was not the performance of a legal commandment but an unlawful act.

(10) The halizah of this second cannot annul the force of the ma'amar of the first.

(11) The halizah is performed by one who thereby exempts the other. V. Gemara infra.

(12) She is forbidden to the levir on account of the divorce of the first.

(13) Divorce alone is not enough since the cohabitation was unlawful (cf. supra note 3).

(14) The halizah of the second sets both widows free; and the divorce of the first is of no consequence.

(15) Cf p. 329, n. 4. The relatives of the second widow are permitted to him as if he had not acted at all after the first halizah.

(16) And the two levirs performed the above mentioned acts with the same widow.

(17) Where there was only one levir and one sister-in-law.

(18) The same sister-an-law.

(19) Between a ma'amar and a divorce. If, e.g., he gave a letter of divorce to one, submitted to halizah from the other and then addressed a ma'amar to one of them.

(20) After a ma'amar and a divorce. The halizah is invariably valid, and any ma'amar addressed subsequently has no validity at all, and the widow requires no divorce.

(21) If. e.g.. he divorced one, cohabited with the other and addressed a ma'amar to a third, in which case the cohabitation, owing to the previous divorce, was unlawful.

(22) If he divorced one, addressed a ma'amar to the other, and then cohabited with one of them. V. supra n. 7.

(23) Of the levirate bond.

(24) Hence, in the first case (v. supra n. 7), the relatives of the last widow are forbidden to him, and in the second case (v. supra n. 8), halizah is required, since the levirate bond cannot be severed by a letter of divorce.

(25) After cohabitation a letter of divorce without halizah is enough, and betrothal of the other after cohabitation with the first is invalid.

(26) That of R. Gamaliel and the Sages in our Mishnah.

(27) The divorce prevents subsequent levirate marriage under the prohibition of ‘that doth not build’ etc. (v. supra p. 328, n. 4, second clause); and the ma'amar prevents the levirate marriage of a rival under the injunction, ‘a levir may build one house but not two houses’, and necessitates also a letter of divorce should it be desired to cancel the ma'amar.
(28) In the Pentateuch, surely, only halizah was prescribed and the prohibition under ‘that doth not build’ should apply to the prescribed ceremony only!
(29) In the release of all married women.
(30) And that the levir may marry the widow even after he gave her a letter of divorce.
(31) v. supra n. 4.
(32) And thus infringe a Pentateuchal prohibition.
(33) Forbidding levirate marriage with her rival. Since, according to the Pentateuch, acquisition of the sister-in-law is effected by the consummation of the levirate marriage, that consummation only should have had the force of forbidding marriage with the rival.
(34) The usual betrothal between man and woman, which is as binding as the consummation of marriage.
(35) And that after a ma'amar had been addressed to a sister-in-law her rival may be married.
(36) Cf. supra n. 7.
(37) Without subsequent cohabitation.
(38) Unless there was also a ma'amar.
(39) With a rival.
(40) With one of the widows. Such a marriage. however, would infringe (v. supra note 1) a Pentateuchal prohibition.
(41) Of the levirate bond.
(42) Halizah being required in the case of the second widow in addition to the letter of divorce. V. supra p. 330, nn. 6 and 7.
(43) With one sister-in-law.
(44) To the other.
(45) V. p. 332. n. 16.
(46) Were a letter of divorce alone, without halizah, permitted, it might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation is so effective it might also be effective enough to annul a previous halizah.
(47) Cf. p. 332, n. 26, and p. 330, nn. 2 and 3.
(48) It might have been assumed that as unlawful cohabitation has the force of validity even after a ma'amar which is a legal kinyan, it has also the same force after a kinyan that had been effected through lawful cohabitation. Acting on this argument one would infringe the prohibition of marriage with one's brother's wife.
(49) Performed after a divorce or a ma'amar.
(50) Should the levir subsequent to such a halizah address a ma'amar or give a letter of divorce to a third sister-in-law his act would have no validity whatsoever.
(51) So that a levir does not submit to the halizah of two sisters-in-law in succession, and two levirs do not submit in succession to the halizah of one sister-in-law.
(52) And none will be the worse for it.
(53) That it be not assumed that halizah without a letter of divorce is sufficient after an act of cohabitation.
(54) The implication of ‘nothing lingers after an unlawful halizah’ is the invalidity of all subsequent acts. Any previous act such as ma'amar or cohabitation is valid, and a letter of divorce to annul it is certainly required.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 51a

What is R. Gamaliel's reason?[1] — Because he was in doubt whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside [the levirate bond, and whether] a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan.[2] ‘ Whether a letter of divorce does, or does not set aside the levirate bond’: If the first[3] does set aside [the levirate bond], what purpose could the latter serve?[4] If the first[3] does not set aside [the levirate bond] , the latter also does not set it aside. ‘Whether a ma'amar does, or does not effect a kinyan’: if the first[5] does effect a kinyan, what purpose could the latter serve?[4] And if the first[5] effects no kinyan, the latter also does not.

Abaye raised the following objection against him: R. Gamaliel, however, admits that ‘there is [validity in] a letter of divorce after a ma'amar,[6] in a ma'amar after a letter of divorce,[7] in a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar,[8] and in a ma'amar after cohabitation and a letter of divorce'.[9] Now, if R. Gamaliel was in doubt,[10] the cohabitation[11] should be regarded as if it had taken place at the beginning,[12] and thus constitute a kinyan; for surely we have learnt, IN THE CASE OF COHABITATION, IF IT TOOK PLACE FIRST, NO ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT HAS ANY VALIDITY!

But, said Abaye, though obvious to R. Gamaliel that a letter of divorce does set aside the levirate bond and that a ma'amar does effect a kinyan,[13] the Rabbis have nevertheless ruled that with the sister-in-law a letter of divorce is partially valid and a ma'amar is partially valid. Consequently, a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce does not set aside the levirate bond since this[14] was already set aside by the first,[15] and a ma'amar after a ma'amar does not constitute a kinyan since this kinyan[16] has already been constituted by the first;[15] with a letter of divorce after a ma'amar, and a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, however, the one act[17] sets aside[18] while the other[19] effects a kinyan.[20] (And the Rabbis?[21] — [They hold that] the Rabbis have instituted for every levir a letter of divorce and a ma'amar in respect of every sister-in-law.)[22]

But as to an invalid cohabitation[23] [according to R. Gamaliel][24] it is [in one respect] of superior force to a ma'amar and [in another respect] of inferior force to a ma'amar. It is superior to a ma'amar, since whereas a ma'amar after another ma'amar is not effective,[25] an act of cohabitation after a ma'amar is effective.[26] It is inferior to a ma'amar, for whereas a ma'amar after a letter of divorce constitutes a kinyan of all that the letter of divorce has left,[27] cohabitation after a letter of divorce does not constitute a kinyan of all that the divorce has left.[28]

Our Rabbis taught; How [are we to understand] R. Gamaliel's statement that there is [no validity in] a letter of divorce after another letter of divorce? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he gave a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, in accordance with R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first,[29] and is forbidden to marry her relatives,[30] though the relatives of the second one are permitted to him.[31] But the Sages said: If he gave a letter of divorce to one and to the other, he is forbidden to marry the relatives of both[32] and he submits to halizah from either of them. And the same law applies where there are two Ievirs[33] and one sister-in-law.

What did R. Gamaliel mean by his statement that[34] there is no [validity in] a ma'amar after another ma'amar'? If two sisters-in-law have fallen to the lot of one levir, and he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives,[35] though the relatives of the second are permitted to him.[36] The Sages, however, said: He gives letters of divorce to both, and the relatives of both are forbidden to him,[32] while he submits to halizah from one of them. And the same law is to be applied where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law.[37]

The Master said, 'If he gave[38] a letter of divorce to one as well as to the other, he submits, according to R. Gamaliel's statement, to halizah from the first and is forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him'. Must this be assumed to present an objection against a ruling of Samuel, since Samuel stated, 'If he submitted to halizah from the one[39] who had been divorced,[40] her rival[41] is not thereby exempt'![42] — Samuel can answer you: What I said was in agreement with him who maintains that a levirate bond exists,[43] while R. Gamaliel holds the opinion that no levirate bond exists.[44]

Since R. Gamaliel, however, is of the opinion that no levirate bond exists,

---

(1) In our Mishnah, v. supra p. 327, nn. 1 and 2.

(2) To constitute a legal marriage.

(3) Letter of divorce.

(4) Obviously none. Consequently it is valueless.

(5) Ma'amar.

(6) If the ma'amar was addressed to one of the widows and the letter of divorce was subsequently given to the other, the first also is forbidden levirate marriage, while the relatives of both are forbidden to the levir.

(7) If a letter of divorce was given to one of the widows first, and a ma'amar was subsequently addressed to the second, a letter of divorce must also be given to the second in order to annul thereby the force of the ma'amar.

(8) Which was addressed to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the letter of divorce to the third. The validity of the letter of divorce causes the prohibition to the levir of the relatives of the third widow.

(9) Given to one of the widows prior to the cohabitation with the second that preceded the ma'amar addressed to the third. The ma'amar constitutes a kinyan, and the relatives of the third widow are forbidden to the levir, while she herself can be released by a letter of divorce only.

(10) As to the validity of a letter of divorce and a ma'amar given or addressed respectively to a sister-in-law.

(11) Which took place between the other two acts.

(12) And the act that follows it, whether it be the delivery of a letter of divorce or the addressing of a ma'amar, should in any case be invalid: In the case of a ma'amar, cohabitation, and divorce, if the ma'amar with the first was valid and effected kinyan, the cohabitation with the second was obviously invalid and much more so the letter of divorce that was given to the third. If, on the other hand, the ma'amar to the first was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and there could consequently be no validity in the letter of divorce that was subsequently given to the third. Similarly in the case of divorce, cohabitation and ma'amar, if the letter of divorce given to the first widow was valid the cohabitation that followed had no validity and much more so the ma'amar that came last. If, on the other hand, the letter of divorce given to the first widow was invalid, the cohabitation with the second widow that followed was obviously valid and consequently there could be no validity in the ma'amar that was subsequently addressed to the third widow. In both cases, then, cohabitation which took place between the other two acts should be as valid as if it had taken place at the beginning.

(13) Cohabitation, therefore, that follows either of these acts cannot have the same force as cohabitation that takes place first.

(14) Whatever part of the levirate bond a divorce can set aside.

(15) And the second can add nothing to it.

(16) As far as a ma'amar has the force of constituting it.

(17) The divorce.

(18) Partially.

(19) The ma'amar.

(20) V. supra n. 4. In the case of a divorce after a ma'amar, that part of the levirate bond with the first widow which the ma'amar did not effect is set aside by the letter of divorce that was given to the second. Similarly, where there are two levirs and one widow, whatever was not covered by the kinyan of the ma'amar of the first levir is set aside by the letter of divorce of the second. So also in the case of a ma'amar after a letter of divorce, whatever part of the levirate bond remained after the letter of divorce had been given to the first widow (or to one widow by the first levir) is brought under the kinyan constituted by the ma'amar that has been addressed to the second widow (or to the one widow by the second levir).

(21) The Sages in our Mishnah. How, in view of what has just been explained — can they maintain that A LETTER OF DIVORCE HAS VALIDITY AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND A MA'AMAR AFTER ANOTHER MA'AMAR?

(22) The divorce or ma'amar of one levir does not in any way affect the validity of that of any other levir, nor does any of these acts, performed by a levir in respect of one sister-in-law, affect his performance of these acts in respect of another sister-in-law. The divorce or ma'amar in respect of the first sister-in-law does not, therefore, affect that of the second, and the performance of the same acts by the first levir in respect of one sister-in-law does not invalidate the performance of these acts in respect of the same sister-in-law by the other levir. Hence the opinion of the Rabbis in our Mishnah.

(23) That which was preceded by divorce or ma'amar.

(24) Who stated that a letter of divorce following a cohabitation which followed a ma'amar, and a ma'amar following a cohabitation which followed a letter of divorce are valid.

(25) As has been stated supra.

(26) As may be inferred from the ruling concerning ‘a letter of divorce after cohabitation and a ma'amar’, which implies that cohabitation after a ma'amar is valid (Rashi). Cf. Tosaf. s.v. עדיפא, and תוספות ישנים a.l.

(27) For should a ma'amar, subsequent to the first, be addressed to a third widow it would be altogether invalid, R. Gamaliel invariably admitting no ma'amar after another ma'amar whether the first one was, or was not preceded by a letter of divorce.

(28) A ma'amar being valid even if it was addressed after an act of cohabitation that followed a letter of divorce.

(29) Though he could certainly submit to halizah from the second, the letter of divorce to whom is invalid, and thereby exempt the first also. He is advised, however, to submit to halizah from the first because by so doing he averts the prohibition to him of the second widow's relatives who, had he submitted to her halizah, would have become forbidden to him as the ‘relatives of his haluzah’. The prohibition to him of the relatives of the first as ‘relatives of his haluzah’ is of no practical consequence since they are already, owing to the divorce he had given her forbidden to him as the ‘relatives of his divorcee.

(30) They being the relatives of both his divorcee and his haluzah. Cf. supra p. 336, n. 7.

(31) Because she is neither his haluzah nor his divorcee, the halizah not having been performed by her and the letter of divorce that was given to her being invalid.

(32) Both divorces being valid.

(33) And each of them gave a letter of divorce to the one sister-in-law. According to R. Gamaliel, halizah is performed with the first levir and the second levir is permitted to marry her relatives; while according to the Rabbis her relatives are forbidden to both levirs and the halizah is performed with either of them.

(34) Lit., ‘how’.

(35) As the ‘relatives of his haluzah’.

(36) Since she is neither his wife nor his haluzah nor his divorcee.

(37) Cf. supra n. 4.

(38) The Heb. uses here the present participle instead of the perfect used supra in the original.

(39) Of two sisters-in-law, the widows of his deceased childless brother.

(40) By him, prior to the performance of the halizah.

(41) Who had not been divorced and whose levirate bond has consequently still its full force.

(42) Supra 27a. A halizah performed by one whose levirate bond had been weakened by divorce cannot sever the levirate bond of the other which had never been weakened by divorce and had retained therefore its full force (v. supra n. 2). This is contradictory to R. Gamaliel's view according to which the halizah of the first, though it followed her divorce which had weakened her levirate bond, is effective enough to exempt her rival whose levirate bond retained its full force, since her divorce was invalid and might be regarded as never having taken place.

(43) Between the levir and the sister-in-law. This levirate bond can only be severed by a halizah which is free from all objection.

(44) v. infra 109a. Hence, even a halizah which is not free from objection is effective enough to sever it.

the Rabbis are presumably of the opinion that a]levirate bond does exist,[1] and yet it was stated in the final clause, ‘And the same law applies where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law’![2] Must it then be said that this represents an objection to a statement made by Rabbah son of R. Huna in the name of Rab? For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers![3] — Rabbah son of R. Huna can answer you: Both according to the view of R. Gamaliel and that of the Rabbis no levirate bond exists,[4] and their difference here extends only to the question of a divorce that followed another divorce and a ma'amar that followed another ma'amar.

The Master said, ‘If he addressed a ma'amar to the one as well as to the other, he gives, according to R. Gamaliel, a letter of divorce to the first, submits also to her halizah, and is in consequence forbidden to marry her relatives, though the relatives of the second are permitted to him’. Now, consider! Since R. Gamaliel holds that there is no [validity in a] ma'amar that follows another ma'amar, the first [sister-in-law] should even be permitted to contract the levirate marriage![5] — A preventive ordinance had to be made[6] against the possibility of the levir's marrying the second.

R. Johanan said: R. Gamaliel, Beth Shammai, R. Simeon b. ‘Azzai and R. Nehemiah are all of the opinion that a ma'amar constitutes a [fairly][7] perfect kinyan:[8]

As to R. Gamaliel, there is the statement already mentioned.[9]

Beth Shammai? — For we learned: If two of three brothers were married to two sisters and the third was unmarried, and when one of the sisters’ husbands died, the unmarried brother addressed to her a ma'amar and then his second brother died, Beth Shammai say: His wife[10] [remains] with him[11] while the other is exempt[12] as being his wife's sister.[13] cannot have any validity[14] if, however, the cohabitation of the first has no validity, then that of the second also has no validity.[15] Now, the cohabitation of one who is nine years of age has been given by the Rabbis[15] the same force as that of a ma'amar[16] and yet R. Simeon stated that such cohabitation[17] has no validity.[18]

Ben ‘Azzai? — For it was taught: Ben ‘Azzai stated, ‘A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs[19] and one sister-in-law,[20] but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir’.[21]

R. Nehemiah? — For we learned, R. NEHEMIAH SAID: WITH COHABITATION AS WITH HALIZAH WHETHER IT TOOK PLACE AT THE BEGINNING, IN THE MIDDLE, OR AT THE END, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT. Now, an invalid cohabitation has been given by the Rabbis the same force as a ma'amar,[22] and yet it was stated, THERE IS NO VALIDITY IN ANY ACT THAT FOLLOWS IT.[23]

HOW . . . IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR etc.

(1) It is now assumed that, as the Rabbis disagreed with R. Gamaliel on the question of a divorce that followed another divorce, they disagreed also on that of the levirate bond.

(2) According to which the Rabbis maintain that either levir may submit to the halizah (v. supra p. 337, n. 4) and the performance of this impaired halizah exempts the other brother,

(3) V. supra 26b. The performance of it by one brother does not exempt any of the others!

(4) While Rabbah son of R. Huna himself does not follow this view but that of the authority who maintains that a levirate bond does exist.

(5) Since the ma'amar to the second had no validity at all.

(6) That levirate marriage shall not be contracted with the first.

(7) V. Rashi, a.l.

(8) I.e., it is regarded as a perfect kinyan in some, though not in all respects. Cf. Tosaf. s.v. דתניא supra 19a.

(9) Supra, that a ma'amar is invalid after another ma'amar, because the first had already constituted an kinyan.

(10) I.e., the widow to whom he had addressed the ma'amar.

(11) Because the ma'amar he had addressed to her constituted a kinyan and she is regarded as his wife. Her sister, when she subsequently became subject to the levirate marriage through the death of her husband, could no more be married to him since at that time she was already ‘his wife's sister’.

(12) Even from halizah.

(13) ‘Ed. IV, 9, supra 29a. (10) Of two young levirs of the ages of nine years and one day. According to the Rabbis, if two levirs of such an age cohabited successively with their sister-in-law, the widow of their deceased brother, their acts have the same force as that of a ma'amar that followed a ma'amar. As with a ma'amar the second has also the validity of a betrothal and causes the prohibition of the sister-in-law to the first, so with cohabitation, the act of the second levir causes the sister-in-law to be forbidden to the first levir also. R. Simeon, however, regards the first act only as a valid kinyan. The other consequently is invalid. V. infra 96b. (11) Effecting a kinyan.

(14) The kinyan of the first would not admit it.

(15) Infra 96b.

(16) V. supra p. 339, n. 10.

(17) By the second levir.

(18) Obviously because the kinyan had been effected by the cohabitation of the first. Thus it follows that a ma'amar also (cohabitation and ma'amar having equal validity) effects kinyan.

(19) Each one of whom had addressed to the widow only one ma'amar.

(20) Since each levir is entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.

(21) The second ma'amar has no validity, because by the first ma'amar the levir had already effected the k,in;/an of the sister-in-law to whom he had addressed it.

(22) Since in both cases, divorce alone is not enough to sever the levirate bond, halizah also being required.

(23) Obviously because the cohabitation like a ma'amar had constituted a kinyan.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52a

Is this an illustration of a letter of divorce after a letter of divorce?[1] Rab Judah replied it is this that was meant: [The illustration of] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AFTER ANOTHER LETTER OF DIVORCE and OF A MA'AMAR AFTER AN OTHER MA'AMAR is as stated;[2] but[3] HOW IS THE RELEASE [FROM THE LEVIRATE BOND EFFECTED] where there is one levir and one sister-in-law? — IF A LEVIR ADDRESSED A MA'AMAR TO HIS SISTER-IN-LAW AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH WITH HIM.[4]

IF HE ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR AND THEN COHABITED WITH HER, BEHOLD THIS IS IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Might it be suggested that this provides support for R. Huna? For R. Huna stated: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths, and then cohabits with her.[5] — One might read,[6] THIS IS also IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE PRESCRIBED PRECEPT. Is not this obvious? — It might have been presumed that since a Master stated, ‘If the levir addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, the levirate bond disappears, and he comes under the bond of betrothal and marriage’,[7] he[8] is not performing the commandment,[9] hence we were taught [that he does].

[To turn to] the main text. ‘R. Huna said: The precept of marriage with a sister-in-law is properly performed when the levir first betroths and then cohabits with her. If he cohabited with her, and then addressed to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted.’ ‘If he cohabited with her and then addressed to her a ma'amar is so obvious,[10] since he had acquired her by the cohabitation![11] — Read, rather, ‘If he cohabited with her without previously addressing to her a ma'amar a kinyan is nevertheless constituted’. But was it not taught that the penalty of flogging[12] is inflicted upon him?[13] — Chastisement[14] was meant, which is a Rabbinical penalty.[15] For Rab ordered the chastisement[16] of any person who betrothed by cohabitation,[17] who betrothed in the open street,[18] or who betrothed without previous negotiation;[19] who annulled a letter of divorce,[20] or who made a declaration against a letter of divorce;[21] who was insolent[22] towards the representative of the Rabbis,[23] or who allowed a Rabbinical ban upon him to remain for thirty days and did not come to the Beth din to request the removal of that ban; and of a son-in-law who lives in his father-in-law's house. [You say,] only if he lives,[24] but not if he only passes by? Surely, a man once passed by the door of his father-in-law's house, and R. Shesheth ordered his chastisement! — That man was suspected of immoral relations with his mother-in-law. The Nehardeans stated: Rab ordered the chastisement of none of these[25] except him who betrothed by cohabitation without preliminary negotiation. Others say: Even with preliminary negotiation; because [such a practice is sheer] licentiousness. Our Rabbis taught: How is betrothal effected with a ma'amar? — If he gave her[26] some money or anything of value.[27] And how is it effected by a deed? — ‘How is it effected by a deed’? Surely as has been stated:[28] If he wrote for her on a piece of paper or on a sherd, although it was not worth even a perutah,[29] ‘Behold thou art be trothed unto me'![30] Abaye replied, It is this that was meant: How is the deed of the kethubah[31] in a levirate marriage [to be drawn up]? He writes for her. 'I, So-and-so, son of So-and-so, undertake to feed and maintain in a suitable manner my sister-in-law So-and-so, provided that her kethubah remains a charge upon the estate of her first husband'.[32] If, however, she is unable to obtain it from her first husband, provision was made by the Rabbis [that she is to receive it] from the second,[33] in order that it may not be easy for him to divorce her.[34]

Abaye enquired of Rabbah: What is the law if he gave her[35] a letter of divorce and said, 'Behold thou art divorced from me, but thou art not permitted to any other man'?[36] The divorce of a sister-in-law being Rabbinically valid, [shall I say that] only a divorce which is valid in the case of a married woman is valid in the case of a sister-in-law, but a divorce which is invalid in the case of a married woman is also invalid in the case of a sister-in-law,[37] or [had provision to be made here[38] against] the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce?[39] — The other replied: Provision has to be made against the possibility of mistaking it for an unqualified divorce.[34] Rabbah b. Hanan demurred: Now then,[40] had he given her a mere scrap of paper would he also have disqualified her?[41] The other replied: There [the scrap of paper] does not cause the woman to be unfit for a priest;[42] here, however, [the qualified divorce] does cause the woman to become unfit for a priest[43] , for it was taught, Neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband,[44] even if she was only divorced from her husband[45] they may not take her,[46] and that is what was meant by the 'scent of the divorce' that causes a woman's unfitness for a priest.[47]

Rami b. Hama said: It has been definitely[48] stated that if a man said to a scribe , 'Write a letter of divorce for my betrothed so that when I have married her I may divorce her' the letter of divorce is valid,[49] because it was in his power[50] to divorce her;[51]

(1) The Sages speak of a letter of divorce another letter of divorce, while the illustration which follows describes a ma'amar that was followed by a letter of divorce!

(2) In the Baraitha supra 51a, 'Our Rabbis taught: How . . . R. Gamaliel's statement etc.' The Mishnah, however, provides no explanation of illustration of these cases, and proceeds to another point.

(3) This is the meaning of what follows.

(4) V. supra p. 325, n. 4.

(5) And ma'amar and betrothal are essentially the same form of kinyan

(6) In our Mishnah.

(8) Because of the ma'amar he had addressed.

(9) Of the levirate marriage, even though cohabitation had taken place subsequently.

(10) That a kinyan had been effected.

(11) What need then was there to state the obvious?

(12) Malkoth (v. Glos.) inflicted for the transgression of Pentateuchal negative precepts.

(13) For the omission of the ma'amar, prior to his cohabitation, A ma'amar is consequently (v. supra n. 9) a Pentateuchal requirement. How, then, could it be said that a kinyan may be constituted though the ma'amar had been omitted!

(14) Makkath marduth, v. Glos.

(15) For offences that are not Pentateuchal.

(16) Makkath marduth, v. Glos.

(17) Regarding such a practice as immoral.

(19) Regarding such a practice as immoral.

(20) Such an act might lead a divorced woman, who was unaware of the annulment, to an illegal marriage.

(21) That it was invalid. If he stated, e.g., that he gave it under compulsion.

(22) Cf. Rashi a.l. Or, 'who offends'. V. Tosaf. s.v. דמתפקר a.l.

(24) At his father-in-law's.

(25) Cases, enumerated supra.
(26) The levir to the sister-in-law.
(27) And addressed to her the ma'amar in the prescribed form: ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by this levirate ma'amar. Though betrothal with money in the case of an ordinary union constitutes perfect kinyan, in the case of betrothal by a levir (to whom a sister-in-law is ordinarily forbidden, and betrothal with whom is consequently invalid) betrothal alone, even when it concerns a levirate union, is not sufficient to constitute a kinyan until consummation of the marriage has taken place.
(28) In the case of any other betrothal that is effected by means of a deed.
(29) V. Glos.
(30) Kid. 9a. As betrothal by money in the case of a levirate union takes the same form as that of an ordinary betrothal so should betrothal by deed!
(31) By ‘deed’ the kethubah (v. Glos.) was meant and not the ‘deed of the ma'amar’.
(32) The deceased brother (supra 38a) because ‘a wife has been given to him from heaven’ (v. supra 39a and notes).
(33) The levir who married her.
(34) Cf. supra 39a.
(35) The levir to the sister-in-law.
(36) Does such a qualified divorce effect the prohibition of the widow to the levir and to his brother as if an unqualified divorce had been given to her? In the case of a married woman no divorce can release her unless it was free from all qualifying conditions.
(37) Hence there is no validity in this divorce, and the sister-in-law remains permitted to the levirs as if no divorce had ever been given.
(38) That the divorce is valid despite its qualification (v. supra n. 7).
(39) Were the widow to be permitted to the levir after a qualified divorce she might erroneously be permitted even after an unqualified, and valid, divorce.
(40) If provision has to be made against mistaking a valid, for an invalid document.
(41) From subsequently marrying the levir.
(42) Having no validity whatsoever it could never be mistaken for a proper divorce.
(43) A priest causes his wife to be forbidden to him even if the divorce he gave her was only a qualified one.
(44) Lev. XXI, 7.
(45) I.e., if she was given a qualified divorce which does not set her free to marry any other man.
(46) Since such a divorce has the validity of causing the woman's prohibition to her husband who is a priest it might easily be mistaken for a valid divorce. Hence the provision mentioned.
(47) Git. 82b, infra 94a.
(48) Lit., ‘behold’.
(49) If he gave it to her after marriage.
(50) At the time the letter of divorce was written.
(51) As his betrothed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 52b

if[1] for any other woman, the letter of divorce has no validity,[2] because it was not in his power to divorce her.[3] Rami b. Hama inquired, however, what is the law if[4] for one's sister-in-law?[5] Is she, because she is bound to him,[6] regarded as his betrothed[7] or perhaps, since he addressed no ma'amar to her, she is not so regarded. This is undecided.[8]

R. Hanania inquired: What is the law if he[9] wrote a letter of divorce in respect of his levirate bond but not in respect of his ma'amar, or in respect of his ma'amar and not in respect of his levirate bond?[10] Is the ma'amar imposed upon the levirate bond,[11] so that the levir's action[12] is like that of divorcing half a woman,[13] and when a man divorces half a woman his action, surely, has no validity at all; or do they remain independent of one another?[14] — Might not this enquiry be solved by reference to Raba's ruling? For Raba ruled: If he[15] gave her a letter of divorce in respect of his ma'amar, her rival[16] is permitted![17] — This was obvious to Raba; to R. Hanania, however, it was a matter of doubt. What, then, is the decision? — This remains undecided.[18]

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. Rab Judah said in the name of Rab: This[19] is the view of R. Akiba who holds that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is of no validity; the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah. But how can you ascribe it[20] to R. Akiba? In the first section, surely, it was stated, IF THE LEVIR GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, IT IS NECESSARY FOR HER TO OBTAIN [A SECOND] LETTER OF DIVORCE AND TO PERFORM THE HALIZAH, while if [this Mishnah represented the view of] R. Akiba would a ma'amar to her be valid after a letter of divorce had already been given to her? Surely it was taught: R. Akiba said, ‘Whence is it deduced that if a man gives a letter of divorce to his sister-in-law she is thereby forbidden to him for ever? Because it was stated Her former husband, who sent her away, may not [take her again to be his wife],[21] [i.e., immediately] after sending her away’![22] R. Ashi replied: A divorce given by levirs is only Rabbinically valid,[23] and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.[24] Likewise it was also taught: Rabbi said, this statement[25] was made only in accordance with the view of R. Akiba who treated a haluzah as a forbidden relative;[26] the Sages, however, maintain that there is some validity in acts after halizah; and I say, ‘When [is betrothal after halizah valid]? Only when he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony,[27] but if he betrothed her for levirate union,[28] there is no validity in any such act after the halizah.[29] It was taught elsewhere: If a man submitted to halizah from his sister-in-law and then betrothed her, Rabbi said, ‘If he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce, but if as for a levirate union there is no need for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce’. The Sages, however, said: ‘Whether he betrothed her as in ordinary matrimony or as for the levirate union it is necessary for her to obtain from him a letter of divorce’.

Said R. Joseph: What is Rabbi's reason?[30] — It was given the same legal force as that of the action of a person digging in the estate of a proselyte[31] believing it to be his own,[32] which constitutes no kinyan.[33] Said Abaye to him:[34] Are the two cases alike? There[35] he[36] had no intention at all of acquiring possession,[37] but here[38] his intention, surely, was to acquire possession![39] This, indeed, could only be compared to the case of a person who digs in the estate of one proselyte and believes it to be that of another, where he does acquire possession![40] No, explained Abaye, here we are dealing with a case where the levir said to her, ‘Be thou betrothed to me by the ma'amar of the levirate union’. Rabbi is of the opinion that the ma'amar can only be imposed upon the levirate bond,[41] but here[42] the halizah had already previously removed the levirate bond.[43] The Rabbis, however, are of the opinion that the one is independent of the other.[44] If, then, the levir had said to her at first,[45] ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by this ma'amar of the levirate union’, would not his kinyan have been valid?[46] Consequently it is now also valid.

Raba said: Had he said to her,[47] ‘By the ma'amar of the levirate union’, there would be no disagreement [among the authorities] that it is valid; but here[48] we are dealing with a case where the levir said, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate’. Rabbi is of the opinion

(1) The scribe was asked to write the letter of divorce.

(2) Even if it was given to the woman after he had married her.

(3) Since at that time she was to him a complete stranger.

(4) The scribe was asked to wrote the letter of divorce.

(5) The letter of divorce having been written before the levirate marriage, and delivered to the widow after it had taken place.

(6) By the levirate bond.

(7) And the divorce is consequently valid.

(8) Teku, v. Glos.

(9) A levir after he addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law.
(10) Is she thereby forbidden to him as if a valid divorce had been given to her?
(11) And becomes united with, and inseparable from it.
(12) In severing the bond or annulling the ma'amar.
(13) Since the divorce in respect of his one connection with the woman has no validity in respect of his other connection which forms together with the first one complete whole.
(14) Lit., 'that stands alone' (bis). The ma'amar and the levirate bond constitute separate and independent connections between the levir and the widow. Hence, if the divorce was for the levitate bond alone, the widow is forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (under the prohibition 'that doth not build etc.') as well as to his brothers (the levirate bond saving been severed); and if the divorce was for the ma'amar only, the widow, though forbidden to the levir who gave her the divorce (for the reason stated), is nevertheless permitted to his brothers, since the levirate bond has never been severed.
(15) The second of three brothers who had addressed a ma'amar to the first brother's widow. V. Mishnah supra 31b.
(16) The second brother's first wife who, while the ma'amar remained in force, was forbidden to the third brother.
(17) To the third surviving brother if the second brother also died without issue. The two widows, owing to the divorce which had annulled the ma'amar, are no longer rivals; and being now the widows of two different brothers, are in fact both permitted to the third brother. The widow to whom the divorce had been given is forbidden only as a preventive measure (v. supra 32b). From the fact, however, that the second brother's first wife is permitted to the third surviving brother it follows that the divorce (a) annuls the ma'amar and (b) does not sever the levitate bond. Had it not annulled the ma'amar, the widow would have been forbidden owing to the levitate bond emanating from two levirs; while if the levirate bond also had been severed she would have been forbidden to the third brother as 'brother's wife'. Why then was R. Hanania doubtful on the point?
(18) Teku, v. Glos.
(19) That no act is valid after halizah.
(20) The quoted section of our Mishnah, and presumably all our Mishnah.
(21) Deut. XXIV, 4.
(22) Even before she had been married to a second husband. (V. Deut, XXIV, 2-4). The superfluous expression 'who sent her away' implies that divorce in a certain case, viz., in that of a sister-in-law, causes the permanent prohibition of the divorced woman to the man who divorced her immediately after divorce had taken place. Now, since betrothal of a sister-in-law by a levir who divorced her is forbidden by the negative precept of Deut. XXIV, 4, how could a ma'amar addressed to her after divorce have any validity?
(23) Pentateuchally it has no validity at all.
(24) Since the prohibition is not Pentateuchal the ma'amar is obviously valid.
(25) That no act is valid after halizah.
(26) As no act of betrothal is valid in the case of the latter so is no such act valid in that of the former.
(27) By a form of betrothal prescribed in ordinary cases other than those of a levir. Such betrothal is valid even where it involves the transgression of a negative precept.
(28) By addressing to her a ma'amar.
(29) The halizah having severed the levirate bond, there is no room any more for the levirate betrothal. The action of any levir using it is consequently null and void.
(30) For regarding as invalid a betrothal for a levirate union, when ordinary betrothal with the same woman would have been valid.
(31) Who was survived by no Jewish heirs. Anyone digging in such ownerless property with the intention of acquiring it gains thereby full legal title thereto.
(32) It having been situated in close proximity to his own estate.
(33) As the digging (though a legal form of kinyan) is invalid because there was no intention to constitute a kinyan thereby, so also betrothal (though a legal kinyan) is invalid because the levir's intention was not to constitute an ordinary betrothal (which would indeed have been valid) but a levirate betrothal which after a halizah has no validity.
(34) R. Joseph.
(35) Digging in the estate of a proselyte.
(36) The digger.
(37) Since he believed the field to be his own.

(38) Betrothal by the levirate formula.

(39) Of his sister-in-law as his legal wife.

(40) Since his intention was to execute by his act a legal kinyan, the mistake he made as to its owner is of no consequence. Similarly, here, the mistake in the nature of the union he was contracting should not affect the legality of the kinyan which he at all events intended.

(41) Only where the levirate bond is still in force has the ma'amar the required validity.

(42) Where halizah had been performed.

(43) Hence the invalidity of the ma'amar.

(44) A ma'amar is consequently valid even where no levirate bond exists.

(45) Before the performance of the halizah.

(46) Certainly it would. The force of the ma'amar irrespective of the levirate bond (v. supra n. 2) would have executed the kinyan.

(47) After the introductory formula, ‘Be thou betrothed unto me’.

(48) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

that a levirate bond does exist[1] but the halizah had previously removed that [levirate] bond.[2] The Rabbis, however, hold that no levirate bond exists.[3] If, then, he had said to her at first,[4] ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate’ would not his word have been valid?[5] Consequently it is now also valid.

R. Sherabia said: Had a proper halizah been performed all would agree that if he said to her,[6] ‘Be thou betrothed unto me by the bond of the levirate’, there is no validity in his betrothal. Here, however, the dispute relates to a halizah of an impaired character. One Master[7] holds that a halizah of an impaired character provides [all the necessary] exemption,[2] and the Masters hold that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption.[8]

R. Ashi said: [No;] All agree that a halizah of an impaired character provides no exemption. Here,[9] however, the dispute centres round the question whether a condition[10] may affect the validity of halizah.[11] The Masters hold that a condition[11] does affect the validity of a halizah[12] and the Master[13] holds that no condition may affect the validity of a halizah.[14]

Rabina said: [No;] All agree that a condition does affect a halizah. Here,[9] however, the dispute is dependent on the question of the doubled condition.[15] The Master[13] holds that a doubled condition is essential[16] and the Masters hold the opinion that a doubled condition is unnecessary.[17]

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, OR COHABITED WITH HER etc. It should also have been stated, ‘No act is valid after cohabitation’![18] — Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,[19] ‘NO ACT IS VALID AFTER cohabitation’. But our Tanna?[20] — [The statement regarding] the permissibility of the sister-in-law to marry anyone[21] was preferred by him.[22]

THE LAW IS THE SAME WHETHER THERE IS ONE SISTER-IN LAW . . . OR TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW. Our Mishnah[23] is not in agreement with the ruling of Ben ‘Azzai. For it was taught: Ben ‘Azzai stated: A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs[24] and one sister-in-law,[25] but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-in-law and one levir.[26] HOW? . . . A MA'AMAR TO THE ONE etc. May it be suggested that this[27] provides support to a ruling of Samuel, Samuel having stated that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her to whom he addressed a ma'amar, her rival was not thereby exempt; and an objection to the ruling of R. Joseph?[28] — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is ‘had participated’, implying a fait accompli.[29]

A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER etc. May it be suggested that this[30] provides support to Rabbah son of R. Huna. For Rabbah son of R. Huna stated, ‘A halizah of an impaired character must go the round of all the brothers’?[31] — By IT IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, widows generally[32] were meant.[33]

IF HE GAVE A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO ONE AND SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER. May it be suggested that this[34] provides support to the ruling of Samuel[35] and presents an objection against the ruling of R. Joseph?[36] — Does it state: He may participate in the halizah? What it states is ‘had participated’, implying a fait accompli.[37]

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM THE ONE AND FROM THE OTHER, OR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH etc. It should also have been stated, ‘No act is valid after cohabitation’![38] Both Abaye and Raba replied: Read,[39] ‘no act is valid after cohabitation’.

But our Tanna?[40] — [The statement on] the permissibility of the sister-in-law marrying anyone[41] was preferred by him.[42]

THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR TO TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW etc. According to R. Johanan who ruled that the whole house[43] stands under the prohibition of a negative precept,[44] it is intelligible why it was necessary to inform us[45] that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalties of a negative precept is invalid;[46] according to Resh Lakish, however, who ruled that all the house[47] is subject to the penalty of kareth,[48] was there any need to inform us that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves kareth is invalid?[49] — Resh Lakish can answer you: And even according to your conception was it necessary to tell us in the final clause, which speaks of the case where the LEVIR COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, that there was no validity in a betrothal with a married woman?[49] But the fact is that as he taught concerning the permissibility[50] of one levir and one sister-in-law,[51] he also taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir. And since he taught concerning two sisters-in-law and one levir, he also taught concerning two levirs and one sister-in-law.

(1) I.e., the validity of such a formula elsewhere is absolutely dependent on the existence of the levirate bond.

(2) Hence the invalidity of the formula that followed it.

(3) The levirate bond does not in any way add to, or subtract from the force of the formula.

(4) Before the performance of the halizah.

(5) V. supra note 4.

(6) After the halizah, for instance, which has been performed after a divorce.

(7) Rabbi.

(8) The original bond remains and the halizah is altogether disregarded. Hence the validity of the formula after an improper halizah.

(9) The dispute between Rabbi and the Rabbis.

(10) Made by the levir. If, e.g., he submitted to the halizah on the understanding that the widow would give him a certain sum of money or render him some service.

(11) Where the condition had not been fulfilled.

(12) As the halizah is invalid (v. supra n. 3) the original bond remains and the formula is consequently valid.

(13) Rabbi.

(14) Even if the condition was not fulfilled the halizah remains valid. Hence there could be no force in the formula that follows it.

(15) תנאי כפול a stipulation and its alternative. The classical example is the condition made by Moses with the children of Gad and Reuben: If they passed the Jordan, the land of Gilead would be given to them; if they did not pass the Jordan, they would take their share in the land of Canaan. V. Num. XXXII, 29f.

(16) As the levir's condition was not a ‘doubled one’ it has no validity. The halizah is consequently valid and the formula following it is invalid.

(17) The condition being valid, the halizah depending on it, where it is unfulfilled, is invalid. Hence the validity of the levirate formula.

(18) Since that section of our Mishnah deals not only with (a) certain acts after halizah but also with (b) certain acts after cohabitation.

(19) [Var. lec., ‘Both Abaye and Raba read’. The reading that follows actually occurs in Tosef. Yeb. VII. Cf. תוספות ישנים]

(20) Why did he omit the mention of cohabitation?

(21) I.e., the permissibility though halizah.

(22) Hence halizah only was mentioned. After cohabitation the sister in-law is permitted to one man (the levir) only. As the Tanna preferred the case of halizah to that of cohabitation and as the invalidity of any acts after cohabitation may be inferred from the invalidity of those after halizah, the Tanna did not consider it necessary to mention cohabitation at all.

(23) Which admits the validity of a ma'amar after another ma'amar in the case of two sisters-in-law and one levir,

(24) Each one of whom in turn addressed a ma'amar to the sister-in-law.

(25) Each levir being entitled to a ma'amar. V. supra 51a.

(26) The second ma'amar, contrary to the ruling of our Mishnah, has no validity because by the first ma'amar, in the opinion of Ben ‘Azzai, the levir had exhausted all his rights.

(27) The statement, THE ONE REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THE OTHER, but not the first to whom the ma'amar had been addressed, MUST PERFORM THE HALIZAH because, obviously, halizah with the first does not exempt the second, her rival.

(28) ‘Who stated, supra 44a, ‘A man should not pour the water out of his cistern while others may require it’, i.e., a levir shall not cause the disqualification, by halizah, of the widow who is not otherwise disqualified, when the halizah could well be performed by the other widow who was in any case disqualified. In our Mishnah, contrary to R. Joseph's ruling, halizah is performed by the second who would in consequence be disqualified from marrying a priest, and not by the first who is already disqualified by the divorce she had been given.

(29) The proper procedure, however, might still be for the halizah to be performed by the widow to whom the ma'amar had been addressed.

(30) The statement in our Mishnah that HALIZAH IS NECESSARY FOR BOTH, which seems to imply that each widow must perform halizah where there is only one levir and, since the Mishnah also stated THAT THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE IN THE LAW WHETHER THERE WAS ONE LEVIR AND TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW OR TWO LEVIRS AND ONE Slster-IN-LAW, that where there are two levirs and one sister-in-law halizah must be performed with both levirs.

(31) Supra 26b, 51a.

(32) In similar circumstances,

(33) But in every case the halizah is performed by one widow only and the other is thereby exempt. V. supra p. 330, n. 5.

(34) The ruling that halizah is performed by the second widow and not by the first to whom the divorce had been given.

(35) Who stated, supra 27a, that if the levir had participated in the halizah with her whom he had divorced, her rival is not thereby exempt. Consequently, as was stated in our Mishnah, the halizah is to be performed by the second.

(36) V. p. 350, n, 6.

(37) Cf. supra p. 350, n. 7.

(38) Cf. p. 350, n. 6.

(39) Cf. p. 349, n. 11.

(40) Cf. p. 349. n. 12.

(41) Cf. p. 349, n. 13.

(42) Cf. p. 349, n. 14.

(43) I.e., all the brothers of the deceased including the levir who submitted to the halizah.

(44) Both the levir and the other brothers (v. supra n. 13) are forbidden by the negative precept ‘that doth not build’ to marry the halizah or her rival. V. supra 10b.

(45) By the statement that a ma'amar is invalid after halizah.

(46) Had not this been indicated it might have been assumed that a betrothal of a woman forbidden only by a mere negative precept is legally valid.

(47) V. supra p. 351, n. 13.

(48) If any one of the brothers married the rival of the haluzah, or if any of them (other than the levir who participated in the halizah) married the haluzah herself; the prohibition in all these cases being that of marriage with ‘a brother's wife’ which is punishable by kareth. The prohibition of the levir who participated in the halizah to marry the haluzah herself is, of course, even according to Resh Lakish, only that of a negative precept (v. supra 10b).

(49) Such a ruling is surely obvious!

(50) I.e., that there is no validity in the betrothal.

(51) A ruling which was necessary, even according to Resh Lakish, since he also, like R. Johanan, subjects the marriage between the levir who submitted to the halizah and the haluzah to the penalty of a negative precept only (v. supra n. 3).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 53b

IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR [and] GAVE etc. One can well understand why it was necessary [to lay down a rule[1] where] THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made[2] for a ma'amar that followed halizah[3] as a preventive measure against a ma'amar that preceded halizah,[4] it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was to be made. What need, however, was there for the ruling[5] where THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE?[6] — Read, then, according to your own view, the final clause, IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA’ AMAR or if he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE. One can well understand [it might be argued here also] why it was necessary [to lay down a ruling[7] where] the levir cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE; since it might have been assumed that provision was to be made for a divorce that followed cohabitation[8] as a preventive measure against a divorce that preceded cohabitation,[9] it was consequently necessary to tell us that no such preventive measure was required. But what need was there [for the ruling[10] where] HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR?[11] But [the fact is that] as he taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR,[12] he also taught: IF HE COHABITED WITH HER AND THEN ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR. And since he desired to teach the rule where ‘he cohabited with her and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE’ he also taught, IF THE LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH and then GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE.

IF IT TOOK PLACE[13] etc. Our Mishnah cannot be reconciled with the opinion of the following Tanna: For it was taught: Abba Jose b. Johanan of Jerusalem reported in the name of R. Meir, ‘Alike in the case of cohabitation or of halizah, [if it took place] first,[14] no act that follows has any validity; but if it occurred in the middle[14] or at the end,[14] something valid still remains’. On this question, in fact, three different views have been expressed. The first Tanna is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation, where a preventive measure is required,[15] a preventive measure was made,[16] but in the case of halizah where no preventive measure is called for[17] no preventive measure was made. R. Nehemiah, on the other hand, is of the opinion that in the case of cohabitation also no preventive measure is called for.[18] And as to your possible objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a letter of divorce as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed a halizah,[19] [it may be replied that] as halizah is a Pentateuchal law it is well known.[20] And as to your objection that provision should be made where cohabitation followed a ma'amar as a preventive measure against cohabitation that followed another cohabitation, [it may also be replied that] as kinyan by cohabitation is a Pentateuchal law it is certainly well known.[20] And Abba Jose b. Hanan,[21] again, holds the same view as the Rabbis[22] who ordained a preventive measure in the case of cohabitation,[23] and he made similar provision in the case of halizah as a preventive measure against cohabitation.

CHAPTER VI

MISHNAH. IF A MAN COHABITED WITH HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE,[24] WHETHER IN ERROR[25] OR IN PRESUMPTION,[26] WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL, EVEN IF HE ACTED IN ERROR AND SHE IN PRESUMPTION, OR HE IN PRESUMPTION AND SHE IN ERROR, OR HE UNDER COMPULSION AND SHE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, OR SHE UNDER COMPULSION AND HE NOT UNDER COMPULSION, WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT, HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN,[27] IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE[28] OF THE INTERCOURSE.[29]

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE[30] WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM AS, FOR INSTANCE, A WIDOW WITH A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH WITH A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH[31] WITH AN ISRAELITE OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WITH A BASTARD OR A NATHIN, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE,[32] IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE.[29] GEMARA. What is the purport of EVEN? — [The formula of] ‘It is not necessary’ is thereby to be understood: It is not necessary [to state that a kinyan is constituted where] he acted in error[33] and her intention was the performance of the commandment[34] or where he acted in presumption and her intention was the performance of the commandment,[35] but even if he acted in error and she in presumption,[36] or[37] he in presumption and she in error, so that the intention of neither of them was the fulfilment of the commandment,[38] a kinyan is nevertheless effected.

R. Hiyya taught: Even if both acted in error, both in presumption, or both under compulsion.[39] How is one to understand the action UNDER COMPULSION in our Mishnah? If it be suggested [that] idolaters compelled him to cohabit with her, surely [it may be pointed out] Raba stated: There can be no compulsion in sexual intercourse since erection depends entirely on the will! But when he slept?[40] Surely Rab Judah ruled

---

(1) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(2) Even according to R. Akiba.

(3) By giving to the ma'amar the force of a valid betrothal and by subjecting the sister-in-law, in consequence, to the necessity of a divorce.

(4) Were the former to be regarded as invalid, the latter also might erroneously be so regarded.

(5) That there is no validity in the divorce where there is only one levir and one sister-in-law. (V. supra p. 331, n. 3).

(6) What possible consequences could ensue from the presumed validity of such a divorce that are not already in force as a result of the halizah? The halizah, like a divorce, causes the prohibition of the widow to the levir, and her relatives also are thereby forbidden as the relatives of his haluzah’!

(7) That nothing of the levirate bond remains after cohabitation and that, consequently. the divorce alone is a valid act and there is no need for halizah also.

(8) By requiring halizah in addition to the divorce.

(9) Were halizah to be dispensed with in the former case it might erroneously be presumed that as a letter of divorce alone is valid enough in this case it is also valid in the latter case, and thus divorce might be allowed to supersede the halizah of any sister-in-law.

(10) That there is no validity in the ma'amar.

(11) Of what consequence could the ma'amar be after cohabitation whereby the woman had become the levir's proper wife?

(12) Which was certainly necessary, as has just been explained.

(13) Lit., ‘in the time when it is’.

(14) For an explanation of this term v. notes on our Mishnah supra.

(15) Since something of the levirate bond remains after an improper cohabitation.

(16) Hence he ruled that only when cohabitation had taken place at the beginning (but not when in the middle or at the end) does the levirate bond completely disappear.

(17) Because in his opinion even an improper halizah is valid in all respects.

(18) Maintaining as he does that nothing of validity remains either after halizah or after cohabitation.

(19) Were the former to be regarded as valid the latter also might be so regarded.

(20) And no one would draw comparisons between the two.

(21) Abbreviation of ‘Johanan’.

(22) In our Mishnah.

(23) V. supra 50b.

(24) The widow of his deceased childless brother.

(25) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.

(26) To gratify his passions and with no intention of fulfilling the precept of the levirate marriage.

(27) Lit., ‘he acquires her’. The widow is deemed to be his legal wife. He is entitled to the heirship of her estate; and she can be released only by a letter of divorce.

(28) Lit., ‘and he made no distinction’.

(29) Whether it was natural or unnatural.

(30) In any of the circumstances mentioned.

(31) Fem. of nathin, v. Glos.

(32) To marry a priest, and to eat terumah even if she had previously been eligible to eat of it. This, of course, does not apply to the bastard and nethinah who are from birth ineligible either to marry a priest or to eat terumah. Their inclusion among the others merely serves the purpose of indicating that in their case also the penalty for illicit intercourse is imposed whether it was ONLY IN THE FIRST, OR ALSO IN THE FINAL STAGE.

(33) Not knowing that she was his sister-in-law.

(34) Of the levirate marriage.

(35) In such cases the validity of the kinyan is obvious.

(36) Cf. supra p. 355, n. 3.

(37) So Bah a.l. Cur. edd. omit ‘or he . . . error’.

(38) Of the levirate marriage.

(39) Kinyan is nevertheless constituted.

(40) COMPULSION implying unconsciousness of action.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 54a

that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law![1] But when accidental insertion occurred?[2] Surely Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity[3] , for four things,[4] and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted![5] — It is[6] when, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and[7] his sister-in-law seized him and he cohabited with her.

How is one to understand, ‘Both under compulsion’, taught at the School of R. Hiyya? — When, for instance, his intention was intercourse with his wife and idolaters seized him,[8] brought him and her[9] into close contact and he cohabited with her.

Whence these words?[10] — From what our Rabbis taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her[11] is a commandment.[12] Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.[13] But, surely, deduction has already been made from this text that it[14] is a commandment![15] — That it[14] is a commandment[16] may be inferred from And if the man like not[17] which implies that if he likes he contracts the levirate marriage;[16] so that the other text[11] may serve the purpose of deducing,[18] ‘whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will’.[19]

Another [Baraitha] taught: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[11] in the natural way; and take her,[11] even though in an unnatural way;[20] and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto[21] her,[11] only the cohabitation consummates her marriage, but neither money[22] nor deed[22] can consummate her marriage; and perform the duty of a husband's brother unto her,[11] even against her will.[23]

The Master said:[24] 'Another interpretation: Her husband's brother shall go in unto her whether in error etc.' But, surely, deduction has been made from this text[11] that it[25] must be in the natural way! — This may be deduced from To raise up unto his brother a name,[17] [i.e.,] only where a name is raised up;[26] so that the other text[11] may be employed for the deduction,[27] 'whether in error or in presumption, whether under compulsion or of his own free will.'[28]

[To turn to] the main text. 'Rab Judah ruled that one in sleep cannot acquire his sister-in-law, for Scripture stated, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[29] only when the cohabitation was intentional'.[30] But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep! — Read: Whether she was awake or asleep. But, surely, it was taught: Whether he was awake or asleep; or whether she was awake or asleep! — This statement refers to one who was in a state of drowsiness. What state of drowsiness is hereby to be understood? R. Ashi replied: When a man is half asleep and half awake[31] as, for instance, when he answers on being addressed but is unable to give any sensible reply, and when he is reminded of anything he can recall it.

[To turn to] the main text. Rabbah stated: One who fell from a roof, and his fall resulted in accidental insertion, is liable to pay an indemnity for four things, and if the woman was his sister-in-law no kinyan is thereby constituted. [He must pay her for] bodily injury, for pain inflicted, for enforced unemployment, and for medical expenses; but he is not liable to indemnify her for indignity, for a Master said, 'One is not liable to pay any indemnity for indignity unless it was intentionally caused'.[32]

Raba said: If a levir's intention was to shoot[33] against a wall and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, no kinyan is thereby constituted;[34] if he intended, however, to shoot at a beast and he accidentally shot at his sister-in-law, kinyan is thereby constituted, since some sort of intercourse had been intended.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST . . . STAGE. 'Ulla stated: Whence is it proved that the first stage of contact is pentateuchally forbidden?[35] — It is said, And if a man shall lie with a menstruant woman,[36] and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath made naked her fountain[37] it is deduced from this text that the first stage of contact[38] is pentateuchally forbidden. Thus the case of a menstruant has been arrived at; whence that of other forbidden unions?[39] And were you to suggest that [their case] might be inferred from that of the menstruant, [it might be retorted] the menstruant is different since she causes the defilement of the man who cohabited with her.[40] — Rather the deduction[39] is made from 'a brother's wife' concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.[41] Now is a brother's wife always menstruant?[42] But [the meaning is] 'like a menstruant as with a menstruant the first stage constitutes the offence, so does the first stage constitute an offence with a brother's wife. But a brother's wife [it may be objected] is different since it is in his[43] power to increase the number, for should he wish, he could go on betrothing as many as a thousand![44] — The deduction[45] is rather made from the 'father's sister' and 'the mother's sister'. For it is written in Scriptures And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister, for he hath made naked his near kin.[46] But it may be objected that a father's sister and a mother's sister come under a different category, since the prohibition in their case is natural.[47] — If it[45] cannot be deduced from one category[48] then let it[49] be deduced from the two categories.[50]

From which[51] however shall deduction be made? Were it made from a brother's wife[52] and a father's sister[53] and a mother's sister,[53] [it might be objected that] those stand in a different category, since the prohibition of these is due to relationship![54] — Deduction is rather made[55] from the menstruant[56] and a father's sister and a mother's sister. Those however [it may be objected] are in a different category since the prohibition is natural![57] — The deduction[55] is rather made from the menstruant and a brother's wife; since no[58] objection can be raised [against the two].[59]

R. Aha son of R. Ika demurred: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,[60] since marriage with them cannot be permitted during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition! Would you, then, apply [their restrictions] to a married woman who might be permitted to marry even during the lifetime of the man who caused her prohibition?[61]

Said K. Aha of Difti to Rabina: Are a menstruant and a brother's wife forbidden to marry only during the lifetime of the man who caused their prohibition but permitted after that?[62] With a menstruant, surely, the prohibition depends on the number of days,[1] and with a brother's wife the All Merciful made her pro hibition dependent on the birth of children![2] — But the objection may be raised thus: A menstruant and a brother's wife are different,[3] since the man who caused them to be forbidden cannot cause them to be permitted.[4] Would you [then] apply their restrictions to a married woman whose permissibility is brought about[5] by the man who caused her to be forbidden? But, said R. Johanan, or as some say, R. Huna son of R. Joshua, Scripture stated, For whosoever shall do any of these abominations, even the souls that do them shall be cut off,[6] all forbidden unions were compared to the menstruant;[7] as the first stage constitutes the offence with the menstruant so does the first stage constitute the offence with all the others.

What need, then, was there[8] to mention the menstruant in the context of brother's wife?[9] — For an inference like that of R. Huna. For R. Huna stated: Whence in the Torah may an allusion to the sister-in-law[10] be traced? [You ask,] ‘Whence’? Surely it is written in Scripture, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her![11] — [The query is] rather, whence the allusion that a sister-in-law is forbidden[12] during the lifetime of her husband?[13] But surely this is a logical inference: Since the All Merciful said that she[14] is permitted to marry after the death of her husband, it may be inferred that during the lifetime of her husband[13] she is forbidden! — [No] for is it not possible [to maintain] that after the death of her husband it[15] is a commandment, and during the lifetime of her husband it[15] is only optional? Or else, [though] indeed,[16] only after the death of the husband,[17] and not during the lifetime of her husband; yet being a negative commandment[18] that is derived from a positive one[19] it has only the force of a positive commandment![20] — Scripture stated: And if a man shall take his brother's wife, she is a menstruant.[21] Now is a brother's wife always a menstruant?[22] But the meaning is, ‘like a menstruant’: as a menstruant, although permitted afterwards,[23] is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the period of her prohibition, so also a brother's wife, though permitted afterwards,[24] is forbidden under the penalty of kareth during the lifetime of her husband.

What need, however, was there to mention the first stage in connection with a father's sister or a mother's sister?[25] — For an inference like that mentioned in the following question which Rabina addressed to Raba: What is the law if a man passed the first stage in pederasty? [You ask,] ‘What is the law in pederasty’? Surely it is written, As with womankind![26] — But [the query is] what is the law when one passed the first stage with a beast? The other replied: No purpose is served by the text[27] in [forbidding] the first stage in the case of a father's sister and a mother's sister, since in their case the prohibition is arrived at by the comparison of R. Jonah, apply that text to the first stage with a beast.

Observe! Intercourse with a beast is among the offences subject to the death penalties of a Beth din; why then was the first stage in relation to it enumerated among offences that are subject to the penalty of kareth?[28] It should rather have been written among those which are subject to the death penalty of the Beth din,[29] and thus one offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court would be inferred[30] from a similar offence that is subject to the death penalty of a court! — Since the entire context[31] was to serve the purpose of exposition,[32] this thing[33] was also included that it may serve the purpose of exposition.

What is the exposition?[34] — It was taught, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,[35] whether she is paternal or maternal. You say, ‘Whether she is paternal or maternal’, perhaps it is not so, but only when she is paternal and not when maternal? — This[36] is only logical: A man is subject to a penalty[37] in this case and he is also subject to penalty[37] in the case of his sister; as with his sister it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also[38] it is the same whether she is paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued[39] in this way: A man is subject to a penalty[37] in this case and is also subject to a penalty[37] in the case of his aunt;[40] as his aunt is forbidden only when she is paternal[41] but not when maternal,[42] so here also[38] when she is paternal and not when maternal! — Let us consider whom it more closely resembles. A prohibition which is natural[43] ought to be inferred from a prohibition which is also natural[44] but let no proof be adduced from an aunt whose prohibition is not natural.[45] But might it not be argued[46] thus: The relatives of a father[47] should be inferred from the relatives of a father[40] but let no proof be adduced from a sister who is one's own relative! Hence it was stated,[48] Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister,[49] implying[50] whether paternal or maternal, and Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister,[51] implying also whether paternal or maternal.

What need was there to write it[52] in respect of a father's sister and also in respect of a mother's sister?[53] — R. Abbahu replied: Both are required. For had the All Merciful written it[52] in respect of a father's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is legally recognized,[54] but not to a mother's sister.[55] And had the All Merciful written it[56] in respect of a mother's sister [it might have been assumed to apply to her alone] because her relationship is certain, but not to her father's sister.[57] [Hence both were] required.

As to one's aunt concerning whom the Tanna had no doubt that she must be paternal[58] and not maternal, whence does he derive it? Raba replied: It is arrived at by a comparison between the words ‘His uncle’ [in two passages]: Here it is written, He hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness,[59] and there it is written, Or his uncle or his uncle's son may redeem him,[60] as there he must be paternal and not [necessarily] maternal[61] so here also, he[62] must be paternal[63] and not [necessarily] maternal. And whence is it[64] proved there? — Scripture stated, Of his family may redeem him,[60] and only a father's family may be called the proper family, but the mother's family cannot be called the proper family.[65]

But surely we learned: If a man was told, ‘Your wife is dead’, and he married her paternal sister; [and when he was told] ‘She[66] also is dead’, he married her maternal sister; ‘She[67] too is dead’, and he married her paternal sister; ‘She[68] also is dead’, and he married her maternal sister, he is permitted[69] to live with the first,[70] third[71] and fifth[72] who also exempt their rivals;[73] but he is forbidden to live with the second and the fourth,[74] and cohabitation with one of these does not exempt her rival. If, however, he cohabited with the second after the death of the first, he is permitted to live with the second[75] and with the fourth[76] who also exempt their rivals,[73] but he is forbidden to live[77] with the third and with the fifth.[78]

(1) Even after the death of her husband she remains forbidden to marry anyone until the prescribed number of seven unclean days has passed.

(2) If she gave birth to any child she remains forbidden to her husband's brothers even after his death.

(3) From the other women one is forbidden to marry.

(4) The former is dependent on the prescribed number of days and the latter on the absence of any issue. And thus the original question remains: Whence is deduced the prohibition of the first stage of contact in the ease of all forbidden unions?

(66) His second wife.

(67) His third wife.

(68) The fourth.

(69) If it is found that all these are alive.

(70) Since the marriage with her was valid.

(71) As the union with the second was unlawful, on account of her being his wife's sister, the marriage with her had no validity. As she is not his wife, her sister is a perfect stranger to the man who married them both in succession. The marriage with her sister (his third wife) is consequently valid.

(72) The union with the fourth being unlawful, owing to the legal marriage with her sister (the third wife) the marriage with the fifth is consequently legal. Cf. note 5.

(73) If he died without issue, and one of his brothers submitted to halizah from one of them.

(74) Because the legality of his marriage with the first and third renders them respectively forbidden as ‘his wife's sister’. Cf. note 5.
(75) As the death of the first has removed from her the prohibition of ‘wife's sister’, the marriage with her is legal.
(76) As the marriage with the second was legally valid, that with the third (as wife's sister) was invalid. The fourth (sister of the third) being in consequence a mere stranger is therefore permitted to be married. Cf. supra note 5.
(77) Cf. previous notes mutatis mutandis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55a

From this it clearly follows that a wife's sister, whether she is paternal or maternal, is forbidden.[1] Whence, however, is this derived? — Deduction is made from one's sister; as a sister [is forbidden] whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also[2] whether she is paternal or maternal. But let the deduction[3] be made from one's aunt; as one's aunt [is forbidden only when she is] paternal[4] and not when maternal, so here[3] also [the prohibition should apply when she is] paternal and not when maternal! — It stands to reason that the deduction should be made from one's sister, since [laws concerning] his own relatives[5] [should be inferred] from [laws concerning others of] his own relatives.[6] On the contrary! Deduction[7] should have been made from one's aunt, since a relationship effected through betrothal[8] [should be inferred] from one effected through betrothal![9] — The deduction[7] is rather made from a brother's wife, since her relationship[10] is through betrothal, and she is of his own relatives.

Whence, however, is [the law concerning] a brother's wife herself derived? — From what was taught: Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife,[11] whether he is paternal or maternal. You say, ‘Whether he is paternal or maternal’, perhaps it is not so, but only when paternal and not when maternal? This is a matter of logical argument: He is subject to a penalty here[12] and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his sister; as [the prohibition of] his sister applies whether she is paternal or maternal, so here also[12] [the prohibition applies] whether he[13] was paternal or maternal. But might it not be argued[14] thus: He is subject to a penalty here[12] and he is also subject to penalty [for intercourse] with his aunt. As therefore [the prohibition of] his aunt applies only when she is paternal[15] and not when only maternal, so here[12] also [the prohibition applies only when he[13] is] paternal and not when only maternal! Let us observe whom the case[16] more closely resembles. Deduction concerning one's own relatives should be made from one's own relatives, and let no proof be adduced from one's aunt whose relationship is due to his father. But might it not be argued as follows:[14] Deduction should be made concerning a relationship which is due to betrothal[16] from a relationship that is due to betrothal,[17] but let no proof be adduced from a sister the prohibition of whom is natural![18] — For this reason[19] it was specifically stated in Scriptures, It is thy brother's nakedness,[20] implying[21] whether he is paternal or only maternal.

Might it not be suggested that the one as well as the other[22] speaks of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband,[23] while the other refers to a brother's wife who had no children during the lifetime of her husband! — The case of one who had no children during the lifetime of her husband may be deduced from the statement of R. Huna.[24]

Might not both[25] still speak of the wife of a paternal brother, the one referring to a brother's wife who had children during the lifetime of her husband and the other to one who had children after the death of her husband! — The case of one who had children after the death of her husband requires no Scriptural text; for since the All Merciful said that she who had no children was permitted, it is obvious that if she had children she is forbidden.

Is it not possible that she who has no children is forbidden to all men but permitted to the levir while she who has children is permitted both to all men and to the levir! Or else: If she has no children it is a commandment[26] but if she has children it is optional! Or else: [Though indeed] the levir may marry her if[27] she has no children but he may not if she has children, yet [as the prohibition[28] is] a negative commandment that is derived from a positive one[29] it has only the force of a positive commandment![30] — For this reason Scripture wrote another text,[31] He hath uncovered his brother's nakedness.[32] But might it be said that the wife of a maternal brother is like the wife of a paternal brother, and that as the wife of a paternal brother is permitted[33] after the death of her husband, so is also the wife of a maternal brother[34] permitted after the death of her husband! — Scripture said, She is,[35] she retains her status.[36]

What need was there to specify the penalty of kareth for intercourse with one's sister?[37] — To infer a ruling like that of R. Johanan. For R. Johanan stated: If one committed all these offences[38] in one state of unawareness, he is liable for every one of them.[39] According to R. Isaac, however, who stated, ‘All those who are subject to the penalty of kareth were included in the general rule; and why was the penalty of kareth for [intercourse with] a sister stated separately? In order to indicate that his[40] penalty is kareth and not flogging’,[41] whence is the division[42] deduced? — It is deduced from, And unto a woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness,[43] that guilt is incurred for every single woman.[44]

For what purpose did the All Merciful write, They shall be child less[45] in the case of one's aunt?[46] — It is required for an exposition like that of Rabbah. For Rabbah pointed out the following contradiction: It is written, They shall be childless,[45] and it is also written, They shall die childless![47] How [are these two versions to be reconciled]? If he has children he will bury them; if he has no children, he will be childless.[48]

And it was necessary to write They shall be childless,[45] and it was also necessary to write, They shall die childless.[47] For had the All Merciful written only, They shall be childless,[45] it might have been assumed to refer to children born before the offence[49] but not to those born subsequent to the offence,[50] hence the All Merciful wrote, They shall die childless.[47] And had the All Merciful written, They shall die childless,[47] it might have been assumed to refer to those born subsequent to the offence,[51] but not to those who were born previously,[50] [hence both texts were] required.

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments[52] to be inferred? — As the All Merciful specified carnally[53] in the case of a designated[54] bondmaid,[55] it may be inferred that among all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments,[56] the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.[57] On the contrary! As the All Merciful specified the first stage in the case of those who are subject to the penalty of kareth,[58] it may be inferred that among those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments consummation only constitutes the offence! — R. Ashi replied: If so,[59] Scripture should have omitted [the reference][60] in the case of the designated handmaid.[61]

Whence [is the prohibition of] the first stage inferred in the case of offences for which priests alone are subject to the penalty of negative commandments?[62] — This is arrived at by an analogy between the expressions of ‘taking’.[63]

Whence [is the prohibition[64] in respect of] those who are subject[65] to the penalty of a positive commandment[66] inferred?

(1) Since the third, the maternal sister of the second, is permitted only on account of the illegality of the marriage of the second, but is forbidden where the marriage with the second is legal.

(2) A wife's sister is forbidden.

(3) In respect of a wife's sister.

(4) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.

(5) A wife's sister whose relationship to him is due to his own (and not his father's) act of marriage with her sister.

(6) His sister. An aunt's relationship, however, is due not to his own, but his father's relationship with her husband. V. supra.

(7) In respect of a wife's sister.

(8) A man's wife's sister is related to him through betrothal of her sister (his wife).

(9) The aunt whose relationship to him is due to her betrothal by his uncle.

(10) Like that of his wife's sister.

(15) When her husband is his father's paternal brother.

(16) A brother's wife.

(17) V. supra note 5.

(18) It is due to vicissitudes of birth and not to any act of his.

(19) To exclude this argument.

(20) Lev. XVIII, 16b.

(21) Since, in view of Lev. XVIII, 16a, it is superfluous.

(22) The two sections of the verse cited.

(23) Who divorced her.

(24) Supra 54b; and no special text is needed for the purpose.

(25) The two sections of the verse cited.

(26) That the levir marries her.

(27) Lit.,’yes’.

(28) Not to marry a wife of a deceased brother if she has children.

(29) Her husband's brother shall go in unto her if she has no children.

(30) The penalty for the transgression of which is not that of kareth!

(31) Which, in view of the texts from Lev. XVIII, 16a and b, is superfluous.

(32) Lev. XX, 21, to indicate that the prohibition is to apply to all cases whether that of a paternal or only that of a maternal brother.

(33) To marry the levir if her husband died without issue.

(34) Who died childless.

(35) E.V. ‘it is’. Lev. XVIII, 16, which speaks also, as deduced supra, of the wife of a maternal brother.

(36) As she was forbidden to the levir during the lifetime of her husband she remains so after his death.

(37) Her case, surely, is included in Lev. XVIII, 29, among all the others with whom intercourse is forbidden under the penalty of kareth!

(38) Of forbidden intercourse.

(39) Mak. 14a, Ker. 2b. Because the penalty of kareth was specifically mentioned in the case of intercourse with a sister who is taken as an example for all the others included in the general statement in Lev. XVIII, 29. This is in accordance with the principle that if any case is included in a general rule and is then made the subject of a special statement, that which is predicated of it is to be applied to the whole of the general rule. Had not the sister been mentioned separately it might have been assumed that as all the offences were included in the general prohibition, and as they were all committed in one state of unawareness, one liability only is incurred for all.

(40) The brother's.

(41) Even though he had been duly warned.

(42) That liability is incurred for every single offence even though all were committed in one state of unawareness.

(43) Lev. XVIII. 19, emphasis on woman. Since, instead of the longer expression ‘A woman . . . as long as she is impure by her uncleanness’, the shorter one, ‘a menstruant could have been used.

(44) With whom intercourse took place; v. Mak. Sonc. ed. pp. 97ff.

(45) Lev. XX, 21.

(46) By childless ערירים the penalty of kareth is understood: Not only the offender but his children also are thereby cut off.

(47) Ibid. 20.

(48) V. infra nn. 5ff.

(49) The expression shall be childless would have been taken to imply that the children born prior to the offence would die as a result of the offence. The parents, however, would not die childless because the children born after the offence would live.

(50) Who would live. V. supra note 5.

(51) Shall die childless, being preceded by They shall bear their sin (Lev. XX, 20), implying that the penalty would affect only those children who were born after the sin had been committed.

(52) I.e., to flogging but not to kareth.

(53) Lev. XIX, 20, implying the second stage of consummation.

(54) חרופה This form of the kinyan by a Jewish slave of a Canaanitish bondwoman takes the place of the ordinary betrothal of a free woman.

(55) Intercourse with whom is forbidden by a negative commandment and is consequently subject to the penalty of flogging, in addition to the prescribed guilt-offering (v. Lev. XIX, 21f).

(56) Such as a bastard and an undesignated bondmaid.

(57) As only the designated bondmaid must pass the second stage in order to constitute an offence for which liability to a guilt-offering is incurred, it follows that in all the other cases, where no guilt-offering is ever incurred, the offence is constituted with the first stage alone.

(58) In Lev. XVIII, 29.

(59) That with all the others who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments the offence is not constituted unless, as with the designated bondmaid, the second stage was passed.

(60) ‘Carnally’. Lit., ‘let the text keep silence.’

(61) Since, however, the second stage was specifically postulated in her case, it follows that with all the others the first stage by itself constitutes the offence.

(62) From the designated maid supra only such prohibitions may he inferred as are applicable to all and not to priests only.

(63) The expression of ‘taking’ is used in the case of intercourse with a sister (Lev. XX, 17) which is punishable by kareth, and a similar expression is used in the case of marriages forbidden to priests under the penalty of a negative commandment (Lev. XXI, 7).

(64) Of the first stage.

(65) For intercourse with an Israelite's daughter.

(66) An Egyptian or an Edomite, for instance, (v. Deut. XXIII, 8, 9) whose prohibition to marry an Israelite's daughter is based on the positive precept, The third generation . . . shall (E.V. may) enter into the assembly of the Lord, which implies that the first and second generations must not. A negative precept derived from a positive one has the force of a positive precept.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 55b

— It is arrived at by an analogy between the two expressions of ‘coming’.[1]

Whence [the prohibition of a yebamah][2] to a stranger?[3] — If [one follows] him who holds that it[4] is a negative precept,[5] [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] negative precept;[6] if [one follows] him who holds that it[7] is a positive precept,[8] [it would be subject to the same restrictions as any other] positive precept.[6] Whence, however, [its[9] force[10] in respect of] the yebamah and the levir? — It is arrived at by the analogy between the two expressions of ‘coming’.[11]

Whence [its[9] force[12] in respect of the kinyan], between husband and wife? — It is arrived at by comparison between the expressions of ‘taking’.[13]

Raba said: For what purpose did the All Merciful write ‘carnally’ in connection with the designated bondmaid,[14] a married woman,[15] and a sotah?[16] That in connection with the designated bondmaid [is required] as has just been explained.[17] That in connection with a married woman excludes intercourse with a relaxed membrum.[18] This is a satisfactory interpretation in accordance with the view of him who maintains that if one cohabited with forbidden relatives with relaxed membrum he is exonerated;[19] what, however, can be said, according to him who maintains [that for such an act one is] guilty? — The exclusion is rather that of intercourse with a dead woman.[20] Since it might have been assumed that, as [a wife], even after her death, is described as his kin,[21] one should be guilty for [intercourse with] her [as for that] with a married woman, hence we were taught [that one is exonerated]. What was the object of that[22] of the sotah? — Such as was taught: Carnally[22] excludes [the case where the husband's warning was] concerning something else. What is meant by 'something else'? R. Shesheth replied: The exclusion is the case where he warned her concerning unnatural intercourse. Said Raba to him: The text reads, As with womankind![23] — Rather, said Raba, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning concerned lecherous contact of her limbs. Said Abaye to him: Has the All Merciful forbidden [a wife to her husband] because of obscenity?[24] — Rather, said Abaye, the exclusion is the case where the husband's warning was concerning superficial contact.[25] This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who maintains that the first stage of contact[26] is the insertion of the corona;[27] what can be said, however, according to him who maintains that it[28] is the superficial contact![29] — The exclusion is rather the case where he warned her concerning lecherous contact of her limbs; but[30] it was necessary [to state it, because] it might have been assumed that, as the All Merciful has made the prohibition[31] dependent on the objection of the husband,[32] [the woman should here be forbidden] since he objected,[33] hence we were taught [that such a case is excluded].

Samuel stated: The first stage is constituted by superficial contact.[25] This may be compared to a man who puts his finger to his mouth; it is impossible for him not to press down the flesh. When Rabbah b. Bar Hana came[34] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Consummation in the case of a designated bondmaid is constituted by the insertion of the corona.

R. Shesheth raised an objection: 'Carnally[35] implies that guilt is incurred only when intercourse was accompanied by friction';[36] does not this refer to friction of the membrum! — No; friction of the corona.

When R. Dimi came[34] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona. They said to him: But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana did not say so! — He replied: Then either he is the story-teller[37] or I.[38]

When Rabin came[34] he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona'. He is certainly in disagreement with the report of Rabbah b. Bar Hana.[39] Must it be said, however, that he differs also from Samuel?[40] — No; [the entire process] from the superficial contact until the insertion of the corona is described as the first stage.[41]

When R. Samuel b. Judah came[34] he stated in the name of R. Johanan, 'The first stage is constituted by the insertion of the corona; and the final stage, by actual consummation.

(1) The expression of 'coming' is used with a case that is forbidden by a negative precept (Deut. XXIII, 3) as well as with those whose prohibition is derived from a positive precept (ibid. 9) and whose penalty is kareth. Cf. note 9 supra.

(2) Prior to halizah.

(3) Lit., 'to the street'.

(4) The marriage with a stranger before halizah had been performed.

(23) Lev. XVIII, 22, in which natural and unnatural intercourse are regarded as analogous (v. Sanh. 54a). What matters it then for which she was warned!

(24) Surely not. For mere laxity, in the absence of adultery, a wife would not have been subjected to such a severe penalty. What need then was there to state the obvious?

(25) Lit., ‘kissing’.

(26) Which is forbidden.

(27) Infra. As this stage only constitutes cohabitation and causes the prohibition of the woman to her husband, it is possible to exclude from such prohibition the earlier stage of superficial contact.

(28) The ‘first stage’ that is forbidden.

(29) How can this be excluded from the prohibition in view of the ruling that the first stage does constitute cohabitation!

(30) Despite Abaye's objection (v. supra note 3).

(38) Lit., ‘I lied’, i.e., they had his word against Rabbah b. Bar Hana's, and it was for them to decide the report of which of them was the more reliable.

(39) Who regards this act as consummation.

(40) Who reported that superficial contact alone constitutes the first stage.

(41) On this both Samuel and Rabin agree; the one mentioning the beginning of the process and the other the conclusion.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56a

Beyond this, the act is no more than superficial contact and one is exonerated in regard to it’. He thus differs from Samuel.

WHETHER HE PASSED ONLY THE FIRST, OR ALSO THE FINAL STAGE OF CONTACT HE CONSTITUTES THEREBY A KINYAN. In what respect is kinyan constituted? — Rab replied: Kinyan is con stituted in all respects;[1] and Samuel replied: Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section,[2] viz., to inherit the estate of his brother[3] and to exempt her[4] from the levirate marriage.[5] If [she[6] became subject to the levir] after her marriage[7] she may, according to the view of all,[8] eat [terumah],[9] since she has been eating it before.[10] They differ only [where she became subject to the levir] after betrothal.[7] Rab maintains that she may eat, since the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same validity] as when done presumptuously. But Samuel maintains that the All Merciful has included it[11] in so far only as to put him[12] in the same position as the husband,[13] but not to confer upon him more power than upon the husband.[14] And [in giving this ruling] Samuel is consistent with his own view, for R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: wherever the husband entitles her to eat, the levir also entitles her to eat; and wherever the husband does not entitle her to eat the levir also[15] does not entitle her to eat.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite, capable of bearing, was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].[16] If he died[17] and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat;[18] and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab, this statement is perfectly satisfactory.[19] According to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises![20] Samuel can answer you: Read thus . . . who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah]; if, however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it; if he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat it'.[21] 'Then what is meant by 'in this respect'?[22] — While if the husband had been deaf before,[23] she would not have been entitled to eat, if the levir had been deaf before[23] she may eat.

Others say: If [she[24] became subject to the levir] after her betrothal[25] all[26] agree that she may not eat [terumah], since 'she was not allowed to eat it during the lifetime of her husband. They differ only [when she became subject to the levir] after her marriage.[25] Rab maintains that she may eat, since she has been eating before; but Samuel maintains that she may not eat, because the All Merciful has included cohabitation in error, [giving it the same force] as cohabitation in presumption, only in respect of the things that were enumerated in the section,[27] but not in all other respects. But surely R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel, 'Wherever the husband entitles her to eat the levir also entitles her to eat'![28] — Read: Every cohabitation whereby a husband entitles her to eat also entitles her to eat if performed by the levir, and every cohab itation whereby the husband does not entitle her to eat, does not entitle her to eat if performed by the levir.

An objection was raised: 'If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].[29] If he died[30] and she became subject to a deaf levir she may eat;[31] and in this respect the power of the levir is superior to that of the husband'. Now, according to Rab,[32] this[33] might well be explained as was explained above;[34] according to Samuel, however, a difficulty arises![35] — This is indeed a difficulty.

Our Rabbis taught: If the daughter of an Israelite capable of hearing was betrothed to a priest capable of hearing, who became deaf before he had time to marry her, she may not eat [terumah].[36] If a son was born to her she may eat.[37] If the son died,[38] R. Nathan said, she may eat;[39] but the Sages said: She may not eat. What is R. Nathan's reason?[40] Rabbah replied: Because she was eating[41] before. Said Abaye to him: What now? would the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died[42] be entitled to eat [terumah] because she was eating it before? But[43] [the fact is that] as soon as [her husband] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her; so here also as soon as [the son] died his sanctity is withdrawn from her![44] — Rather, said R. Joseph, R. Nathan holds that marriage with a deaf [priest][45] does entitle the woman to eat terumah,[46] and that no prohibition[47] is to be made in respect of the marriage of a deaf priest[48] as a preventive measure against the betrothal of a deaf priest.[49] Said Abaye to him: If so,[50] what need was there [to state] 'If a son was born to her'? — Because of the Rabbis.[51] Then[52] R. Nathan should have expressed his disagreement with the Rabbis in the first clause![53] — He allowed the Rabbis to finish their statement and then expressed his disagreement with them.[54] If so,[55] the statement should have read, ‘If the son died she may not eat;[56] R. Nathan said: She may eat’?[57] — This is a difficulty.

SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES. R. Amram said: The following statement was made to us by R. Shesheth

(1) The yebamah may even eat of terumah if the levir was a priest.
(2) Deut. XXV, 5ff, which deals with the obligations and privileges of the levir and the yebamah.
(3) Inferred from v. 6 in the section.
(4) If he died without issue from her but had children from another wife, or if he divorced her.
(5) The first stage having the same validity as actual marriage.
(6) The sister-in-law upon whom one of the forms of kinyan, including cohabitation in error, spoken of in our Mishnah had been executed.
(7) With her husband, the levir's deceased brother.
(8) Rab and Samuel.
(9) If the levir was a priest.
(10) While she was still with her husband.
(11) Cohabitation in error.
(12) The levir.
(13) He is entitled to confer upon his sister-in-law the same rights that had been conferred upon her by her husband. Hence, if she was married and entitled to eat terumah the levir also may confer upon her this privilege.
(14) As her husband's priesthood did not entitle her to eat terumah during the period of their betrothal, since only actual marriage can confer this privilege, the levir also cannot now confer this privilege upon her.
(15) If the kinyan was in one of the imperfect forms spoken of in our Mishnah.
(16) Even after their marriage. The reason will be explained infra.
(17) After the marriage.
(18) After the levirate marriage. The cohabitation of a deaf levir is considered to be no less valid to constitute a kinyan than the imperfect forms of kinyan mentioned in our Mishnah which constitute kinyan in the case of any levir.
(19) Because he regards an imperfect cohabitation which in ordinary cases constitutes no kinyan as valid in the case of the levir.
(20) According to him, imperfect cohabitation confers no more rights through the levir than through the husband; and here it is stated that the levir entitles her to eat terumah though her husband could not confer this privilege upon her!
(21) Because she was entitled to the same privilege during the lifetime of her husband,
(22) If she is only entitled to the privilege she enjoyed during the lifetime of her husband, in what respect is ‘the power of the levir superior to that of the husband’?
(23) He married her.
(24) V. supra p. 374, n. 6.
(25) V. loc. cit., n. 7.
(26) V. loc. cit., n. 8.
(27) V. loc. cit., n. 2.
(28) How then could Samuel maintain that ‘she may not eat’ even though she had enjoyed that privilege while her husband was alive?
(29) V. supra p. 374, n. 16.
(30) V. loc. cit., n. 17.
(31) V. p. 375, n. 1.
(32) Though he maintains (according to the second version) that the levir does not confer any privileges that were not previously conferred by the husband.
(33) The statement just cited that she may eat terumah if the levir is deaf though she was not permitted to eat it while her husband was alive.
(34) I.e., the explanation given supra, in reply to the objection raised against Samuel, may now be given as a reply to the objection against Rab, viz., that the clause, ‘If however, he married her and then became deaf she may eat it’, is to be inserted before ‘If he died and she became subject to a deaf levir, she may eat’, the last clause thus referring to a married woman that was permitted to eat terumah during the lifetime of her husband.

(35) Since, in his opinion (according to the second version), the deaf levir (whose kinyan has the same validity as that effected through the imperfect forms mentioned in our Mishnah) does not confer the privilege of eating terumah even if the woman had enjoyed the privilege while her husband was alive.

(36) V. supra p. 374. n. 16.

(37) The terumah; by virtue of her son, as deduced from Lev. XXII, 11, infra 67a.

(38) But was survived by his father.

(39) By virtue of her husband.

(40) Why may she eat now by virtue of her husband while in the previous case, where she never had a son, her husband could not confer that privilege upon her?

(41) V. supra note 9.

(42) Not being survived by any son.

(43) Since the law is that she may not.

(44) How, then, could R. Nathan allow her to continue to eat terumah?

(45) Where the betrothal took place while he was still capable of hearing.

(46) Because Pentateuchally the betrothal confers the privilege upon her. Its postponement until after the marriage is merely a preventive measure Rabbinically instituted (v. Keth. 57b). which is, of course, not applicable here where marriage with the deaf man had already taken place.

(47) Against the woman's eating of terumah.

(48) V. supra note 3.

(49) There is no need to provide against the possibility of mistaking betrothal for marriage and for thus allowing a woman to eat terumah immediately after betrothal, since it is well known that the betrothal of a deaf man has no validity. The Rabbis who forbid the woman to eat terumah even after the marriage, it may be explained, provided against the possibility of mistaking such a marriage which followed a betrothal that took place while the priest was still capable of hearing (which Pentateuchally entitles the woman to the privilege) for one which followed a betrothal that took place when he was already deaf and which is Pentateuchally invalid.

(50) If according to R. Nathan it is the marriage, even though there was no son, that entitles the woman to the terumah.

(51) Who in such a case only agree with R. Nathan that the woman may eat terumah.

(52) Since he maintains that after the marriage, though there was no son, the woman is entitled to the privilege.

(53) Where the woman is prohibited to eat terumah even after the marriage.

(54) With their views in both the first and the final clause.

(55) That R. Nathan reserved his opinion until the Rabbis had finished their full statement.

(56) Which would have concluded the statement of the Rabbis.

(57) I.e., R. Nathan's view would thus have come at the very end. As, however, his opinion is inserted before ‘she may not eat’ which is the statement of the Rabbis, it cannot he maintained any more that he was waiting until they had concluded their full statement, and the original difficulty consequently arises again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 56b

who enlightened us on the subject[1] from our Mishnah. ‘An Israelite's wife who was outraged, though she is permitted to her husband, is disqualified from the priesthood;[2] and so it was taught by our Tanna:[3] SIMILARLY, IF A MAN HAD INTERCOURSE WITH ANY OF THE FORBIDDEN RELATIVES ENUMERATED IN THE TORAH, OR WITH ANY OF THOSE WHO ARE INELIGIBLE TO MARRY HIM; now, what is the purport of SIMILARLY? Does it not mean, WHETHER IN ERROR OR IN PRESUMPTION, WHETHER UNDER COMPULSION OR OF HIS OWN FREE WILL? And yet it was stated, HE HAS THEREBY RENDERED HER INELIGIBLE’.[4] — No; SIMILARLY might refer[5] to the FIRST STAGE.[6] ‘To the first stage’ with whom? If it be suggested, ‘With one of the forbidden relatives’, does this then imply [it might be retorted] that the case of the forbidden relatives is derived from that of the sister-in-law?[7] On the contrary, the case of the sister-in-law was derived from the forbidden relatives, since the original prohibition of the first stage was written in connection with the forbidden relatives! — Rather, SIMILARLY refers[8] to Unnatural intercourse with forbidden relatives.[9] On the contrary; the original prohibition of the various forms of intercourse with a woman was written in connection with the forbidden relatives![10] — Rather, SIMILARLY refers[8] to unnatural intercourse with those [cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of negative precepts.[11]

Rabbah[12] stated: If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers the penalty of flogging on her account[13] for [cohabiting with] a harlot.[14] Only for [cohabiting with] a harlot, but not for 'defilement'?[15] — Read, 'Also for [cohabitation with] a harlot'.[16]

R. Zera raised an objection: And she be not seized,[17] she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized[18] she is permitted.[19] But there is another woman who is forbidden[19] even though she was seized.[18] And who is that? The wife of a priest. Now, a negative precept[20] that is derived from a positive one[21] has only the force of a positive precept![22] — Rabbah replied: All[23] were included in the category of harlot.[24] When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only if she be not seized[17] she is forbidden but if she was seized[18] she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.[25]

Others say: Rabbah stated, If the wife of a priest had been outraged, her husband suffers for her the penalty of flogging[26] on account of 'defilement'.[27] Only on account of 'defilement' but not for [connubial relationship with] a harlot. Thus it is obvious that [when the woman acted] under compulsion she is not to be regarded as a harlot. R. Zera raised an objection: 'And she be not seized,[28] she is forbidden; if, however, she was seized[29] she is permitted. But there is another woman who is forbidden[30] even though she was seized.[29] And who is that? The wife of a priest'. Now, a negative precept[31] that is derived from a positive one[32] has only the force of a positive precept![33] — Rabbah[34] replied: All[35] were included in [the prohibition to live with her] after that she is defiled.[36] When, therefore, Scripture specified in the case of the wife of an Israelite that only when she be not seized[37] she is forbidden, but if she was seized[38] she is permitted, it may be inferred that the wife of a priest retains her forbidden status.[39]

MISHNAH. THE BETROTHAL OF A WIDOW TO A HIGH PRIEST AND OF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALIZAH TO A COMMON PRIEST[40] DOES NOT CONFER UPON THEM THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.[41] R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, DECLARE THEM ELIGIBLE.[42] IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE;[43] IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.[44]

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Meir said, [this[45] may be arrived at by an inference] a minori ad majus: If permissible betrothal[46] does not confer the right of eating terumah, how much less forbidden betrothal.[47] They, however, replied: No; if you have said it[48] in respect of permissible betrothal[46] where the man may never confer the right of eating,[49] would you also say it[48] in respect of sinful betrothal[47] where the [priest], in other circumstances,[50] is entitled to confer the right of eating?[51]

R. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Oshaia: In the case where a priest who was wounded in the stones[52] betrothed a daughter of an Israelite,[53] we have a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon. According to R. Meir who holds that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation[54] may not eat terumah, this woman also[55] may not eat; but according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that a woman awaiting a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation[54] may eat

(1) Lit., 'and lit up our eyes'.

(2) Supra 35a. She may not marry a priest even after the death of her husband.

(3) In our Mishnah תונא == our Tanna (Rashi). ותנא תונא == and our Tanna also taught so. Others render תונא 'confirmation: ותוא תונא == and the Tanna is (or provides) confirmation (v. Jast.). [Or, ותוא תונא

‘The Tanna teaches’, v. Epstein, Schwarz-Festschrift pp. 319ff].

(4) To marry a priest. Since a married woman is subject to the same restrictions as the ‘forbidden relatives’, she being included in the penalty of incestuous unions in Lev. XVIII (v. verse 20), it follows that whatever renders the forbidden relatives in our Mishnah ineligible to marry a priest renders a married woman also ineligible. As ‘outrage’ or ‘intercourse under compulsion’ is included, our Mishnah must be in agreement with the ruling of R. Shesheth.

(5) Lit., ‘what’.

(6) I.e., as in the previously mentioned cases so in the following, the first stage has the same force as consummation. The ineligibility of an outraged woman, therefore, does not at all come within the purview of our Mishnah.

(7) Since the law in the latter is made to apply by comparison also to the former.

(8) Lit., ‘what’.

(9) The meaning being that as with the sister-in-law so with the other forbidden relatives kinyan is constituted IRRESPECTIVE OF THE NATURE OF THE INTERCOURSE, even if it was unnatural. Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 second clause.

(10) The case of the sister-in-law is derived from them; not theirs from hers.

(11) Cf. supra p. 378, n. 6 and supra n. 2 mutatis mutandis.

(12) Cur. edd., ‘Raba’.

(13) If he has intercourse with her.

(14) Who is forbidden to a priest (v. Lev. XXI, 7) whether her adultery was committed willingly or under compulsion. It is in the case of an Israelite only that a distinction is made between a woman's voluntary and compulsory adultery.

(15) If to an Israelite she is forbidden on account of her defilement when her act was voluntary (v. supra 11b), she should be forbidden to a priest on the same account even when her act was under compulsion!

(16) He suffers for both.

(17) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(18) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(19) To her husband.

(20) That a priest must not live with his outraged wife.

(21) An Israelite only may live with such a wife.

(22) It is not punishable by flogging. How then could Rabbah subject the husband to such a penalty?

(23) Married women who played the harlot whether willingly or under compulsion.

(24) Who is forbidden to her husband by a negative precept.

(25) Her prohibition to the priest, even if she acted under compulsion, is consequently derived from the original negative precept, and not, as had been assumed, from the positive precept relating to an Israelite.

(26) If he has intercourse with her.

(27) V.supra p. 379, n.8.

(28) Num. V, 13. E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(35) V. supra p. 379, n. 16.

(36) Deut. XXIV, 4.

(37) Num. V, 13, E.V., neither she be taken in the act.

(38) I.e., if she acted under compulsion.

(39) Cf. supra note 1.

(40) Since such betrothal is unlawful.

(41) If they were the daughters of Israelites. If they were the daughters of priests, their right to the eating of terumah which they enjoyed prior to their betrothal, ceases with the forbidden betrothal. (V. Rashi s.v. לשון אחר a.l.) According to Tosaf. (s.v. מן a.l.) the Mishnah refers to the daughters of priests only. Cf. also תוספות ישנים a.l.

(42) During the period of betrothal, so long as actual marriage has not taken place.

(43) Since, in the case of priests’ daughters, marriage caused their permanent profanation, and in that of others the privilege had never been conferred upon them.

(44) Even according to the first Tanna. Priests' daughters lose the privilege only during the period of betrothal. As soon as the betrothal period ends either through death or divorce they may again eat terumah; and in the case of widowhood they may also marry a common priest. Daughters of Israelites are entitled to the same privileges except that of eating of terumah to which, of course, they had never been entitled.

(45) The ruling that the betrothals spoken of in our Mishnah do not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the privilege of eating terumah (v. Rashi, second explanation).

(46) When an Israelite betroths the daughter of an Israelite.

(47) Of which our Mishnah speaks. [Var. lec.: 'If permissible betrothal renders her ineligible (a priest's daughter is not allowed to eat terumah after her betrothal to an Israelite), how much more forbidden betrothal'. This reading — a reading which it must be confessed appears more feasible — is adopted by Tosaf. in view of their interpretation (v. supra p. 380, n. 17) that the Mishnah refers only to daughters of priests].

(48) That betrothal does not confer the privilege of eating terumah.

(49) An Israelite is neither himself entitled to the eating of terumah nor can he confer the right upon others.

(50) If he married a woman permitted to him.

(51) Obviously not. Hence the ruling in our Mishnah that the betrothals confer the privilege.

(52) One so incapacitated is not permitted to marry even the daughter of an Israelite, v. Deut. XXIII, 2.

(53) [Var. lec.: 'a daughter of a priest'. A reading adopted by Tosaf. on their interpretation (cf. n. 6)].

(54) I.e., if she was betrothed to a man whom she is forbidden to marry.

(55) Who married the incapacitated priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57a

this woman also may eat.[1]

Whence [is this[2] proved]? Is it not possible that R. Eleazar and R. Simeon maintain [their opinion] only there because in other circumstances[3] he is entitled to confer the right of eating, but not here where he is never entitled to confer the right of eating![4] And were you to reply that here also he[5] is entitled to confer upon the daughter of proselytes[6] the right of eating, surely [it may be retorted] this very question was addressed by R. Johanan to R. Oshaia[7] who gave him no answer![8]

It was stated:[9] Abaye said,[10] Because[11] he is entitled to confer upon [his wife][12] the right to eat [terumah] so long as he does not cohabit with her.[13] Raba said,[10] Because[11] he may confer the right of eating[14] [terumah] upon his Canaanitish bondmen and bondwomen.[15]

Abaye did not give the same explanation as Raba because matrimonial kinyan may be inferred from matrimonial kinyan, but matrimonial kinyan may not be inferred from the kinyan of slaves. And Raba does not give the same explanation as Abaye because there[16] it is different, since she has already been eating it previously.[17] And Abaye?[18] — [The argument], 'since she has already been eating' cannot be upheld;[19] for should you not admit this,[20] a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest who subsequently died should also be allowed to eat terumah since she has already been eating it![21]

And Raba?[22] — There,[23] his kinyan had completely ceased;[24] here, however, his kinyan did not cease.[25]

[To turn to] the main text. R. Johanan enquired of R. Oshaia: If a priest who was wounded in the stones married the daughter of proselytes does he confer upon her the right of eating terumah? The other remained silent and made no reply at all. Later, another great man came and asked him a different question which he answered. And who was that man? Resh Lakish. Said R. Judah the Prince to R. Oshaia: Is not R. Johanan a great man?[26] The other replied: [No reply could be given] since he submitted a problem which has no solution.

In accordance with whose view?[27] If according to R. Judah,[28] she is not entitled to eat terumah whether he[29] does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may not eat since the Master said[30] , ‘The daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male who is unfit for the priesthood’;[31] and if he does not retain his holiness,[32] she may not eat either, since it has been said that the assembly of proselytes is called an ‘assembly’![33] If, however, according to R. Jose,[34] she is entitled to eat terumah whether he does or does not retain his holiness. For if he retains his holiness she may eat, since he[35] stated that even when a proselyte married a proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest;[36] and if he does not retain his holiness, she may also eat since he[35] said that the assembly of proselytes is not called an ‘assembly’![37] It must rather be[38] in accordance with the view of the following Tanna. For we learned: R. Eliezer b. Jacob said, ‘A woman who is the daughter of a proselyte must not be married to a priest unless her mother was of Israel’,[39] And it is this that his question amounts to: Has only her eligibility[40] increased[41] and consequently she is entitled to eat terumah[42] or has perhaps her sanctity also increased[43] and consequently she is not permitted to eat?[44]

Come and hear: When R. Aha b Hinena arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Whence is it deduced that if a priest, who is wounded in the stones, married the daughter of proselytes, he confers upon her the right to eat terumah? For it was stated, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money[45] etc.,[46] he may eat of it. Now, in accordance with whose view?[47] If it be suggested, ‘according to R. Judah’, surely [it may be retorted] he stated that whether he[48] does or does not retain his holiness she[49] is not permitted to eat.[50] And if[51] ‘in accordance with the view of R. Jose’, what need [it may be asked] was there for a Scriptural text? Surely, he[52] stated that whether he[48] does or does not retain his holiness she[49] is permitted to eat! Must it not [consequently be assumed that it[53] is] in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob? And so it may be inferred that only her eligibility[54] had been increased and that she is consequently permitted to eat. This proves it.

It was stated: Rab said,

---

(1) Since through the kinyan of the betrothal the woman becomes the priest's acquisition and is, therefore, like himself, entitled to eat terumah so long as she does not become profaned (a halalah) through actual marriage.

(2) The ruling according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon just deduced.

(3) If he married a woman permitted to him.

(4) Since he is not permitted to marry any woman.

(5) The incapacitated priest, since he is only forbidden to enter into the assembly of the Lord (Deut. XXIII, 2), i.e., to marry a Jewess, but he is permitted to marry a proselyte.

(6) Who is not included in the assembly of the Lord. V. supra n. 7.

(7) Infra.

(8) As to whether such an incapacitated priest may confer upon the daughter of a proselyte the right of eating terumah. Since no answer was given, there is no proof that the right may be conferred at all. The difficulty consequently remains: How could the case of the incapacitated priest who can never confer the right upon others be inferred from the case of one who is, in certain circumstances, entitled to confer such a right?

(9) In reply to the difficulty raised. V. supra n. 10.

(10) The incapacitated priest is entitled to confer upon the woman he betrothed the right to eat terumah.

(11) In certain other circumstances.

(12) Whom he married before he had been incapacitated.

(13) After becoming incapacitated (v. infra 70a). Since he may confer the privilege of eating terumah in this case he may also confer it where the betrothal was unlawful, so long as the woman had not been profaned by him through marriage.

(14) מאכיל so MS.M. (Cur. edd מאכילה ‘enables her to eat’).

(15) As he may confer the privilege in that case he may also confer it upon the woman he betrothed.

(16) Where the incapacity occurred after marriage.

(17) Prior to the man's incapacity. This, therefore, provides no proof that a man who is already incapacitated can also confer the privilege.
(18) How does he reconcile the difference in two cases?
(19) Lit., ‘we do not say’.
(20) But insist on upholding Raba's distinction.
(21) Prior to her husband's death. As in this case the argument is obviously untenable so it is untenable in the case of the incapacitated priest.
(22) How can he advance an argument that is untenable in the case cited?
(23) Where the priest died.
(24) As soon as the priest died, leaving no sons, their marital relationship was completely severed.
(25) He is still her husband.
(26) And so entitled to a reply.
(27) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
(28) Who, in Kid. 77a, differs from R. Jose on the question of the daughter of a proselyte.
(29) The incapacitated Priest.
(30) R. Judah.
(31) חלל halal. As he may not consequently marry a proselyte's daughter she is obviously forbidden to eat of the terumah.
(32) And the priestly sanctity is consequently no reason for her prohibition to marry a halal.
(33) An ‘assembly of the Lord’ into which an incapacitated person may not enter. (Cf. supra p. 382, nn. 7 and 8). The marriage is consequently forbidden and, therefore, confers upon the woman no right to the eating of terumah.
(34) Did R. Johanan ask his question.
(35) R. Jose. [So MS.M. cur. edd.,’a Master said’].
(36) Kid. 77a. Hence she is not inferior in this respect to the daughter of an Israelite.
(37) The marriage with her being consequently permissible, the right of eating terumah should obviously be conferred upon her.
(38) R. Johanan raised his question.
(39) Bik. I,5.
(40) Where her mother was of Israel.
(41) I.e., is she, if her mother was of Israel, thereby only enabled to marry a priests but is not regarded as a proper daughter of Israel to be included in the ‘assembly of the Lord’, so as to be forbidden to one incapacitated.
(42) In any ease. Even if the incapacitated priest is holy he may marry her. And, as she is not included in the ‘assembly’ (v. supra n. 13), she is not forbidden to marry him.
(43) And she is thus included in the ‘assembly’ and hence forbidden to marry one incapacitated.
(44) Since the marriage was a forbidden one.
(45) Lev. XXII, 11.
(46) The Heb. ‘וגו in the original seems to be a mistake for הוא which is the only word omitted from the Scriptural quotation.
(47) Was R. Aha's Baraitha necessary.
(48) A priest suffering from the incapacity mentioned in the Baraitha.
(49) The woman who married him.
(50) Which is contrary to the Baraitha which permits it.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 57b

‘The bridal chamber[1] constitutes kinyan[2] with ineligible women’[3] and Samuel said, ‘The bridal chamber[4] does not constitute kinyan[2] with ineligible women’.[3] Said Samuel: Abba[5] agrees with me in the case of a girl who is under three years of age and one day; since cohabitation with her constitutes no kinyan,[6] the bridal chamber[7] also constitutes no kinyan.[6]

Raba said, We also learned a similar Baraitha:[8] A girl who is three years of age and one day may be betrothed by cohabitation; if a levir cohabited with her, he has thereby acquired her;[9] one incurs through her the guilt of intercourse with a married woman; she[10] defiles her cohabitor in respect of his imparting defilement to the lower, as well as to the upper couch;[11] if she was married to a priest she may eat terumah, and anyone ineligible[12] who cohabited with her causes her ineligibility.[13] Thus only a girl of the age of three years and one day, who is rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is also rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber; but a girl younger than three years and one day, who is not rendered ineligible by cohabitation, is not rendered ineligible through the bridal chamber either.[14] This proves it.

Rami b. Hama stated: [In regard to the question whether] the bridal chamber[15] constitutes kinyan[16] with ineligible women,[17] we arrive at a difference of opinion between R. Meir and R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.

Kid. 3a) that huppah by itself constitutes kinyan. They differ, however, in the case of ineligible women, Samuel being of the opinion that huppah with them constitutes no kinyan, since it does not allow them to enter into marital union. Rabbenu Tam, on the other hand, explains huppah here as having been preceded by kiddushin and with reference to the last clause of our Mishnah, the point at issue being whether with ineligible women it is considered nissu'in disqualifying the widow, or erusin; v. Tosaf s,v. רב].

According to R. Meir who holds that the betrothal causes ineligibility, the bridal chamber[1] also causes ineligibility, while according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who maintain that betrothal causes no ineligibility the bridal chamber also causes no ineligibility. But whence [is this proved]? Is it not possible that R. Meir advanced his view only there, in respect of betrothal, whereby kinyan is effected, but not in respect of the bridal chamber whereby no kinyan is effected![2] Or else: R. Eleazar and R. Simeon may have advanced their view there only, in respect of betrothal, since it is not close to the act of intercourse; but the bridal chamber which is close to the act of intercourse, may well cause ineligibility.

But if anything can be said[3] [it is, that the question[4] depends] on the dispute between the following Tannaim: For it was taught, 'This class or that, [viz.,] eligible or ineligible women, who were married [to a priest], or who only entered [with him] into the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place, are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'. 'Who only entered [etc.]' implies that 'were married' means that they were actually married![5] Must it not [consequently be concluded that the meaning is], 'as, for instance,[6] when they entered the bridal chamber without any intercourse having taken place'? And yet it was stated that 'they are entitled to sustenance from his estate and are also permitted to eat terumah'.[7] R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka said: Any woman whose cohabitation entitles her to the eating of terumah is also entitled to the eating of it through her entry into the bridal chamber, and any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it.[8]

Whence, [however, the proof]? Is it not possible that R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka is of the same opinion as R. Meir, who maintains that through betrothal alone a woman is not entitled to eat! — Instead, then, of the statement 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah is not entitled through her entry into the bridal chamber also to the eating of it', the statement should have run, 'Any woman upon whom cohabitation does not confer the right to eat terumah, is not entitled through her money[9] also to the eating of terumah'. But is it not possible that as the first Tanna spoke of the bridal chamber he also spoke of the bridal chamber!

R. Amram stated, The following ruling was given to us by R. Shesheth and he threw light on the subject[10] from a Mishnah: The bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women.[11] And the following Tanna taught the same thing:[12] 'Amen[13] that I[14] have not gone aside[15] as a betrothed, as a married woman, as one awaiting the decision of the levir or as one taken [by the levir]'.[16] Now, how is one to imagine the case of the 'betrothed'? If it be suggested that she was one who was warned[17] while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself[18] and is now made to drink[19] while she is still only betrothed; is a betrothed [it may be asked] subject to the drinking? Surely we learned: A betrothed or one awaiting the decision of a levir neither drinks[20] nor receives a kethubah![21] Should it, however, [be suggested that she is one] who was warned while she was betrothed, and then she secluded herself,[22] and is now made to drink when she is already married; do the waters [it may be asked] test her? Surely it was taught: And the man shall be clear from iniquity,[23] only when the man is 'clear from iniquity' do the waters test his wife; when, however, the man is not 'clear from iniquity'[24] the waters do not test his wife![25] Consequently [she[26] must be one] who was warned while she was betrothed and then she secluded herself,[22] and subsequently entered the bridal chamber but there was no cohabitation. Thus[27] it may be inferred that the bridal chamber alone constitutes kinyan[28] with ineligible women.[29] Said Raba: Do you think that this[30] is an authenticated statement?[31] Surely when R. Aha b. Hanina[32] arrived from the South, he came and brought a Baraitha with him: Besides thy husband,[33] only when the cohabitation of the husband preceded that of the adulterer, but not when the cohabitation of the adulterer preceded that of the husband! Rami b. Hama replied: This[34] is possible where, for instance, he[35] cohabited with her while she was only betrothed and still in the house of her father. Similarly in respect of the woman awaiting the decision of the levir[36] [it must obviously be a case] where the man cohabited with her in the house of her father-in-law![37]

(1) Even in the absence of betrothal.

(2) The bridal chamber alone without the additional kinyan of money, deed, or cohabitation is of no validity. V. Kid. 5a.

(3) On the lines of Rami b. Hama's statement.

(4) Whether the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan with ineligible women. (Cf. supra p. 385, nn. 11 and 13).

(5) Otherwise both expressions would have meant exactly the same classes. But this meaning is impossible in view of the fact that after actual marriage it is unanimously agreed that the woman is ineligible to eat terumah!

(6) I.e., the expression ‘or’, או is to be understood as the equivalent of ‘as for instance’ כגון , and the clause following is an illustration of the preceding one.

(7) Which proves that, even where the union was a forbidden one, the entry into the bridal chamber alone does not deprive a woman of the right of eating terumah if she was previously entitled to it.

(8) If she was the daughter of an Israelite (v. Keth. 57a). As the bridal chamber and cohabitation are in this case placed on the same level, it follows that in the case of the daughter of a priest also, if she loses her right to the terumah by cohabitation, she also loses it by entry into the bridal chamber. Thus it has been shewn that the question referred to by Rami b. Hama is a matter of dispute between the first Tanna and R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Broka.

Alternatively: Since in her case, unlike that of the betrothed, the kinyan of the bridal chamber is not applicable.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 58b

Why then, do you call her ‘a woman awaiting the decision of the levir’ [when such a woman] is in fact his proper wife, since Rab had stated, ‘kinyan is constituted in all respects’?[1] — [The Mishnah is] in accordance with the view of Samuel who stated, ‘Kinyan is constituted only in respect of the things specified in the section’ .[2]

Is not this[3] adduced only as a reason and support for the opinion of Rab?[4] And Rab, surely, had said that ‘Kinyan is constituted in all respects’![5] — Here we are concerned with a case where for instance he[6] addressed to her a ma'amar,[7] and it[3] represents the view of Beth Shammai who maintain that a ma'amar constitutes a perfect kinyan.[8] If so, she would be identical with the ‘betrothed woman’![9] — And according to your view, has not a ‘married woman’ and ‘one taken [by the levir]’ the same status?[10] But [the explanation must be that] ‘a married woman’ refers to one's own wife, and ‘one taken [by the levir]’ refers to that of another man.[11] So here also ‘betrothed’ means his own and ‘a woman awaiting the decision of the levir’, that of another.[11]

R. Papa said: It[12] represents the view of the following Tanna.[13] For it was taught: It is not permissible to warn a betrothed woman in order that she may be made to drink[14] while she is betrothed. She may, however, be warned in order that she may be made to drink when she is already married.[15] R. Nahman b. Isaac explained: By implication.[16]

R. Hanina sent [an instruction] in the name of R. Johanan: A levir who addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, while he has a living brother, causes her disqualification from the eating of terumah[17] even if he is a priest and she the daughter of a priest.[18] According to whom?[19] If it be suggested, according to R. Meir, it is possible [it might be objected that] R. Meir said that one that is subject to an illegitimate cohabitation[20] is not permitted to eat terumah [only when the cohabitation is] Pentateuchally forbidden;[21] did he, however, say [that the same law holds when the prohibition is only] Rabbinical? [Is it], however, [suggested that it was made] according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon? [It may be objected]: If the eating of terumah is permitted to one who is subject to a cohabitation which is pentateuchally forbidden, is there any need to speak of one which is only Rabbinically forbidden! When Rabin, however, came[22] he stated: Where a levir addressed a ma'amar to his yebamah, all[23] agree that she is permitted to eat terumah. If he has a profaned brother,[24] all[23] agree that she is not permitted to eat.[25] They only differ where he[26] gave her[27] a letter of divorce:[28] R. Johanan maintains that she may eat, and Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat. ‘R. Johanan maintains that she may eat’,for even the statement of R. Meir who holds that she may not eat applies only to one subject of a Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation; where, however, it is only Rabbinically forbidden she may eat. ‘And Resh Lakish maintains that she may not eat’ for even the statement of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, who hold that she may eat, applies only to one who has elsewhere the right[29] to confer the privilege of eating, but not in this case,[30] since he has no right[31] to confer the privilege elsewhere. And should you suggest that here also he has the right[31] to confer the privilege of eating in the case where she returns,[32] [it may be retorted that] one who returns[32] severs her connection with him and resumes her relationship with her father's house;[33] but this woman[34] remains bound to him.[35]

IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED etc. R. Hiyya b. Joseph enquired of Samuel: If a High priest betrothed a minor, who became adolescent[36] during her betrothal with him,[37] women (supra 57b).

(7) And then cohabited with her adulterously in her father-in-law's house, with no intention of effecting a legal kinyan. Alternatively: Only a ma'amar was addressed to her but no cohabitation at all took place. The cohabitation of the adulterer which, according to this interpretation, precedes that of the levir does not affect the legality of the water test since in any case the cohabitation of the first husband (the deceased brother) preceded.

(8) Supra 29b. The sister-in-law thus loses entirely her former status of ‘widow of a deceased brother’ and assumes that of a ‘betrothed woman’. Subsequent intercourse with her unless accompanied by the entry into the bridal chamber does not, therefore, change her status, as is the case where no ma'amar had been addressed, to that of a married woman. Her description, consequently, can only be that of ‘one awaiting the decision of the levir’.

(9) Whose case had been specifically mentioned. Why should the same law be mentioned twice?

(10) And both were nevertheless specified.

(13) It being a case where the warning was given during betrothal, and the seclusion with the man took place after marriage and cohabitation. The water test is applied on the basis of that warning. Alternatively: The warning was given during betrothal and it was followed by the seclusion with the man, the test being applied after marriage. The previously cited deduction, that when the husband is not clear from iniquity the test is not admissible, is not accepted by this authority.

(14) The water of bitterness.

(15) Sotah 25a. The man in such a case is clear from iniquity. No proof may consequently be adduced from the Mishnah cited by R. Shesheth that the bridal chamber constitutes kinyan. Alternatively: This Tanna does not accept the deduction in respect of the husband's clearness from iniquity. (V. supra n. 4, end).

(16) גלגול , v. Kid. 27b. The oath the woman is made to take at the drinking of the water of bitterness in respect of the days of her betrothal is not a direct oath but one added to that which she takes in connection with a suspected act after her marriage.

(25) Even though she is the daughter of a priest and even where the ma'amar had been addressed to her by a qualified priest, she is forbidden to eat terumah, owing to her being subject at least to one Pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation. Even R. Eleazar and R. Simeon who allow terumah in the case of a widow to a High priest do not allow it here since, unlike the High Priest who in cases other than that of the widow and the like is entitled to confer the right, the halal can never confer such a privilege upon anyone.

(26) A levir who was a priest.

(27) His yebamah who was the daughter of a priest.

(28) Which Rabbinically causes her prohibition to the levir, while Pentateuchally she is still awaiting cohabitation with him. She is thus awaiting a cohabitation which is Rabbinically forbidden.

(30) Where a letter of divorce was given.

(31) By means of a similar act of divorce.

(32) To the house of her father, if she was the daughter of a priest. Cf. Lev. XXII, 13.

(33) Her regaining the privilege of eating terumah is due to her relationship not with him but with her father's family.

(34) To whom the letter of divorce was given.

(35) Since a letter of divorce does not sever the levirate bond.
(36) בגרה v. infra p. 394 n. 7; perhaps of advanced age, when she is no more in possession of her full virgin powers (cf. Golds. a.l.). Such a woman is forbidden to a High priest by deduction from Lev. XXI, 13 And he shall take a wife in her virginity.

what [is the law]:[1] Are we guided by the marriage[2] or by the betrothal?[3] — The other replied to him: You have learned it: IF THEY BECAME WIDOWS OR WERE DIVORCED AFTER MARRIAGE THEY REMAIN INELIGIBLE; IF AFTER BETROTHAL THEY BECOME ELIGIBLE.[4] The first said to him: With reference to rendering her a halalah,[5] I have no doubt that it is the forbidden cohabitation[6] that causes her to be a halalah. My question is only: What is implied by, And he shall take a wife in her virginity:[7] Is the 'taking' of betrothal required,[8] or is it the 'taking' of marriage that is required?[9] The other replied, You have learned this also: [A priest who] betrothed a widow, and was subsequently appointed to be a High Priest, may consummate the marriage![10] — There it is different because it is written, Shall he take to wife.[11] Here also it is written wife![12] — Only one[13] but not two. And what is the reason?[14] — In the case of the one,[15] her body has undergone a change;[16] in that of the other her body underwent no change.

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WIDOW[17] WHETHER SHE BECAME A WIDOW AFTER A BETROTHAL OR AFTER A MARRIAGE. HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT.[18] R. ELEAZAR AND R. SIMEON PERMIT HIM TO MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT,[18] BUT HE MAY NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS WOUNDED.[19]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: A widow . . . shall he not take,[17] whether she became a widow after a betrothal or after a marriage. Is not this obvious?[20] — It might have been assumed that [the meaning of] widow[21] is to be inferred from widow[22] in the case of Tamar; as there[22] it was one after marriage, so here[21] also it is one after marriage; hence we were taught [that any widow was meant]. But might it not be suggested that it is indeed so?[23] — [It is compared] to a divorced woman:[24] As 'divorced woman'[24] [includes any divorcee] whether after betrothal or after marriage,[25] so also 'widow'[24] [includes any widow] whether after betrothal or after marriage.

HE SHALL NOT MARRY ONE WHO IS ADOLESCENT. Our Rabbis taught: And he shall take a wife in her virginity[26] excludes one who is adolescent, whose virginity is ended; so R. Meir. R. Eleazar and R. Simeon permit the marriage of one who is adolescent. On what principle do they differ? — R. Meir is of the opinion that virgin[27] implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity; her virginity[28] implies only one who retains all her virginity;[29] in her virginity[30] implies only [when previous intercourse with her took place] in the natural manner,[31] but not when in an unnatural manner.[32] R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, however, are of the opinion that virgin would have implied a perfect virgin; her virginity implies even [one who retains] only part of her virginity;[33] in her virginity implies only one whose entire virginity is intact,[34] irrespective of whether [previous intercourse with her was] of a natural or unnatural character.[35]

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: A woman who was subjected to unnatural intercourse is disqualified from marrying a priest.[36] Raba raised an objection: And she shall be his wife,[37] applies to a woman eligible to marry him. This excludes [the marriage of] a widow[38] to a High Priest,[39] of a divorced woman[38] and a haluzah[38] to a common priest. Now, how is one to understand [the outrage]?[40] If it be suggested that it was one of natural intercourse, what [it may be asked] was the object of pointing to her widowhood[41] when [her prohibition] could be inferred from the fact that she had had carnal intercourse with a man?[42] Must it not consequently [be assumed to be] a case of unnatural intercourse; and the only reason[43] [why the woman is forbidden[44] is] because she is a widow, and not because she had had carnal intercourse![45]

(35) Even if it was unnatural she is forbidden, unless her virginity remained completely intact. Cf. supra n. 7. As, according to R. Eleazar and R. Simeon, one who is adolescent is permitted it was necessary to have the Scriptural text to exclude this case. According to R. Meir, however, who excludes one who is adolescent, there is no need any more to exclude this case which is easily inferred a minori ad majus from the former.

[45] Which proves that unnatural intercourse does not cause a woman to be forbidden to marry a High Priest. How then could Rab state that a woman in such circumstances is forbidden?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 59b

— This[1] represents the view of[2] R. Meir,[3] while Rab holds the same view as R. Eleazar.[4] If [Rab holds the same view] as R. Eleazar, what was the object of pointing to her previous carnal intercourse[5] when [her prohibition] could have been inferred from the fact that she was a harlot,[6] R. Eleazar having stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot![7] — R. Joseph replied:[8] When, for instance, the woman was subjected to intercourse with a beast, where the reason of ‘previous carnal intercourse may be applied but not that of harlot.[9] Said Abaye to him: Whatever you prefer [your reply cannot be upheld], If she is a be'ulah[10] she must also be a harlot; and if she is not a harlot[11] she cannot be a be'ulah either! And were you to reply: This case is similar to that of a wounded woman,[12] [it may be pointed out] that if [the disqualification should be extended to] unnatural intercourse also,[13] you will find no woman eligible to marry a [High Priest [since there is not one] who has not been in some way wounded[14] by a splinter! No, said R. Zera,[15] in respect of a minor who made a declaration of refusal.[16]

R. Shimi b. Hiyya stated: A woman who had intercourse with a beast is eligible to marry a priest.[17] Likewise it was taught: A woman who had intercourse with that which is no human being,[18] though she is in consequence subject to the penalty of stoning,[19] is nevertheless permitted to marry a priest.[20]

When R. Dimi came[21] he related: It once happened at Haitalu[22] that while a young woman was sweeping the floor[23] a village dog[24] covered her from the rear,[25] and Rabbi permitted her to marry a priest. Samuel said: Even a High Priest. But was there a High Priest in the days of Rabbi?[26] — Rather, [Samuel meant]: Fit for a High Priest.

Raba of Parzakaia[27] said to R. Ashi: Whence is derived the following statement which the Rabbis made: Harlotry is not applicable to bestial intercourse? — It is written, Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog,[28] and yet we learned that the hire of a dog[29] and the price of a harlot[30] are permitted[31] because it is said, Even both these,[28] two only but not four.

Our Rabbis taught: [A High Priest] shall not marry the woman he himself has outraged or seduced.[32] If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid.[33] He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer b. Jacob, is profaned:[34] but the Sages said: The child is legitimate.[35]

‘If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid’. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: But he must put her aside by a letter of divorce. What, then, [is the explanation] of the statement ‘If, however, he married her, the marriage is valid’? — R. Aha b. Jacob replied: It was meant to imply that he pays no fine[1] in the case of a seduced woman.[2]

R. Gebiha of Be Kathil[3] came and repeated the reported ruling[4] in the presence of R. Ashi, whereupon the other said to him: Surely both Rab and R. Johanan stated ‘[a High Priest] must not marry a woman who is adolescent[5] or "wounded",[6] but if he married her, the marriage is valid’,which clearly proves [that he may continue to live with the woman because in any case] she would ultimately have become adolescent and would ultimately have been ‘wounded’ by living with[7] him; here also[8] [she should be permitted to live with him because] ultimately she would have become a be'ulah by living with[7] him! — This is a difficulty.

‘He shall not marry a woman whom another man has outraged or seduced. If he did marry her, the child, said R. Eliezer[9] b.Jacob, is profaned; but the Sages said: The child is fit’.[10] Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob; and so said R. Giddal in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer b. Jacob. Others say: R. Huna stated in the name of Rab. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason?[11] — He is of the same opinion as R.

Eleazar.[12] But is the former of the same opinion as the latter? Surely we have an established tradition that 'the teaching of R. Eliezer b. Jacob is small in quantity, but select',[13] while in this case R. Amram[14] stated that the halachah is not in accordance with R. Eleazar![15] — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi explained: They[16] differ [on the question whether the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment[17] is deemed to be a halal. R. Eliezer b. Jacob is of the opinion [that the offspring] of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is deemed to be a halal while the Rabbis are of the opinion that the offspring of a union forbidden by a positive commandment is no halal. What is R. Eliezer b. Jacob's reason? — Because it is written, A widow, or one divorced, or a profaned woman, or a harlot, these shall he not take,' but a virgin etc.,[18] and this is followed by the Scriptural injunction, And he shall not profane[19] his seed among his people,[20] which refers to all.[21] And the Rabbis?[22] — [By the expression] these[18] the context is broken up.[23] But R. Eliezer b. Jacob maintains that the expression, these,[18] serves the purpose of excluding the menstruant.[24]

Whose view is represented in the following statement wherein it was taught: [Only the offspring] of these[25] is to be regarded a halal but no offspring of a menstruant is to be deemed a halal.[26] — Whose view? That of R. Eliezer b. Jacob. But on the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob, the expression these[26] should have been written at the end![27] — This is a difficulty.[28]

Our Rabbis taught: For a betrothed sister,[29] R. Meir and R. Judah said, [a common priest][30] may defile himself.[31] R. Jose and R. Simeon said: He may not defile himself for her. For [a sister who was] outraged or seduced, all agree that he may not defile himself.[31] As to one 'wounded',[32] R. Simeon says he may not defile himself for her; for R. Simeon maintains that he may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest,[33] but he may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest.[34] For one who is adolescent, all agree[35] that he may defile himself.[36]

What is R. Meir's and R. Judah's reason? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,[37] excludes one who had been outraged or seduced.[38] It might be assumed that one who was 'wounded' is also to be excluded.[39] Hence it was specifically stated, That hath had no husband,[37] only she whose condition is due to a man [is excluded][39] but not one[40] whose condition is not due to a man. That is near,[37] includes a betrothed [sister]; unto him,[37] includes a sister who is adolescent.

What need was there for a Scriptural text in this case?[41] Surely R. Meir stated, 'virgin implies even [one who retains] some of her virginity'![42] — It was required, because it might have been assumed that the expression of virgin[43] shall be deduced from virgin elsewhere;[44] as there it refers to a na'arah[45] only, so here also it refers to a na'arah[45] only, hence we were taught [that the case here is different]. And what are the reasons of R. Jose and R. Simeon? — They make the following exposition: And for his sister a virgin,[43] excludes one who has been outraged, seduced or wounded;[46] that hath had no,[43] excludes one who is betrothed; that is near,[43] includes a betrothed who had been divorced; unto him,[43] includes one who is adolescent. 'That is near, includes a betrothed who had been divorced'; but, surely, R. Simeon said, ‘He may defile himself for one who is fit for a High Priest, but may not defile himself for one who is not fit for a High Priest’![1] — There[2] it is different, because the All Merciful has included her [by the expression] near.[3] If so, the ‘wounded’ also should be included! — Near[3] implies one and not two. And what [reason for this][4] do you see? — To the body of the one something had been done while to that of the other nothing had been done.

As to R. Jose, since his colleague[5] had left him,[6] it may be inferred that in respect of the ‘wounded’, he himself is of the same opinion as R. Meir.[7] Whence, however, does he derive it? — From That hath had no man. But deduction,[8] surely, had already been made[9] from this text! — One[8] is deduced from That hath had no and the other[10] from man.[11]

‘"Unto him", includes one who is adolescent’. But surely R. Simeon stated that ‘virgin’ implied a perfect virgin![12] — His reason there is also derived from here, because he makes the following exposition: since [the Scriptural text], ‘unto him’, was required to include one who is adolescent, it is to be inferred that ‘virgin’ implies a perfect virgin.

It was taught: R. Simeon b. Yohai stated: A proselyte who is under the age of three years and one day is permitted to marry a priest,[13] for it is said, But all the women children that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves[14] , and Phinehas[15] surely was with them. And the Rabbis?[16] — [These were kept alive] as bondmen and bondwomen.[17] If so,[18] a proselyte whose age is three years and one day[19] should also be permitted! — [The prohibition is to be explained] in accordance with R. Huna. For R. Huna pointed out a contradiction: It is written, Kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him,[20] but if she hath not known, save her alive; from this it may be inferred that children are to be kept alive whether they have known or have not known [a man]; and, on the other hand, it is also written, But all the women children, that have not known man by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves,[14] but do not spare them if they have known. Consequently[21] it must be said that Scripture speaks of one who is fit[22] for cohabitation.[23]

It was also taught likewise: And every woman that hath known man;[20] Scripture speaks of one who is fit[23] for cohabitation. You say, ‘Of one who is fit for cohabitation’; perhaps it is not so but of one who had actual intercourse? — As Scripture stated, But all women children, that have not known man by lying with him,[24] it must be concluded that Scripture speaks of one who is fit for cohabitation.[23]

Whence did they know?[25] — R. Hana[26] b. Bizna replied in the name of R. Simeon the Pious: They were made to pass before the frontplate.[27] If the face of anyone turned pale[28] it was known that she was fit for cohabitation; if it did not turn pale[28] it was known that she was unfit for cohabitation.

R. Nahman said: Dropsy is a manifestation of lewdness.

Similarly, it is said, And they found among the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead four hundred young virgins, that had not known man by lying with him;[29] whence did they know it?[30] R. Kahana replied: They made them sit upon the mouth of a wine-cask. [Through anyone who had] had previous intercourse, the odour penetrated; through a virgin, its odour did not penetrate. They should have been made to pass before the frontplate![31] — R. Kahana son of R. Nathan replied: It is written, for acceptance,[32] for acceptance but not for punishment. If so, the same should have applied at Midian also![33] R. Ashi replied: It is written, ‘unto them’, implying unto them[34] for acceptance but not for punishment; unto idolaters,[35] however, even for punishment.[36]

R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi: The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.[37] Said R. Zera to R. Jacob b. Idi: Did you hear this[37] explicitly or did you learn it by a deduction? What [could be the] deduction? — As R. Joshua b. Levi related: There was a certain town in the Land of Israel the legitimacy of whose inhabitants was disputed, and Rabbi sent R. Romanos who conducted an enquiry and found in it the daughter of a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day,[38] and Rabbi declared her eligible to live with a priest.[39] The other[40] replied:[41] I heard it explicitly. And what [matters it] if it[42] was learned by deduction?[43] — It is possible that there[44] it was different; since the marriage had already taken place he sanctioned it; for, indeed, both Rab and R. Johanan stated: A priest may not marry one who is adolescent or ‘wounded’, but if already married, he may continue to live with her. How now! There it is quite correct [to sanction the marriage since in any case] she would ultimately become adolescent while she[45] will be with him,[46] and she would also ultimately become a be'ulah while with him;[46] but here, would she ultimately become a harlot[47] while with him?[48] R. Safra taught [that he[40] arrived at it][42] by deduction, and, having raised the difficulty,[49] answered it in the same way.[50]

A certain priest married a proselyte who was under the age of three years and one day. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac to him: What [do you mean by] this?[51] — The other replied: Because R. Jacob b. Idi stated in the name of R. Joshua b. Levi that the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Yohai.[52] ‘Go’, the first said, ‘and arrange for her release, or else I will pull R. Jacob b. Idi out of your ear’.[53]

It was taught: And so did R. Simeon b. Yohai state that the graves of idolaters do not impart levitical uncleanness by an ohel,[1] for it is said, And ye My sheep the sheep of My pasture, are men;[2] you are called men[3] but the idolaters are not called men.[3]

An objection was raised: And the persons were sixteen thousand![4] — This is due to [the mention of] cattle.[5] Wherein are more than six-score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right and their left hand![6] — This is due [to the mention of] cattle.[7] Whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify yourselves![8] — One of the Israelites might have been slain. And the Rabbis?[9] — [Scripture states]. There lacketh not one man of us.[10] And R. Simeon b. Yohai? — There lacketh not one man of us, through indulgence in sin.

Rabina replied: Granted that Scripture excluded them[11] from imparting uncleanness through an ohel,[12] because of the written text, When a man dieth in the tent,[13] did Scripture also exclude them from [imparting uncleanness by] touch and carriage?[14]

MISHNAH. [A PRIEST WHO] BETROTHED A WIDOW, AND WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, MAY CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE. IT ONCE HAPPENED WITH JOSHUA B. GAMALA THAT HE BETROTHED MARTHA THE DAUGHTER OF BOETHUS, AND THE KING APPOINTED HIM HIGH PRIEST, AND HE, NEVERTHELESS, CONSUMMATED THE MARRIAGE.

IF ONE AWAITING THE DECISION OF THE LEVIR[15] BECAME SUBJECT TO A COMMON PRIEST WHO WAS SUBSEQUENTLY APPOINTED HIGH PRIEST, [THE LATTER], THOUGH HE ALREADY ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, MUST NOT CONSUMMATE THE MARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Whence is it deduced that [a priest] who betrothed a widow and was afterwards appointed High Priest may consummate the marriage? It is specifically stated in Scripture, Shall he take to wife.[16] If so, [the same law should apply to] a yebamah awaiting the decision of the levir also! — A ‘wife’ but not a yebamah.

IT ONCE HAPPENED TO JOSHUA etc. He APPOINTED HIM[17] but he was not elected![18] Said R. Joseph: I see here a conspiracy;[19] for R. Assi, in fact, related that Martha the daughter of Boethus brought to King Jannai[20] a tarkab[21] of denarii before he gave an appointment to Joshua b. Gamala among the High Priests.[22]

MISHNAH. A HIGH PRIEST WHOSE BROTHER DIED[23] MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[24]

GEMARA. He lays down a general rule implying[25] that there is no difference whether [the yebamah became a widow] after betrothal or after marriage! One can well understand [the case of the widow] after marriage, [since marriage with her is forbidden by] a positive[26] as well as by a negative commandment,[27] and no positive commandment[28] may override a negative and a positive commandment;[29] but [in the case of a widow] after betrothal, the positives should override the negative commandment![30] — The first act of cohabitation[31] was forbidden as a preventive measure against the second act of cohabitation.[32]

MISHNAH. A COMMON PRIEST SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION,[33] UNLESS HE HAD ALREADY A WIFE[34] OR CHILDREN.[35] R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH[36] [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH.[37] BUT THE SAGES SAID: THE TERM HARLOT IMPLIES ONLY A FEMALE PROSELYTE,[38] FREED BONDMAID[38] AND ONE WHO HAS BEEN SUBJECTED TO MERETRICIOUS INTERCOURSE. GEMARA. Said the Exilarch[39] to R. Huna: What is the reason?[40] Obviously because of the duty of the propagation of the race; are, then, only priests commanded concerning the propagation of the race while Israelites are not commanded?[41] The other replied:[42] Because it was desired to state in the final clause, R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN THOUGH HE HAS HAD A WIFE

(3) אדם (Adam), in respect of levitical uncleanness by ohel. The expression אדם is also used in the Pentateuchal text dealing with the laws of the uncleanness of objects found in a tent in which lay a corpse. V. Num, XIX, 14ff. [This is held by R. Simeon b. Yohai to denote, as distinct from the other terms for ‘man’ (אנוש , גבר , איש), only an Israelite who, as a worshipper of the true God, can be said to have been like Adam created in the image of God. (Cf. Gen. I, 27 and V, I, where the Heb. text has in each case Adam for ‘man’). Idol worshippers having marred the Divine image forfeit all claim to this appelation. V. also B.M. Sonc. ed. p. 651, n. 6].

(4) Num. XXXI, 40. Here also the Heb. equivalent for persons is אדם though it refers to the Midianites who were idolaters.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 61b

AND CHILDREN HE SHALL NOT MARRY A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, SINCE SUCH [IS INCLUDED IN THE TERM OF] HARLOT MENTIONED IN THE TORAH. Since priests only were commanded concerning the harlot while Israelites were not so commanded, therefore PRIEST only was mentioned.

Said R. Huna: What is R. Judah's reason? — Since it is written, And they shall eat, and not have enough, they shall commit harlotry and shall not increase,[1] any cohabitation which results in no increase is nothing but meretricious intercourse.

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, A priest shall not marry a minor. Said R. Hisda to Rabbah: Go and consider this matter,[2] for in the evening R. Huna will question you on the subject. When he went out he considered the point [and came to the conclusion that] R. Eliezer was of the same opinion as R. Meir and also of the same Opinion as R. Judah. ‘He is of the same opinion as R. Meir’ who takes exceptional cases[3] into consideration;[4] and ‘also of the same opinion as R. Judah’, who holds that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.[5] But does he[6] hold the same opinion as R. Meir? Surely it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform, nor submit to halizah, nor contract levirate marriage; so R; Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled], may neither perform, nor submit to halizah', since in the Pentateuchal section[7] man was written,[8] and we also draw a comparison between woman and man.[9] What, however, is the reason why they may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;[10] a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated.[11] And it was also taught: A minor female may contract the levirate marriage[12] but may not perform halizah;[13] so R. Eliezer![14]

And does he hold the same opinion as R. Judah? Surely it was taught: Zonah[15] implies, as her name [indicates, a faithless wife];[16] so R. Eliezer. R. Akiba said: Zonah implies one who is a prostitute.[17] R. Mathia b. Heresh said: Even a woman whose husband, while going[18] to arrange for her drinking,[19] cohabited with her on the way,[20] is rendered a zonah. R. Judah said: Zonah implies one who is incapable of procreation.[21] And the Sages said: Zonah is none other than a female proselyte, a freed bondwoman, and one who has been subjected to any meretricious intercourse. R. Eleazar[22] said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah![23] No, said R. Adda b. Ahabah, the reference here[24] is to[25] a High Priest. For when does he acquire her [as his lawful wife]? Only when she grows up;[26] but, then, she is already a be'ulah.[27] Said Raba:[28] What thoughtlessness![29] If her father had arranged her betrothal, then [the High Priest] would have acquired her from that very moment;[30] and if she herself had accepted the betrothal, is this[31] then the view of R. Eliezer only[32] and not that of the Rabbis![33] No, explained Raba, it[34] refers indeed to a common priest, but [the prohibition to marry the minor] is a precaution against the possibility of her seduction[35] while living with him. If so, [the same should apply to] an Israelite also! — The seduction of a minor is regarded as an outrage, and an outraged woman is permitted in the case of an Israelite.[36] R. Papa replied: [It[34] speaks] of a High Priest, and it represents the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;[37] as one might assume it to mean a minor, it was explicitly stated wife. If only 'wife' [had been written], it might have been assumed to mean one who is adolescent,[38] hence it was explicitly stated, 'a virgin'. How, then [is the text to be understood]? One who has emerged from her minority but has not yet attained adolescence.[39]

R. Nahman b. Isaac explained:[40] It is the opinion of the following Tanna. For it was taught: A virgin;[37] the only meaning of 'virgin' is damsel;[41] and so it is said in Scripture, And the damsel[42] was very fair to look upon, a virgin.[43] 'R. Eleazar said: An unmarried man who had intercourse with an unmarried woman, with no matrimonial intent, renders her thereby a zonah.' R. Amram said: The halachah is not in agreement with the opinion of R. Eleazar.

MISHNAH. A MAN SHALL NOT ABSTAIN FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF THE DUTY OF THE PROPAGATION OF THE RACE[44] UNLESS HE ALREADY HAS CHILDREN. [AS TO THE NUMBER]. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES, AND BETH HILLEL RULED: MALE AND A FEMALE, FOR IT IS STATED IN SCRIPTURE, MALE AND FEMALE CREATED HE THEM.[45]

GEMARA. [This implies] if he has children, he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation but not from that of living with a wife.[46] This provides support for a statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel who ruled that although a man may have many children he must not remain without a wife, for it is said in the Scriptures, It is not good that the man should be alone.[47]

Others read: [This[48] implies] if he has children he may abstain from performing the duty of propagation and also from that of living with a wife. May it, then, be said that this presents an objection against the statement R. Nahman made in the name of Samuel?[49] — No; if he has no children he must marry a woman capable of procreation; and if he has children he may marry a woman who is incapable of procreation. What is the practical difference?[50] — In respect of selling a Scroll of the Law for the sake of children.[51] BETH SHAMMAI RULED: TWO MALES. What is Beth Shammai's reason? We make an inference from Moses, in connection with whom it is written, The sons of Moses: Gershom and Eliezer.[52] And Beth Hillel? — We infer from the creation of the world. Let Beth Shammai also infer from the creation of the world! — The possible cannot be inferred from the impossible.[1] Let Beth Hillel, then, make the inference from Moses! — They can answer you: Moses did it with His consent.[2] For it was taught: Moses did three things on his own initiative and his opinion coincided with that of the Omnipresent. He separated himself from his wife,[3] broke the Tables of Testimony[4] and added one day.[5]

‘He separated himself from his wife’; what exposition did he make?[6] — He said, ‘If to the Israelites, with whom the Shechinah spoke only for a while and for whom a definite time was fixed, the Torah nevertheless said, Come not near a woman,[7] how much more so to me, who am liable to be spoken to at any moment and for whom no definite time has been fixed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is said, Go say to them: Return ye to your tents; but as for thee, stand thou here by Me.[8]

‘He broke the Tables of Testimony’; what exposition did he make?[6] — He said, ‘If of the Paschal lamb, which is only one of the six hundred and thirteen commandments, the Torah said, There shall no alien eat thereof,[9] how much more should this apply to the entire Torah when all Israel are apostates’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent; for it is written, Which thou didst break[10] and Resh Lakish explained: The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Moses, ‘I thank you for breaking them’.[11]

‘He added one day’ on his own initiative. What exposition did he make?[12] — ‘As it is written, And sanctify them to-day and to-morrow[13] [It implies that] to-day shall be the same as to-morrow; as to-morrow includes the previous night[14] so to-day must include the previous night. As, however, to-day's previous night has already passed away,[15] it must be inferred that two days exclusive of to-day must be observed’. And his view coincided with that of the Omnipresent, for the Revelation did not take place[16] before the Sabbath.[17]

It was taught: R. Nathan stated: Beth Shammai ruled: Two males and two females;[18] and Beth Hillel ruled: A male and a female.[18] Said R. Huna: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the opinion of Beth Shammai? Because it is written, And again she bore his brother Abel[19] [which[20] implies:] Abel and his sister; Cain and his sister.[21] And it is also written, For God hath appointed me another seed instead of Abel;[22] for Cain slew him.[23] And the Rabbis? She was merely expressing her gratitude.[24]

Elsewhere it was taught: R. Nathan stated that Beth Shammai ruled: A male and a female;[25] and Beth Hillel ruled: Either a male or a female.[25]

Said Raba: What is the reason which R. Nathan assigns for the view of Beth Hillel? — Because it is said, He created it not a waste, He formed it to be inhabited,[26] and he[27] has obviously helped it to be inhabited.

It was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has fulfilled, R. Johanan said, the duty of propagation of the race; and Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation of the race. ‘R. Johanan said: He has fulfilled the duty of propagation’, since he had children. ‘And Resh Lakish said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because one who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And they[28] follow their views.[29] For it was stated: If a man had children while he was an idolater and then he became a proselyte, he has, R. Johanan said, no firstborn in respect of inheritance,[30] since he already had[31] the first-fruits of his strength.[32] Resh Lakish, however, said: He has a firstborn son in respect of inheritance, for a man who became a proselyte is like a child newly born.

And [both statements[33] were] necessary. For if the first only had been stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that statement did R. Johanan maintain his view, since formerly he[34] was also subject to the obligation of propagation,[35] but in respect of inheritance, since [the proselyte's former children] are not entitled to heirship, it might have been presumed that he agrees with Resh Lakish. And were only the second stated [it might have been assumed that] only in that did Resh Lakish maintain his view but that in the former he agrees with R. Johanan. [Hence both were] necessary.

R. Johanan raised an objection against Resh Lakish. At that time Berodach-baladan the son of Baladan, King of Babylon etc.![36] — The other replied: While they are idolaters they have legally recognized ancestry, but when they become proselytes they have no longer any legally recognized ancestry.

Rab[37] said: All agree that a slave has no legally recognized relatives, since it is written, Abide ye here with[38] the ass,[39] people who are like the ass.[40]

An objection was raised: Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants![41] — R. Aba b. Jacob replied: Like a young bullock.[42] If so, [the same reply could be given] there also![43] — There it is different, since Scripture mentioned his[44] own name as well as his father's[45] name, while here[46] [the son's names] were not specified. If you prefer I might say: They[47] were elsewhere ascribed to their father and their father's father; as it is written, And King Asa sent them to Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimmon, the son of Hezion, the King of Aram, that dwelt at Damascus, saying.[48]

It was stated: If a man had children and they died, he has fulfilled, said R. Huna, the duty of propagation. R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled it. ‘R. Huna said: He fulfilled’ because [he follows the tradition] of R. Assi. For R. Assi[49] stated: The Son of David[50] will not come before all the souls in Guf[51] will have been disposed of, since it is said, For the spirit that unwrappeth itself is from Me etc.[52] And ‘R. Johanan said: He has not fulfilled the duty of propagation’ because we require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,[53] which is not the case here.[54] An objection was raised:

(54) The children being dead.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 62b

Grandchildren are like children![1] — This was taught only in respect of supplementing.[2]

An objection was raised: Grandchildren are like children. If one of them died or was found to be a saris[3] the father has not fulfilled the duty of propagation.[4] Is not this a refutation against R. Huna?[5] — It is indeed a refutation.

‘Grandchildren are like children’. Abaye intended to say: A grandson for a son and a granddaughter for a daughter, and certainly a grandson for a daughter; but not a granddaughter for a son.[6] But Raba said to him: We only require [the fulfilment of the text] He formed it to be inhabited,[7] which is the case here.

All, at any rate, agree[8] that two children of one[9] are not sufficient. But [are they] not? The Rabbis surely said to R. Shesheth,[10] 'Marry a wife and beget children', and he answered them, 'My daughters' children are mine'! — There he was merely putting them off, because R. Shesheth became impotent owing to the long discourses of R. Huna.[11]

Said Rabbah to Raba b. Mari: Whence the statement made by the Rabbis that grandchildren are like children? If it be suggested that it is deduced from the Scriptural text, The daughters are my daughters and the children are my children,[12] would then [it may be objected] the same [meaning be given to the text] And the flocks are my flocks?[12] But [the meaning there is obviously] 'which you have acquired from me', so here also [the meaning may be], 'which you have acquired from me'! The deduction is rather made from the following:[13] And afterwards Hezron went to the daughter of Machir the father of Gilead; . . . and she bore him Segub,[14] and it is also written, Out of Machir came down lawgivers,[15] and furthermore it is written, Judah is my lawgiver.[16]

Our Mishnah[17] cannot represent the opinion of R. Joshua. For it was taught: R. Joshua said, If a man married in his youth, he should marry again in his old age; if he had children in his youth, he should also have children in his old age; for it said, In the morning[18] sow thy seed and in the evening[19] withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, whether this or that, or whether they shall both be alike good.[20] R. Akiba said: If a man studied Torah in his youth, he should also study it in his old age; if he had disciples in his youth, he should also have disciples in his old age. For it is said, In the morning sow thy seed etc.[20]

It was said that R. Akiba had twelve thousand pairs of disciples, from Gabbatha[21] to Antipatris;[22] and all of them died at the same time because they did not treat each other with respect. The world remained desolate[23] until R. Akiba came to our Masters in the South and taught the Torah to them. These were R. Meir, R. Judah, R. Jose, R. Simeon and R. Eleazar b. Shammua; and it was they who revived the Torah at that time. A Tanna taught: All of them[24] died between Passover and Pentecost. R. Hama b. Abba or, it might be said, R. Hiyya b. Abin said: All of them died a cruel death. What was it?-R. Nahman replied: Croup.[25]

R. Mattena stated: The halachah is in agreement with R. Joshua.[26]

R. Tanhum stated in the name of R. Hanilai: Any man who has no wife lives without joy, without blessing, and without goodness. 'Without joy'. for it is written. And thou shalt rejoice, thou and thy house.[27] 'Without blessing', for it is written, To cause a blessing to rest on thy house.[28] 'Without goodness', for it is written, It is not good that the man should be alone.[29]

In the West[30] it was stated:[31] Without Torah and without a [protecting] wall. 'Without Torah', for it is written. Is it that I have no help[32] in me, and that sound wisdom[33] is driven quite from me.[34] 'Without a [protecting] wall', for it is written, A woman shall encompass a man.[35]

Raba b. 'Ulla said:[31] Without peace, for it is written, And thou shalt know that thy tent[36] is in peace; and thou shalt visit thy habitation and shalt miss nothing.[37]

R. Joshua b. Levi said: Whosoever knows his wife to be a God-fearing woman and does not duly visit her is called a sinner; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace[38] etc.[39]

R. Joshua b. Levi further stated: It is a man's duty to pay a visit to his wife when he starts on a journey; for it is said, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace etc.[37] Is this[40] deduced from here? Surely it is deduced from the following:[41] And thy desire shall be to thy husband[42] teaches that a woman yearns for her husband when he sets out on a journey! — R. Joseph replied: This[43] was required only in the case where her menstruation period was near.[44] And how near? Rabbah[45] replied: Twelve hours.[46] And this[47] applies only [when the journey is] for a secular purpose, but when for a religious purpose [it does not apply, since then] people are in a state of anxiety.[48] Our Rabbis taught: Concerning a man who loves his wife as himself, who honours her more than himself, who guides his sons and daughters in the right path and arranges for them to be married near the period of their puberty, Scripture says, And thou shalt know that thy tent is in peace.[49] Concerning him who loves his neighbours, who befriends his relatives, marries his sister's[50] daughter,

(1) Infra 70a. It is now assumed that whenever one's own child died the grandchild may take his place in exempting his grandfather from the duty of propagation. From this it follows that only living children or grandchildren exempt a man from the duty of further propagation. How then could R. Huna maintain that dead children also exempt one from this duty?

(2) If a man had only one son he is exempt from the duty of propagation if his son had a daughter. If, however, he once had a male and a female who subsequently died he is in any case exempt.

The lawgivers were thus the offspring of the union mentioned in I Chron. II, 21, between Hezron, a descendant of Judah, and a daughter of Machir. This then proves that the sons of one's daughter are also regarded as one's own sons.

and lends a sela’[1] to a poor man in the hour of his need, Scripture says, Then shalt thou call, and the Lord will answer; thou shalt cry and He will say: ‘Here I am’.[2]

(Mnemonic: Woman and land help this two shoots, tradesmen inferior.)[3]

R. Eleazar said: Any man who has no wife is no proper man; for it is said, Male and female created He them and called their name Adam.[4]

R. Eleazar further stated: Any man who owns no land is not a proper man; for it is said, The heavens are the heavens of the Lord; but the earth hath he given to the children of men.[5]

R. Eleazar further stated: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will make him a help meet for him?[6] If he was worthy she is a help to him;[7] if he was not worthy she is against him.[8] Others say: R. Eleazar pointed out a contradiction: It is written kenegedo[9] but we read kenegedo![10] — If he was worthy she is meet for him;[10] if he was not worthy she chastises him.[9]

R. Jose met Elijah and asked him: It is written, I will make him a help;[11] how does a woman help a man? The other replied: If a man brings wheat, does he chew the wheat? If flax, does he put on the flax?[12] Does she not, then, bring light to his eyes and put him on his feet!

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, This is now bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh?[13] This teaches that Adam had intercourse with every beast and animal but found no satisfaction until he cohabited with Eve.

R. Eleazar further stated: What is meant by the text, And in thee shall the families of the earth be blessed?[14] The Holy One, blessed be He, said to Abraham, ‘I have two goodly shoots to engraft[15] on you: Ruth the Moabitess and Naamah the Ammonitess’.[16] All the families of the earth,[14] even the other families who live on the earth are blessed only for Israel's sake. All the nations of the earth,[17] even the ships that go from Gaul to Spain are blessed only for Israel's sake.

R. Eleazar further stated: There will be a time when all craftsmen will take up agriculture;[18] for it is said, And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships; they shall stand upon the land.[19]

R. Eleazar further stated: No[20] occupation is inferior to that of agricultural labour; for it is said, And they shall come down.[21]

R. Eleazar once saw a plot of land that was ploughed across its width.[22] 'Wert thou to be ploughed along thy length also',[23] he remarked, 'engaging in business would still be more profitable'. Rab once entered among growing ears of corn. Seeing that they were swaying[24] he called out to them, 'Swing as you will,[25] engaging in business brings more profit than you can do'.

Raba said: A hundred zuz[26] in business means meat and wine every day; a hundred zuz in land, only salt and vegetables.[27] Furthermore it causes him to sleep on the ground[28] and embroils him in strife.[29]

R. Papa said, 'Sow[30] but do not buy,[31] even if the cost is the same; there is a blessing in the former. Sell out[32] to avoid disgrace;[33] but only mattresses, [not] however, a cloak, [since one] might not always again obtain [a suitable one].[34] Stop up[35] and you will need no repair;[36] repair[37] and you will not need to rebuild; for whosoever engages in building grows poor. Be quick in buying land; be deliberate in taking a wife. Come down a step in choosing your wife;[38] go up a step in selecting your shoshbin.[39]

R. Eleazar b. Abina[40] said: Punishment comes into the world only on Israel's account; for it is said, I have cut off nations, their corners are desolate; I have made their streets waste,[41] and this is followed by the text, 'I said: Surely thou wilt fear Me, thou wilt receive correction'.[42]

Rab was once taking leave of R. Hiyya. The latter said to him, 'May the All Merciful deliver you from that which is worse than death'. 'But is there' [Rab wondered] 'anything that is worse than death'? When he went out he considered the matter and found [the following text]: And I find more bitter than death the woman etc.[43]

Rab was constantly tormented by his wife. If he told her, 'Prepare me lentils', she would prepare him small peas; [and if he asked for] small peas, she prepared him lentils. When his son Hiyya grew up he gave her [his father's instruction] in the reverse order.[44] 'Your mother', Rab once remarked to him, 'has improved'![45] 'It was I', the other replied, 'who reversed [your orders] to her'. 'This is what people say', the first said to him, 'Thine own offspring teaches thee reason';[46] you, however, must not continue to do so' for it is said, They have taught their tongue to speak lies, they weary themselves etc'.[47]

R. Hiyya was constantly tormented by his wife. He, nevertheless, whenever he obtained anything suitable wrapped it up in his scarf and brought it to her. Said Rab to him, 'But, surely, she is tormenting the Master!' — 'It is sufficient for us', the other replied, 'that they rear up our children and deliver us from sin’.

Rab Judah was reading with his son R. Isaac the Scriptural text, And I find more bitter than death the woman. When the latter asked him, 'Who, for instance'? — 'For instance, your mother'. But,[1] surely, Rab Judah taught his son R. Isaac, 'A man finds happiness[2] only with his first wife; for it is said, Let thy fountain be blessed and have joy of the wife of thy youth';[3] and when the latter asked him, 'Who for instance?' [he answered:] 'For instance, your mother'![4] — She was indeed irascible but could be easily appeased with a kindly word.[5]

How is one to understand the term a 'bad wife'? Abaye said: One who prepares for him[6] a tray[7] and has her tongue[8] also ready for him. Raba said: One who prepares for him[6] the tray and turns her back upon him.[9]

R. Hama b. Hanina stated: As soon as a man takes a wife his sins are buried;[10] for it is said: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good and obtaineth[11] favour of the Lord.[12]

In the West,[13] they used to ask a man who married, 'findeth or find?'[14] Findeth, because it is written, Whoso findeth a wife, findeth a great good;[12] Find, because it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.[15]

Raba said: [If one has] a bad wife it is a meritorious act to divorce her,[16] for it is said, Cast out[17] the scoffer, and contention will go out; yea, strife and shame will cease.[18]

Raba further stated: A bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah[19] is large,[20] [should be given] a rival at her side; as people say, 'By her partner rather than by a thorn'.[21]

Raba further stated: A bad wife is as troublesome as a very rainy day; for it is said, A continual dropping in a very rainy day and a contentious woman are alike.[22]

Raba further stated: Come and see how precious is a good wife and how baneful is a bad wife. 'How precious is a good wife', for it is written: Whoso findeth a wife findeth a great good.[12] Now, if Scripture speaks of the woman herself, then how precious is a good wife whom Scripture praises. If Scripture speaks of the Torah, then how precious is a good wife with whom the Torah is compared. 'How baneful is a bad wife', for it is written, And I find more bitter than death the woman.[23] Now, if Scripture speaks of herself, then how baneful is a bad wife whom Scripture censures. If Scripture speaks of Gehenna, then how baneful is a bad wife with whom Gehenna is compared.

Behold I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape.[24] R. Nahman said in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: This refers to a bad wife, the amount of whose kethubah[25] is large.[26]

The Lord has delivered me into their hands against whom I am not able to stand.[27] R. Hisda said in the name of Mar 'Ukba b. Hiyya: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah[25] is large.[26] In the West[28] it was said: This refers to one whose maintenance depends on his money.[29]

Thy sons and thy daughter's shall be given unto another people.[30] R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to one's father's wife.[31]

I will provoke them with a vile[32] nation.[33] R. Hanan b. Raba stated in the name of Rab: This refers to a bad wife the amount of whose kethubah[25] is large.[34] R. Eliezer stated: This refers to the Sadducees;[35] for so it is said, The fool[32] has said in his heart: 'There is no God' etc.[36] In a Baraitha it was taught: This refers to the people of Barbaria[37] and the people of Mauretania[38] who go naked in the streets; for there is nothing more objectionable and abominable to the Omnipresent than the man who goes naked in the streets. R. Johanan said: This refers to the Parsees.[39]

When R. Johanan was informed that the Parsees[40] had come to Babylon, he reeled and fell.[41] When however he was told that they accepted bribes he recovered[42] and sat down again.[43]

They[44] issued three decrees as a punishment for three [transgressions]:[45] They decreed against [ritually prepared] meat,[46] because the priestly gifts[47] [were neglected]. They decreed against the use of baths, because ritual bathing [was not observed]. They exhumed the dead,[48] because rejoicings were held on the days of their[49] festivals; as it is said, Then shall the hand of the Lord be against you, and against your fathers,[50] and Rabbah b. Samuel said that that[51] referred to the exhumation of the dead, for the Master said, ‘For the sins of the living the dead are exhumed’.

Said Raba to Rabbah b. Mari: It is written, They shall not be gathered, nor be buried, they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth,[52] but it is also written,[53] And death shall be chosen rather than life![54] — The other replied: ‘Death shall be chosen’ for the wicked, in order that they may not live in this world and thus sin and fall into Gehenna.[55] It is written in the book of Ben Sira: —[56]

A good wife is a precious gift;[57] she will be put in the bosom of the God-fearing man.[58] A bad wife is a plague to her husband. What remedy has he? — Let him give her a letter of divorce and be healed of his plague.

A beautiful wife is a joy to her husband;[59] the number of his days shall be double.[60]

Turn away thy eyes from [thy neighbour's] charming wife lest thou be caught in her net. Do not turn in to her husband to mingle with him wine and strong drink; for, through the form of a beautiful woman, many were destroyed and a mighty host are all her slain.[61]

Many were the wounds of the spice-peddler,[62] which lead him on to lewdness like a spark that lights the coal.[63]

As a cage is full of birds so are [the harlots’] houses full of deceit .[64]

Do not worry about to-morrow's trouble, for thou knowest not what the day may beget. To-morrow may come and thou[65] wilt be no more and so thou hast worried about a world which is not thine.[66]

Keep away many from thy house; and do not bring everyone into thy house.

Many be they that seek thy welfare; reveal thy secret only to one of a thousand.

R. Assi stated: The son of David[67] will not come before all the souls in Guf[68] are disposed of; since it is said, For the spirit that enwrappeth itself is from Me, and the souls which I have made.[69]

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated, He who does not engage in propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; for it is said, Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed,[70] and this is immediately followed by the text, And you, be ye fruitful and mul tiply.[71] R. Jacob said: As though he has diminished the Divine Image; since it is said, For in the image of God made he man,[72] and this is immediately followed by, And you, be ye fruitful etc.[71] Ben ‘Azzai said: As though he sheds blood and diminishes the Divine Image; since it is said,[73] And you, be ye fruitful and mutltiply.[71]

They said to Ben ‘Azzai: Some preach well and act well, others act well but do not preach well; you. however, preach well but do not act well![74] Ben ‘Azzai replied: But what shall I do, seeing that my soul is in love with the Torah; the world can be carried on by others.

Another [Baraitha] taught : R. Eliezer said, Anyone who does not engage in the propagation of the race is as though he sheds blood; For it is said, Whoso sheddeth mans's blood,[72] and close upon it follows, And you, be ye fruitful etc.[71] R. Eleazar b. Azariah said: As though he diminished the Divine Image. Ben ‘Azzai said etc.[75] They said to Ben ‘Azzai: Some preach well etc.[75]

Our Rabbis taught: And when it rested, he said: ‘Return O Lord unto the ten thousands and[76] thousands of Israel’,[77] teaches that the Divine Presence does not rest on less than two thousand and two myriads of Israelites.[1] Should the number of Israelites happen to be two thousand and two myriads less one, and any particular person has not engaged in the propagation of the race, does he not thereby cause the Divine Presence to depart From Israel! Abba Hanan said in the name of R. Eliezer: He deserves the penalty of death; for it is said, And they had no children,[2] but if they had children they would not have died. Others say: He causes the Divine Presence to depart from Israel; for it is said, To be a God unto thee and to thy seed after thee;[3] where there exists 'seed after thee' the Divine Presence dwells [among them]; but where no 'seed after thee' exists, among whom should it dwell! Among the trees[4] or among the stones? MISHNAH. IF A MAN TOOK A WIFE AND LIVED WITH HER FOR TEN YEARS AND SHE BORE NO CHILD, HE MAY NOT ABSTAIN [ANY LONGER FROM THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION].[5] IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY ANOTHER, AND THE SECOND HUSBAND MAY ALSO LIVE WITH HER [NO MORE THAN] TEN YEARS.[6] IF SHE MISCARRIED [THE PERIOD OF TEN YEARS] IS RECKONED FROM THE TIME OF HER MISCARRIAGE.

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man took a wife and lived with her for ten years and she bore no child, he shall divorce her and give her her kethubah,[7] since it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her.[8] Although there is no definite proof for this statement[9] there is nevertheless a [Scriptural] allusion to it: After Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan.[10] This[11] teaches you that the years of his stay outside the Land[12] were not included in the number.[13] Hence, if the man or the woman was ill, or if both were in prison, [these years] are not included in the number.[14]

Said Raba to R. Nahman: Let deduction be made from Isaac, concerning whom it is written, And Isaac was forty years old when he took Rebecca etc.[15] and it is also written, And Isaac was threescore years old when she bore them![16] — The other replied: Isaac was barren.[17] If so,[18] Abraham also was barren![19] — That text[20] is required For a deduction in accordance with the statement of R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: Why were the years of Ishmael counted? In order to determine thereby the years of Jacob.[21]

R. Isaac stated: Our father Isaac was barren; for it is said, And Isaac entreated the Lord opposite[22] his wife.[23] It does not say 'for his wife' but opposite. This teaches that both were barren.[24] If so, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of him[23] should have read, And the Lord let Himself be entreated of them![25] — Because the prayer of a righteous man the son of a righteous man is not like the prayer of a righteous man the son of a wicked man.[26]

R. Isaac stated: Why were our ancestors barren? — Because the Holy One, blessed be He, longs to hear the prayer of the righteous.

R. Isaac further stated: Why is the prayer of the righteous compared to a pitchfork?[27] As a pitchfork turns the sheaves of grain from one position to another, so does the prayer of the righteous turn the dispensations of the Holy One, blessed be He, from the attribute of anger to the attribute of mercy.

R. Ammi stated: Abraham and Sarah were originally of doubtful sex;[28] for it is said, Look unto to the rock

whence you were hewn[1] and to the hole of the pit[2] whence you were digged,[3] and this is followed by the text, Look unto Abraham your father, and unto Sarah that bore you.[4]

R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Our mother Sarah was incapable of procreation; for it is said, And Sarai was barren; she had no child,[5] she had not even a womb.[6]

Rab Judah son of R. Samuel b. Shilath stated in the name of Rab: That[7] was taught only in respect of the early generations who lived many years. In respect of the later generations, however, whose years of life are few, only two years and a half, corresponding to three periods of pregnancy[8] [are allowed].[9]

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Nahman: Three years [must elapse],[9] corresponding to three remembrances;[10] For a Master said: Sarah, Rachel and Hannah[11] were remembered on New Year's Day.[12]

Rabbah ruled: These general principles[13] are to be disregarded.[14] For consider: Who compiled our Mishnah? Rabbi, of course; but the years of life were already reduced in the days of David. For it is written, The days of our years are threescore years and ten.[15]

With regard to the assumption that ‘it is possible that it was he who was unworthy to have children from her’,[16] is it not possible that it was she who was unworthy?[17] — Since she is not commanded to fulfil the duty of propagation she is not so punished.[18] But surely it is not so![19] For the Rabbis once said to R. Abba b. Zabda, ‘Take a wife and beget children’, and he answered them, ‘Had I been worthy I would have had them from my first wife’! — There he was merely evading the Rabbis; for, in fact, R. Abba b. Zabda became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna.[20]

R. Giddal became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,[20] R. Helbo became impotent through the discourses of R. Huna,[20] and R. Shesheth also became impotent through the discourses of R.Huna.[20]

R. Aha b. Jacob was once attacked by dysuria,[21] and when he was supported on the college cedar tree a discharge issued like a green palm shoot.

R. Aha b. Jacob stated: We were a group of sixty scholars, and all became impotent through the long discourses of R. Huna;[20] with the exception of myself who followed the principle, Wisdom preserveth the life of him that hath it.[22]

IF HE DIVORCED HER SHE IS PERMITTED etc. Only a second husband[23] but not a third;[24] whose view, then, is represented by our Mishnah? — It is that of Rabbi. For it was taught: If she circumcised her first child and he died,[25] and a second one who also died,[25] she must not circumcise her third child; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: She circumcises the third, but must not circumcise the fourth child. But, surely, the reverse was taught;[26] now which of these is the latter?[27] — Come and hear what R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: It once happened with four sisters at Sepphoris that when the first had circumcised her child he died; when the second [circumcised her child] he also died, and when the third [circumcised her child] he also died. The fourth came before R. Simeon b. Gamaliel who told her, ‘You must not circumcise [the child]’ .[28] But is it not possible that if the third sister had come he would also have told her the same![29] — If so,[30] what could have been the purpose of the evidence of R. Hiyya b. Abba? [No]. It is possible that he meant to teach us the following: That sisters also establish a presumption![31]

Raba said: Now that it has been stated that sisters also establish a presumption, a man should not take a wife either from a family of epileptics, or from a family of lepers. This applies. however, only when the fact had been established by the occurrence of three cases.[32]

What is the decision?[33] — When R. Isaac b. Joseph came he related: Such a case was once submitted to R. Johanan in the Synagogue of Ma'on[34] on the Day of Atonement which fell on a Sabbath. A woman, it happened, had circumcised her child[35] who died; her second [sister circumcised her child] and he also died, and her third sister appeared before him. He said to her, ‘Go and circumcise him’. Said Abaye to him:[36] See, you have permitted[37] a forbidden[38] and a dangerous[39] act.

Abaye, however, relying upon this statement[40] married Homa the daughter of Isi son of R. Isaac the son of Rab Judah, although Rehaba of Pumbeditha had married her and died, and R. Isaac son of Rabbah b. Hana had subsequently married her and also died. And after he had married her, he himself died also.

Said Raba: Would any one else have exposed himself to such danger? Surely he himself had said that Abin was reliable[41] but that Isaac the Red was not a person to be relied upon;[41] that Abin was well acquainted with any change[42] [in the views of R. Johanan] but Isaac the Red was not acquainted with any such changes! Furthermore, it might be said that their dispute[43] extended only to the case of circumcision; do they, however, differ also in the case of marriage? — Yes; for so it was taught: If a woman was married to one husband[44] who died, and to a second one who also died, she must not be married to a third; so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: She may be married to a third, but she may not be married to a fourth.[45]

In the case of circumcision, one can well understand [why the operation is dangerous with some children and not with others] since the members of one family may bleed profusely[46] while those of another family may bleed little;[47] what, however, is the reason in the case of marriage?[48] — R. Mordecai answered R. Ashi: Thus said Abimi from Hagronia in the name of R. Huna, ‘The source[49] is the cause'.[50] But R. Ashi stated: '[The woman's] ill luck is the cause'.[50] What practical difference is there between them?[51] — The difference between them is the case where the man only betrothed her and died,[52] or also when he fell off a palm-tree and died.[52]

SAID R. JOSEPH SON OF RABA to Raba: I enquired of R. Joseph whether the halachah is in agreement with Rabbi, and he replied in the affirmative. [I asked] whether the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, and he again replied in the affirmative. Was he thereby merely ridiculing me?' — The other replied: No; there are several anonymous statements [in the Mishnah] and he informed[53] you [that in the matter of] marriage and flogging [the anonymous Mishnah][54] agrees with Rabbi, and that in the matter of menstrual periods and the ox [whose owner has been] fore-warned[55] [the anonymous Mishnah] agrees with R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

As to marriage, there is the statement just discussed.[56] 'Flogging'? — As we learned: A man upon whom the penalty of flogging had been repeatedly inflicted is to be placed[57] under confinement[58] and fed on barley, until his stomach bursts .[59]

'The menstrual periods'? — As we learned: A woman may not

(21) סוסכינתא a painful or difficult discharge of the urine, occasioned by his suppression of his needs. Aruk reads, ססגוניתא 'uratic stone'. Cf. Jast.

(22) Eccl. VII, 12.

(23) Lit., 'second, yes'.

(24) Because, having remained barren after living with two husbands for a period of twenty years, her sterility is regarded as established.

(25) As a result of the operation.

(26) Rabbi's opinion was attributed to R. Simeon and vice versa.

(27) The latter version of a statement is regarded as the more reliable, since the author may have recognized his error and changed his view.

(28) This incident must have occurred in the latter days of R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, since it was witnessed by R. Johanan who already belonged to the first generation of Amoraim. As the ruling in this incident clearly shews, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel held at that time the view attributed to him in the first cited Baraitha which must consequently be regarded as representing the later, and the more reliable version.

(29) And, consequently, the second Baraitha might represent the later version!

(30) That R. Hiyya b. Abba's statement was not intended to testify that a presumption can only be established by the threefold repetition of an act.

(31) I.e., not only is presumption established when the act or incident is repeated three times in the case of one woman, but also when it is so repeated in the case of three sisters (women).

(32) Lit., ‘three times’,

(33) Lit., ‘what about it’.

(34) [Tell Ma'un, west of Tiberias, v, Klein, S. Beitrage, p. 60].

(35) Lit., ‘and the first circumcised’.

(36) To R. Isaac b. Joseph.

(37) [I.e., by reporting R. Johanan's ruling. Var. lec., ‘the Master permits a forbidden’ etc., referring probably to R. Johanan].

(38) As the third child was not permitted to be circumcised, the operation constituted manual labour which is forbidden on the Sabbath.

(39) The child might have died as a result of the operation as did the other two.

(40) Of R. Isaac in the name of R. Johanan, that a presumption can only be established when an incident has occurred three times.

(41) In the reports he made in the name of R. Johanan. Both Abin and R. Isaac the Red reported rulings in the name of R. Johanan.

(42) חזרה lit., ‘retraction’. חזרה may also signify repetition’, i.e., Abin is reliable ‘because he repeated and revised what he heard’ while R. Isaac the Red did not. [Hyman,Toledoth p.794 explains it as: ‘return’. Abin had proved reliable and hence entrusted by Babylonian scholars with traditional teachings for him to repeat on his ‘return’ to Palestine, which was not the case with R. Isaac].

(43) That of Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel.

(44) Lit., ‘to the first’.

(45) Nid. 64a.

(46) Lit., ‘the blood is loose’.

(47) Lit., the blood is held fast’.

(48) Why is marriage with certain women a danger?

(49) Some malignant disease in the womb.

(50) Of the death of successive husbands.

(51) R. Ashi and Abimi.

(52) Here the source cannot have been the cause and the deaths can only be attributed to ill luck. According to the former view, therefore, no presumption would thereby be constituted.

(53) Lit., ‘solved’, ‘made clear’.

(54) The halachah is always in agreement with the anonymous Mishnah.

(55) Mu'ad (מועד) v. Glos.

(56) Supra. Since our Mishnah permits the woman to marry a second husband but not a third, it must obviously represent the view of Rabbi.

(57) If he commits an offence for the third time.

(58) Lit., ‘they bring him into a vaulted chamber’.

(59) Sanh. 81b.

regard her menstrual periods as regular[1] unless the recurrence had been regular three times. Nor is she released from the restrictions of an established regular period unless it has varied three[2] times.[3]

‘And the ox [whose owner has been] forewarned’? — As we learned: An ox is not deemed a mu'ad unless [its owner] has been forewarned three times.[4] Our Rabbis taught: A woman who had been married to one husband and had no children and to a second husband and again had no children, may marry a third man only if he has children. If she married one who has had no children she must be divorced without receiving her kethubah.

The question was raised: Where she married a third husband and bore no children, may her first two husbands reclaim [the respective amounts of her kethubah]?[5] Can they plead, ‘It has now been proved that you were the cause’,[6] or can she retort, ‘It is only now that I have deteriorated’? — It stands to reason that she may plead, ‘It is only now that I have deteriorated’.

The question was raised: If she married a fourth husband and gave birth to children, may she claim her kethubah from her third husband? — We advise her: ‘Your silence is better than your speech’; for[7] he[8] could tell her, ‘I would not have divorced you in such circumstances’.[9] R. Papa demurred: Even if she keeps silence, should we remain silent? The divorce, surely,[10] is annulled,[11] and her children are bastards! In truth,[12] the fact is,[13] that it is assumed that she has now been restored to health.[14]

If the husband[15] pleads, ‘The fault is hers’[16] and the wife pleads, ‘The fault is his’,[17] R. Ammi ruled: In private matrimonial affairs[18] the wife is believed. And what is the reason? — She is in a position to know whether emission is forceful,[19] but he is not in a position to know it.

If the husband states that he intends taking another wife to test his potency.[20] R. Ammi ruled: ‘He must in this case also divorce [his present wife] and pay her the amount of her kethubah; for I maintain that whosoever takes in addition to his present wife another one must divorce the former and pay her the amount of her kethubah.’

Raba said: A man may marry wives in addition to his first wife; provided only that he possesses the means to maintain them.

(1) To be deemed levitically clean until that period actually arrives. A woman of irregular periods is regarded as unclean for twenty-four hours prior to the monthly date on which her previous discharge occurred (v. Nid. 2a). Should a woman, the regularity of whose periods had been established omit to examine her body when menstruation is due, and subsequently find a discharge, we assume her retrospectively to have become unclean at the beginning of her period, while a woman whose periods are irregular cannot, of course, be subject to such restriction.

(2) If the change of date occurred no more than twice the restrictions remain in force (v. supra n. 8 last clause).

(3) Nid. 63b.

(4) B.K. 23b.

(5) Which each of them paid her when their respective divorces had taken place.

(6) Of the absence of any issue.

(7) Should she persist in her claim.

(8) Her third husband.

(9) That she was not really barren. By advancing such a plea the husband might retrospectively annul the divorce altogether.

(10) If the third husband's plea is tenable.

(11) Since it was given under a misapprehension.

(12) The third husband's plea is really untenable. Once he has determined to divorce her, at a time when her sterility was a matter of doubt, he cannot again retract.

(13) The reason why she cannot claim her kethubah.

(14) But was incapable of conception at the time of her divorce; and this is the reason why she has no claim for her kethubah upon the third man.

(15) Refusing to pay his wife's kethubah.

(16) That their union had produced no issue. Lit., from her’.

(17) Lit., ‘from him’ (cf. supra n. 12).
(18) Lit., ‘things which are between him and her’.
(19) Lit., ‘shoots like an arrow’, which is an essential in fertilization. V. Hag. 15a.
(20) To beget children.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 65b

If the husband pleads[1] that his wife had miscarried within the ten years.[2] and she states, ‘I had no miscarriage’, ‘[3] R. Ammi ruled: She is believed in this case also; for if she had really miscarried she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of a barren woman.

A woman who miscarried, and then miscarried a second, and a third time,is confirmed as one subject to abortions.[4]

If he[5] said, ‘She miscarried two’[6] and she said, ‘three’?[7] — R. Isaac b. Eleazar stated: Such a case was dealt with at the college, and it was ruled that she was to be believed; for if she had not miscarried[8] she would not herself have sought to acquire the reputation of producing only miscarriages.

MISHNAH. A MAN IS COMMANDED CONCERNING THE DUTY OF PROPAGATION BUT NOT A WOMAN. R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER. SAID: CONCERNING BOTH OF THEM[9] IT IS SAID, AND GOD BLESSED THEM; AND GOD SAID UNTO THEM: ‘BE FRUITFUL, AND MULTIPLY.’[10] GEMARA. Whence is this[11] deduced? R. Ile'a replied in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: Scripture stated, And replenish the earth, and subdue it;[12] it is the nature of a man to subdue but it is not the nature of a woman to subdue. On the contrary! And subdue it[13] implies two![14] R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: It is written, And thou subdue it.[15]

R. Joseph said: Deduction[16] is made from the following. I am God Almighty, be thou fruitful and multiply,[17] and it is not stated, ‘Be ye fruitful and multiply’.[18]

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: As one is commanded to say that which will be obeyed,[19] so is one commanded not to say that which will not be obeyed.[20] R. Abba stated: It[20] is a duty; for it is said in Scripture, Reprove not a scorner, lest he hate thee; reprove a wise man and he will love thee.[21]

R. Ile'a further stated in the name of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon: One may modify a statement in the interests of peace; for it is said in Scripture, Thy father did command etc. so shall ye say unto Joseph: Forgive, I pray thee now, etc.[22] R. Nathan said: It[23] is a commandment; for it is stated in Scripture, And Samuel said: ‘How can I go? If Saul hear it, he will kill me’, etc.[24]

At the School of R. Ishmael it was taught: Great is the cause of peace. Seeing that for its sake even the Holy One, blessed be He, modified a statement; for at first it is written, My lord being old,[25] while afterwards it is written, And I am old.[26]

R. JOHANAN B. BEROKA, HOWEVER, SAID. It was stated: R. Johanan and R. Joshua b. Levi [are at variance]. One stated that the halachah is in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka, and the other stated that the halachah is not in agreement with R. Johanan b. Beroka. It may be proved that it was R. Johanan who stated that the halachah is not [in agreement etc.]. For R. Abbahu was once sitting [at the college] and reported in the name of R. Johanan that the halachah [was in agreement etc.], and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces.[27] Others say: R. Hiyya b. Abba made the report,[28] and R. Ammi and R. Assi turned away their faces. Said R. Papa: According to him who maintains that R. Abbahu made the statement[28] it is easy to understand that it was out of respect for the royal house that they[29] said nothing to him.[30] According to him, however, who maintains that R. Hiyya b. Abba made the statement,[28] they[29] should have told him that R. Johanan did not say so!

Now, what is the decision?[31] — Come and hear what R. Aha b. Hanina stated in the name of R. Abbahu in the name of R. Assi: Such a case[32] once came before R. Johanan at the Synagogue of Caesarea, and he decided that the' husband must divorce her and also pay her the amount of her kethubah. Now, if it be suggested that a woman is not subject to the commandment ,[33] how could she have any claim to a kethubah? — It is possible that this was a case where she submitted a special plea; as was the case with a certain woman who once came to R. Ammi and asked him to order the payment of her[34] kethubah. When he replied, 'Go away, the commandment[35] does not apply to you',[36] she exclaimed, 'What shall become of a woman like myself[37] in her old age!'[38] 'In such a case', the Master said, 'we certainly compel [the husband]'.[39]

A woman once came [with a similar plea][40] before R. Nahman. When he told her, 'The commandment[35] does not apply to you', she replied, 'Does not a woman like myself[37] require a staff in her hand and a hoe for digging her grave'![41] 'In such a case', the Master said, 'we certainly compel [the husband]' ,[39]

Judah and Hezekiah were twins. The features of the one were developed at the end of nine months, and those of the other were developed at the beginning of the seventh month .[42] Judith,[43] the wife of R. Hiyya, having suffered in consequence agonizing pains of childbirth, changed her clothes [on recovery] and appeared[44] before R. Hiyya. 'Is a woman', she asked, 'commanded to propagate the race'? — 'No', he replied. And relying on this decision,[45] she drank a sterilizing potion. When her action finally became known, he exclaimed, 'Would that you bore unto me only one more issue of the womb!'[46] For a Master stated: Judah and Hezekiah were twin brothers and Pazi and Tawi

(1) When, having lived with his wife for ten years without begetting any issue, he is ordered to divorce her and to pay her the amount of her kethubah. V. supra.

(2) And, consequently, he claims the right to continue to live with her until a period of ten years has passed from the date of the miscarriage (v. our Mishnah).

(3) I.e., she was always sterile.

(4) And, consequently, she must be divorced; but is entitled to her kethubah.

(5) Refusing to pay her kethubah.

(6) And, consequently, her proneness to miscarry is not established.

twin sisters.[1]

But does not the commandment apply to women? Surely, R. Aha b. R. Kattina related in the name of R. Isaac: It once happened in the case of a woman who was half slave and half free, that her master was compelled to emancipate her![2] R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: People were taking liberties with her.[3]

CHAPTER VII

MISHNAH. IF A WIDOW [WHO MARRIED] A HIGH PRIEST,[4] OR IF A DIVORCED WOMAN OR A HALUZAH [WHO MARRIED] A COMMON PRIEST BROUGHT IN TO HER HUSBAND MELOG[5] SLAVES AND ZON BARZEL[5] SLAVES. THE MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH BUT THE ZON BARZEL SLAVES MAY EAT OF IT.[6]

THE FOLLOWING ARE MELOG SLAVES: THOSE WHO, IF THEY DIE, ARE THE WIFE'S[7] LOSS AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE HER PROFIT. THOUGH IT IS THE HUSBAND'S DUTY TO MAINTAIN THEM, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.[6]

THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES: IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF

THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES, ARE A PROFIT TO HIM. SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM,[8] THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES, OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.[6] IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, HOWEVER, WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BROUGHT HIM IN SLAVES, THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH WHETHER THEY ARE MELOG SLAVES OR ZON BARZEL SLAVES.[6]

GEMARA. And MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH! What is the reason? Let them rather be regarded as a possession that was acquired by one in his possession [who is permitted to eat terumah]. for it was taught: Whence is it deduced that the wife whom a priest married or the slaves which he purchased may eat terumah.? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul the purchase of his money, he may eat of it.[9] And whence is it deduced that if a woman[10] purchased slaves[11] or if a priest's slaves purchased[12] other slaves, these may eat terumah? It is said, But if a priest buy any soul, the purchase of his money, he may eat of it;[9] a possession which his possession has acquired may eat![13] — Whosoever may himself eat may confer the right of eating upon others but whosoever may not himself eat may not confer the right of eating upon others.[14] May he not, indeed?[15] There is, surely, the case of[16] an uncircumcised man and that of all levitically unclean persons who may not themselves eat terumah and yet confer the right of eating it upon others![17] — In those cases[18] they are merely suffering pain in their mouths.[19] But there is, surely, the case of[16] the bastard[20] Who may not eat terumah himself[21] and yet may confer the right of eating it upon others![22] — Rabina replied. He speaks of an acquisition[23] that is permitted to eat: Any acquisition that may eat may confer the right of eating upon others, and any acquisition that may not eat may not confer the right upon others.

Raba, however, stated[24] that pentateuchally they[23] may in fact eat terumah; but it is the Rabbis who instituted the prohibition in order that the woman might complain, ‘I am not allowed to eat; my slaves are not allowed to eat; I am only his mistress!’, in consequence of which he would be likely to divorce her. R. Ashi stated:[24] The prohibition is a preventive measure against the possibility of her feeding them[25] with terumah after the death [of her husband].[26] Now, then,[27] a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest should also be forbidden to feed [her melog slaves with terumah] as a preventive measure against her feeding them after [her husband's] death![28] — But, said R. Ashi, [our Mishnah refers to] a priestly widow[29] who[30] might draw the following conclusion:[31] ‘At first[32] they[33] ate terumah at my paternal home;[34] and when I married this man[35] they[33] ate[36] of the terumah of my husband; they[33] should now,[37] therefore, revert to their former condition’,[38] and she would not know that at first[39] she had not made of herself a profaned woman[40] while now[41] she has made herself a profaned woman.[40] This explanation is quite satisfactory in the case of a priestly widow;[42] what explanations however, is there in the case of a widow who is the daughter of an Israelite?[43]

The Rabbis made no distinction between one widow and another.[44]

It was stated: If a wife: who brought to her husband[45] appraised goods,[46] demands,[47] ‘I will accept only my own goods’,[48] and he replies ‘I am only paying their value’[49] — in whose favour is judgment to be given? Rab Judah said:

---

(1) The two pairs of twins were children of R. Hiyya from Judith.

(2) So that she might be permitted to marry a free man, As a half slave she was not allowed to contract such a marriage. Now, since her master was compelled to give her the opportunity of marrying, it is obvious that the commandment of propagation applies to women also!

(3) And marriage was her only protection; and this was the reason why her master was compelled to emancipate her.
(4) Contracting thereby a forbidden union.
(5) V. infra and Glos.
(6) The reason is given in the Gemara.
(7) Lit., ‘died for her’.
(8) He or his heirs must restore them to his wife in a healthy condition should he divorce her or die.
(9) Lev. XXII, 11.
(10) The daughter of an Israelite, who married a priest.
(11) Out of her melog property the principal of which is hers.
(12) With a sum of money that was given to them as their absolute property. on the condition that their master was to have no claim whatsoever upon it.
(13) The expression, ‘the purchase of his money is superfluous’ and the text is, therefore, expounded thus: If the purchase of his money, i.e., a priest's wife or slave (who is the priest's acquisition) buy any soul, he (i.e., the one purchased) ‘may eat of it’. Why then are not melog slaves, being an acquisition of the priest's wife, permitted to eat terumah?
(14) The priest's wife in this case is not herself permitted to eat terumah, since her union with this priest is a forbidden one. V. Lev. XXI, 7,13 and supra p. 441, n. 1.
(15) Lit., ‘and not’?
(16) Lit., ‘and behold’.
(17) Their slaves, e.g., are permitted to eat terumah. Cf. infra 70a.
(18) Lit., ‘there’.
(19) I.e., their disability is restricted to their mouth alone. They are only temporarily forbidden to eat the terumah. At the moment their unclean period is over or circumcision is performed their rights are fully restored. In the case of the priest's wife in our Mishnah, however, the disability is permanent, since by her forbidden marriage she remains for ever a profaned woman.
(20) I.e., mamzer, (v. Glos.) the issue of a union between a slave or idolater and a woman who was the issue of a marriage between a priest and the daughter of an Israelite.
(21) Since he is neither priest nor even a legitimate Israelite.
(22) His grandmother, the wife of the priest, may continue to eat terumah even after the death of her husband so long as the bastard (being a descendant of her husband through their daughter) is alive. As the widow of a priest she would have lost the privilege of eating terumah on her husband's death had there been no surviving descendants. V. infra 69b.
(23) Not of a descendant.
(24) In explaining the reason why MELOG SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.
(25) The melog slaves.
(26) Believing that, as she was allowed to feed them with terumah during the lifetime of her husband though they were her property, she may continue to do so even after his death. In the case of zon barzel slaves, however, no such error need be feared since the slaves are not hers, but his absolute property until the moment when it is surrendered to her by her husband or heir, v. infra.
(27) If such an error as suggested is to be feared.
(28) But our Mishnah distinctly states that her melog slaves also may eat terumah!
(29) The daughter of a priest who, as a widow, married a High Priest, and thus became profaned through their forbidden marriage.
(30) If her melog slaves were permitted to eat terumah while she lived with the High Priest.
(31) After the High Priest's death.
(32) During her first widowhood.
(33) The melog slaves.
(34) As a widow she then returned to her father's priestly house and was again entitled to eat terumah herself and to feed her slaves with it.
(35) The High Priest.
(36) Cf. supra n. 8.
(37) When the High Priest died, though she remained a profaned widow who is, in fact, forbidden to eat terumah.
(38) To be allowed again. as before, to eat terumah.

(39) During her first widowhood.
(40) Halachah (v. Glos.) through ber forbidden marriage.
(41) Having married a High Priest to whom a widow is forbidden.
(42) V. supra p. 443, n. 7.
(43) The error mentioned cannot occur in her case; but as our Mishnah draws no distinction between the two, the question remains: Why should not her melog slaves be permitted to eat terumah?
(44) Lit., 'in her widowhood'. Were the feeding permitted in the case of the one, the other might erroneously be presumed to come under the same law.
(45) As zon barzel property (v. Glos.).
(46) Shum (v. Glos.). V. Ket. Sonc. ed. p 401. n. 11. In consideration of which he guarantees her a specified sum in her kethubah, which is recoverable by her at his death, or earlier if she is divorced.
(47) When she claims her kethubah. v. supra n. 9.
(48) I.e., the actual objects she had brought to her husband.
(49) In accordance with the appraisement in the kethubah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 66b

Judgment is to be given in her favour;[1] and R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour. 'Rab Judah said: Judgment is to be given in her favour because [they represent] assets of her paternal property [which] belong to her. R. Ammi said: Judgment is to be given in his favour' for, as the Master said, [THE FOLLOWING ARE ZON BARZEL SLAVES:] IF THEY DIE, THEY ARE THE LOSS OF THE HUSBAND AND, IF THEIR VALUE INCREASES- ARE A PROFIT TO HIM; [AND] SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH [they are therefore obviously regarded as his own].[2] R. Safra said: Was it stated, 'and they belong to him? The statements surely. only reads, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM! In fact, then, they may not belong to him at all. But [is it a fact that] those for whom he[3] is responsible invariably eat terumah? Surely we learned: An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest may feed her on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, though it is his duty to supply her with food,[4] must not feed her on vetches of terumah![5] — How could you understand it thus! Granted that he is liable for theft or loss,is he also liable for accidents, emaciation or reduction In value![6] [The case[7] in our Mishnah], surely, can only be compared to that in the final clause:[8] An Israelite who hired a cow from a priest, guaranteeing him its appraised value,[9] may not feed it on vetches of terumah. A priest, however, who hired a cow from an Israelite, guaranteeing him its appraised value,[9] may feed it on vetches of terumah.[10]

Rabbah and R. Joseph were sitting at their studies at the conclusion of R. Nahman's school session, and in the course of their sitting they made the following statement: [A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah; and [another Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi. ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Ammi': Zon barzel slaves procure their freedom when the man,[11] but not when the woman [struck out] a tooth or an eye.[12] ['A Baraitha] was taught in agreement with Rab Judah': If a wife brought in to her husband appraised goods,[13] the husband may not sell them even if it is his desire to do so.[14] Furthermore, even if he brought in to her appraised goods of his own,[15] he may not sell them even if he desired to do so. If either[16] of them sold [any of the appraised goods] for their maintenance. Such an incident was once dealt with by R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, who ruled that the husband[17] may seize them from the buyers.[18]

Raba[19] stated in the name of R. Nahman: The law is in agreement with Rab Judah. Said Raba to R. Nahman: But surely [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi! Although [a Baraitha] was taught in agreement with R. Ammi, Rab Judah's view is more logical, since any asset of a woman's paternal property [should rightly belong to her].

A woman once brought[20] in to her husband a robe of fine wool [which was appraised and included] in her kethubah. When the man died it was taken by the orphans and spread over the corpse. Raba ruled that the corpse had acquired it.[21]

Said Nanai son of R. Joseph son of Raba to R. Kahana: But, surely, Raba[22] stated in the name of R. Nahman that the law is in agreement with Rab Judah![23] The other replied: Does not Rab Judah admit that the robe had still to be collected [by the wife]?[24] Since it had still to be collected it remained in the husband's possession.[25] [In this ruling] Raba acted in accordance with his view [elsewhere expressed]. For Raba stated:[26] Consecration,[26] leavened food[26] , and

(3) A priest.

(4) And though he is also responsible for the loss, or theft of the animal.

(5) ‘A.Z. 15a; which shews that even an animal for which a priest is responsible (v. supra n. 2) is not permitted to eat terumah. How, then, could it be said, SINCE HE IS RESPONSIBLE FOR THEM THEY ARE PERMITTED TO EAT?

(6) Certainly not. Such a restricted responsibility, therefore, is incomplete and does not confer the right to terumah.

(7) Of zon barzel.

(8) Of the Baraitha cited.

(9) Lit., ‘if an Israelite appraised a cow from’. I.e., he undertook to make good to the owner any loss in the value of the animal between the date of hire and the date of the return.

(10) The animal being regarded as the priest's own property, in respect of its feeding on terumah, owing to his responsibility for the return of its full value. Thus it follows that, though an animal would be returned in body, should its value on the day of its return be equal to that of its appraised value, it is nevertheless, owing to the priest's complete responsibility, deemed to be the priest's property so long as it remains in his possession; so also in the case of zon barzel slaves: though they would ultimately be returned to the woman in body, they are regarded, in respect of terumah, as the property of the priest, who accepted full responsibility for them, so long as they remain with him.

(11) The husband, who is regarded, in agreement with R. Ammi, as the owner of the slaves.

(12) Cf. Ex. XXI, 26.

(13) Which the husband includes in her kethubah, and undertakes to return to her at their appraised value should he divorce her or die.

(14) It is his duty to keep them intact so that the objects themselves, not merely their value, may be returned to the woman in due course.

(15) Included them in the amount of her kethubah.

(16) Lit., ‘both’. V. Rashi a.l.

(17) I.e., even he.

(18) If the woman died; the sale being deemed invalid. That the woman, when her husband dies or divorces her, may seize such property, in the event of a sale by him, is obvious.

(23) That zon barzel property, such as the robe was, belongs to the wife’!

(24) Of course he does. The robe does not come into the actual possession of the woman until her claim is proved and the robe surrendered to her by the husband or his heirs.

(25) The orphans were, therefore, entitled to use it as part of the dead man's shroud. The woman's claim upon it is undoubtedly valid, but has not any greater force than that of the holder of a mortgage. V. infra note 3.

manumission cancel a mortgage.[1]

Rab Judah stated: If a wife brought to her husband[2] two articles worth a thousand zuz, and their value increased to two thousand, she receives one[3] in settlement of her kethubah;[4] and for the other[5] she pays its price and receives it, since it represents assets of her paternal property.[6]

What are we taught by this[7] statement! That assets of her paternal property belong to her? This, surely, has already been stated by Rab Judah![8] — It might have been assumed that that statement[8] applied only where she came to claim [paternal property] as part of her kethubah, but not where she desired to take it in return for payment of its value, hence we were taught [that she may also pay its price and receive it].

MISHNAH. IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER PREGNANT, HER SLAVES MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH[9] IN VIRTUE OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO,[10] SINCE AN EMBRYO MAY DEPRIVE[11] [ITS MOTHER][12] OF THE PRIVILEGE [OF EATING TERUMAH][13] BUT HAS NO POWER TO BESTOW IT UPON HER;[14] SO R. JOSE. THEY[15] SAID TO HIM: SINCE YOU HAVE TESTIFIED TO US IN RESPECT OF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST,[16] THE SLAVES OF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, WHO A MARRIED TO A PRIEST WHO DIED AND LEFT HER WITH CHILD, SHOULD ALSO BE FORBIDDEN TO EAT TERUMAH ON ACCOUNT OF THE SHARE OF THE EMBRYO![17]

GEMARA. A question was raised: Is R. Jose's reason[18] because he is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman[19] is regarded as a nonpriest,[20] or is his reason because only the born may bestow the right of eating but the unborn may not? — In what respect could this difference matter?[21] — In respect of an embryo in the womb of a priest's daughter.[22] Now, what is the reason? Rabbah replied: R. Jose's reason is this. He is of the opinion that an embryo in the womb of a lay woman[19] is regarded as a non-priest.[20] R. Joseph replied: The born may bestow the privilege of eating while the unborn may not.

An objection was raised: They said to R. Jose: Since you have testified to us in respect of the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest, what is the law in respect of the daughter of a priest who was married to a priest? ‘The first’,[23] he replied, ‘I heard;[24] but the other[25] I have not heard’.[26] Now, if you agree [that R. Jose's reason is because] an embryo in the womb of a lay woman[27] is regarded as a non-priest,[28] it was correct for him to say, ‘The first I heard, but the other I did not’. If you maintain, however, [that R. Jose's reason is because] the born may bestow the right of eating and the unborn may not, what [could he have meant by] ‘The first I have heard but the other I have not heard’, when the principle is the same! — This is indeed a difficulty.

Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This[29] is the opinion of R. Jose; but the Sages said: If he[30] has children,[31] they[32] may eat [terumah] by virtue of his children;[33] if he has no children, they[32] may eat by virtue of his[34] brothers, and if he has no brothers they[32] may eat by virtue of the entire family.[35] ‘This’,[36] would imply that he[37] himself does not share the view;[38] but, surely, Samuel said to R. Hana of Bagdad, ‘Go bring me a group of ten men that I may tell you in their presence[39] that if title is conferred upon an embryo [through the agency of a third party], it does acquire ownership’![40] The fact is that ‘this’ here denotes that he[41] also holds the same opinion. What, then, does he[41] teach us?[42] That the Rabbis disagree with R. Jose! But do they, in fact, disagree? Surely R. Zakkai stated:[43] This evidence[44] was submitted by R. Jose in the name of Shemaiah and Abtalion and they[45] agreed with him! — R. Ashi replied: Does it read, ‘and they accepted’? It was only said, ‘and they agreed’, [which may only mean] that his view is logical.[46]

Our Rabbis taught: If he[47] left children,[48] both these and the others[49] may eat terumah.[50] If he[51] left his widow with child,[52] neither these nor the others[49] may eat it.[53] If he left children and also left his widow with child, the melog slaves may eat as she may eat;[54] but the zon barzel slaves may not eat, on account of the share of the embryo which may deprive [its mother][55] of the privilege [of eating terumah] but has no power to bestow it;[56] so R. Jose. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.[57] R. Simeon b. Yohai said: [If the children[58] are] males, all [the slaves] may eat.[59] [If however they are] females, [the slaves] are not permitted to eat, since it is possible that the embryo might be a male;[60] and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all.[61] What need was there to point[62] to the possibility that the embryo might be a male when this[63] might be equally deduced [from the fact] that [even when the embryo is] a female it deprives them of the privilege![64] — He meant to say: There is one reason and also an additional one. ‘There is the one reason’ that a female embryo also deprives [the slaves] of the privilege; and, furthermore,[65] ‘it is possible that the embryo might be a male and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’.

‘[If the children are] males, [the slaves] may eat’. But, surely, there is an embryo in existence![66] — He is of the opinion

(51) The deceased priest.
(52) And he is not survived by any other children.
(53) Since the embryo cannot bestow the privilege (cf. supra n. 4) either upon his mother or upon the slaves.

For, in the first instance, it is likely that the embryo will be a female and thus have no share at all in the slaves. And secondly, were it to be a male, it might yet be a miscarriage, which again would have no share in the slaves (v. infra).
(60) Who, when born, will become the owner of the slaves.
(61) The slaves, therefore, would be the property of the embryo which cannot bestow upon them the right of eating terumah.
(62) As a reason why the slaves are forbidden to eat terumah in the latter case.
(63) The prohibition upon the slaves.
(64) Since the female embryo, when born, would be entitled to a share among the other daughters and now, therefore, as an embryo, deprives the slaves of the privilege.
(65) Which is the other reason.
(66) And it, owing to its share in them, should deprive the slaves of the privilege.

that no provision need be made against the less usual cases.[1] Or if you prefer I might say that he[2] is of the opinion that provision in fact must be made against the less usual cases also, [but here] a special arrangement might be made[3] in accordance with a ruling of R. Nahman in the name of Samuel. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Samuel: Where orphans[4] wish to divide the property of their [deceased] father, Beth din appoint a guardian for [every one of] them, and [each guardian] chooses for his ward a suitable portion. As soon, however, as they reach their majority they are entitled to enter a protest.[5] In his own name, however, R. Nahman stated: Even when they reach majority they are not entitled to protest, for otherwise what validity is there in the authority of a Beth din![6]

Must it be assumed that R. Nahman's ruling is a matter of dispute between Tannaim![7] — No; all accept R. Nahman's [arrange. ment],[8] but the dispute here[9] centres on the question whether[10] provision was to be made against the less usual cases.[11]

‘R. Ishmael], son of R. Jose, stated in the name of his father: A daughter may bestow the right of eating; a son may not.[12] Wherein lies the difference [between the son and the daughter]? If a son may not bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo, a daughter also should not be entitled to bestow the right of eating on account of the share of the embryo! — Abaye replied: Here[13] we are dealing with a small estate[14] and in a case where there is a son[15] as well as a daughter, [so that the slaves may eat the terumah] whatever be the assumption [as to the sex of the embryo]. If the embryo is a son then he is not better than the one who is already born.[16] And if it is a daughter, then why does a daughter eat at all?[17] Surely by virtue of an ordinance of the Rabbis.[18] But so long as she has not seen the light[19] no provision for her has been made by the Rabbis.[20] If you take it[21] to refer[22] to a small estate, [how will you] explain the final clause,[23] ‘since it is possible that the embryo might be a male, and daughters, where there is a son, have no share at all’? On the contrary; a small estate belongs to the daughters! — The final clause refers to a large estate. But does a small estate belong to the daughters? Surely, R. Assi stated in the name of R. Johanan: Where male orphans forestalled [the ruling of Beth din] and sold a small estate, their sale is valid![24] — But the fact is that by the mention of daughter ‘the mother’ is to be understood.[25] If so, this is exactly the same statement as that of R. Jose! — The entire statement was made by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose.

MISHNAH. AN EMBRYO,[26] A LEVIR,[27] BETROTHAL,[28] A DEAF-MUTE,[29] AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD,[30] DEPRIVE [A WOMAN][31] OF THE RIGHT [OF EATING TERUMAH], BUT CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER,[32] [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD OR NOT,[33] OR WHETHER HE[34] HAS PRODUCED TWO HAIRS[35] OR NOT.

IF A HOUSE COLLAPSED UPON A MAN AND UPON HIS BROTHER'S DAUGHTER,[36] AND IT IS NOT KNOWN WHICH OF THEM DIED FIRST, HER RIVAL MUST PERFORM HALIZAH[37] BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[38]

GEMARA. AN EMBRYO, for if [its mother] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to an Israelite [the embryo] deprives her of the privilege,[39] [for it is written]. As in her youth,[40] which excludes one who is with child.[41] And if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest, the embryo does not bestow the privilege[39] upon her, because the living child does bestow the privileged but not the unborn.[42]

A LEVIR, for if [his yebamah] is the daughter of a priest who was married to an Israelite, [the Ievir] deprives her of the privileged [for it is written], And is returned unto her father's house,[40] which excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir;[43] and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to a priest [the levir] does not bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money.[44] while she is the purchase of his brother. BETROTHAL, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was betrothed] to an Israelite, [betrothal] deprives her of the privilege,

(1) Lit., ‘a minority’. I.e., against the possibility that the embryo might be born a viable male. Against the possibility of male births there is the equal possibility of female births, and by adding the minority of miscarrying women to the half of female births, the male births are found to form only a minority.

(2) R. Simeon.

(3) The embryo is allotted as his share a portion of the estate exclusive of the slaves, who consequently form a portion of the shares of the living brothers, who, as their owners, bestow upon the slaves the right of eating terumah. Where, however, there are only daughters, such an arrangement cannot be made, since in such a case the embryo, in case he is born a viable male, is the sole heir and owner.

(4) Who are minors.

(5) Against the original division, and to demand a new one. The validity of acceptance of the shares by the guardians extends only to the produce or yield of the estate up to the date of the protest.

(6) V. Kid. Sonc. ed., p. 210, notes.

(7) That R. Simeon, who permits the slaves to eat, in the case of sons, by adopting the arrangement mentioned, is of the same opinion as R. Nahman; while R. Jose, who forbids terumah to the slaves, maintaining as he evidently does that the arrangement is of no avail and that the division must be postponed until the heirs reach majority, is in disagreement with R. Nahman.

(8) Wherever such had been made,

(9) Between R. Jose and R. Simeon, supra 6a.

(10) Where R. Nahman's arrangement had not been made,

(11) R. Simeon permits the slaves to eat terumah, because he holds that no provision has to be made against the less usual cases (v. supra p. 451, n. 3) while R. Jose forbids them to eat it, because he maintains that provision must be made even against the less usual case.

(12) This is now assumed to mean that where there is a daughter but no son, she bestows the right of eating terumah upon the slaves, but where there is a son, the slaves are not permitted to eat the terumah.

(13) R. Ishmael's statement.

(14) Which, by an ordinance of the Rabbis, must be handed over to the daughters for their maintenance while the sons receive nothing. v. B.B, 139b.

(15) To whom the estate belongs in accordance with the Pentateuchal law.

(16) Lit., ‘exists’, ‘stands’. Since the Rabbis deprived the living son of his share and gave it to the daughters. they have, even more so, deprived the embryo of its share.

(17) From her father's estate, though he is also survived by sons’

(18) Pentateuchally she has no claim at all in the presence of a son.

(19) Lit., ‘came out into the air of the world’.

(20) The embryo, consequently, cannot possibly have a share in the slaves, who may. therefore, eat terumah by virtue of the rights of the living children. Had there been a daughter only and no son, the slaves would not have been permitted to eat terumah on account of the embryo, which, were it a female, would have had in the slaves an equal share with their sister.

(21) R. Ishmael's statement.

(22) Lit., ‘in what did you place it’.

(23) Which presumably deals with a similar case.

(24) Keth. 103a, Sotah 21b, B.B. 140a. Which proves that the estate, even when small, belongs to the sons also. How then could the slaves be permitted to eat terumah?

(25) I.e., the mother of the embryo may feed her melog slaves with terumah as she herself is permitted to eat it by virtue of her living sons. A son, however, may not feed the zon barzel slaves with terumah owing to the share of the embryo.

(26) Whose mother was (a) the daughter of a priest married to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite married to a priest, and whose father died before he (the embryo) was born.

(27) The widow of whose deceased brother was (a) the daughter of a priest (he and his brother being Israelites), or (b) the daughter of an Israelite (he and his brother being priests).

(28) Of (a) the daughter of a priest to an Israelite, or (b) the daughter of an Israelite to a priest.

(29) Who is (a) an Israelite married to the daughter of a priest, or (b) a priest married to the daughter of an Israelite.

(30) This is explained in the Gemara, infra.

(31) If she is (a) the daughter of a priest (cf. last four notes).

(32) If she is (b) the daughter of an Israelite (cf. supra notes 6-9).
(33) This has no reference to what follows and is explained in the Gemara.
(34) Who betrothed the woman.
(35) Which are the marks of puberty, when he becomes legally entitled to contract a marriage.
(36) To whom he had been married and who, like himself, died childless.
(37) With the daughter's father, the brother of the deceased. Though the dead woman was his forbidden relative, her rival becomes subject to the halizah because it is possible that the woman had been killed before the man, and when the man died her former rival was no longer related to her. V. infra note 6.
(38) Because it is also possible that the man was killed first and that the rival consequently remained forbidden to the levir as the rival of his daughter.
(39) Of eating terumah.
(40) Lev. XXII, 13.
(41) Only when she returned unto her father's house as in her youth (v. ibid.), i.e., if, like a virgin, she has no child at all, not even an embryo, may she eat of her father's bread (ibid.) i.e., terumah.
(42) This is deduced from Such as are born in his house etc. (Lev. XXII, 11) by taking the Kal יאכל in the sense of Hif. יאכיל V Torath Kohanim, a.l., (v. Rashi).
(43) Being dependent on the levir's will she cannot without his release, return to her father's house.
(44) Lev. XXII, 11 emphasis on ‘his.’

since he acquires her by the betrothal;[1] and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was betrothed] to a priest, the betrothal cannot bestow the privilege upon her, owing to the ruling of ‘Ulla.[2]

A DEAF-MUTE, for if [the woman] is the daughter of a priest [who was married] to [him[3] who is] an Israelite, he deprives her of the privilege, since he[4] acquired her by virtue of a Rabbinical enactment;[5] and if she is the daughter of an Israelite [who was married] to [him[3] who is] a priest, he cannot bestow the privilege upon her, because the All Merciful said, The purchase of his money,[6] while he[3] is not eligible to execute any kinyan.

AND A BOY WHO IS NINE YEARS etc. This was assumed[7] to refer to the case of a yebamah who was awaiting the decision of a levir who was nine years and one day old.[8] Now, in what respect?[9] If in respect of depriving her[10] of the privilege,[11] a younger child would also equally deprive her of the privilege! And if in respect of bestowing the privilege,[12] a grownup levir also cannot bestow this privilege![13] — Abaye replied: We are dealing here with a levir of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabited with his yebamah[14] who, according to Pentateuchal law, becomes his kinyan. Since it might have been assumed that, as Pentateuchally she becomes his kinyan, and his cohabitation also is legal, he should be entitled to bestow the privilege upon her, hence we were taught that the cohabitation of a boy who is nine years and one day old has been given the same validity only as that of a ma'amar by an adult.[15] Said Raba to him: If so,[16] [why] is it stated in the final clause, [EVEN WHEN] IT IS A MATTER OF DOUBT WHETHER THE BOY IS NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD, OR NOT? If a boy who is certainly of the age of nine cannot bestow the privilege, is there any need to speak of a boy whose age is in doubt! — No, said Raba, [the Mishnah] deals with a boy of the age of nine years and one day belonging to one of the classes of disqualified persons who, by their cohabitation, deprive a woman[17] of the privilege of eating terumah;[18] as it was taught: An Ammonite,[19] a Moabite,[19] an Egyptian,[20] or an Idumean[20] proselyte, a Cuthean[21] , a nathin,[21] a halal[21] or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priests of a Levite or of an Israelite, disqualifies her.[22] But since it is stated in the final clause,[23] ‘If they are not fit to enter the assembly of Israel they render [a woman] unfit’,it may be inferred that the first clause does not deal with such disqualified persons! — The first clause speaks of those who are disqualified to enter the assembly, while the latter clause speaks of those who are disqualified to marry the daughter of a priest.[24]

[To turn to] the main text:[25] An Ammonite,[26] a Moabite,[26] an Egyptian or an Idumean[27] proselyte, a Cuthean,[28] a nathin,[28] a halal[28] or a bastard, of the age of nine years and one day, who cohabits with the daughter of a priest, of a Levite or of an Israelite disqualifies her.[29] R. Jose said: Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification;[30] he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification.[30] R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter you may marry his widow,[30] and whenever you may not marry his daughter you may not marry his widow.[31]

Whence are these rulings[32] deduced? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: Scripture stated, And if a priest's daughter be married unto to a strange man,[33] as soon as she has had connubial relations with a disqualified person[34] the latter disqualified her. But the text cited is surely required [for another] purpose, viz., that the All Merciful ordained that the daughter of a priest who was married to a layman[35] may not eat terumah! — That[36] may be deduced from the text, And is returned unto her father's house, as in her youth, she may eat of her father's bread.[37] Since the All Merciful ordained, And is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat,[37] it follows that prior to that[38] she was not permitted to eat. But if [deduction were to be made] from that text,[37] [it may be objected] one might have assumed that as a negative precept[39] which is derived from a positive one[40] it has only the force of a positive precept,[41] hence did the All Merciful write the other text[42] to [indicate that it is] a negative precept! — [That it is] a negative precept may be deduced from, There shall no strange man[43] eat[44] of the holy things.[45]

(1) And being, therefore, deemed to be his legal wife she is forbidden to eat terumah. V. Lev. XXII, 12.

(2) Though Pentateuchally a woman who is betrothed to a priest is entitled to the privilege of eating terumah, she has been forbidden to eat it during the period of betrothal, when she is still in her father's house, as a preventive measure against the possibility of her treating to it a brother or a sister of hers. (12) When he is a priest and she is the daughter of an Israelite; the purpose being to indicate that, though he is capable of cohabitation, his levirate bond is not powerful enough to bestow upon his yebamah the privilege of eating terumah.

(13) As was explicitly stated earlier in out Mishnah.

(14) An act which in the case of a levir who is of age is valid.

(15) Which does not constitute complete kinyan (cf. supra 50a). The boy of the age of nine years and one day CANNOT consequently BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE any more than the others enumerated in our Mishnah. The ruling as to ‘depriving a woman of the privilege’ applies only to the cases of the EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND THE DEAF-MUTE but not to that of the boy of the age mentioned.

(16) That the boy of the age of nine years and one day was included only because of the ruling that he CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE, and that the ruling of ‘depriving a woman of the privilege’ does not apply to him, cf. supra n. 2.

(17) If she is the daughter of a priest.

(18) The boy of the age of nine years and one day accordingly deprives a woman of the privilege; and it is because of this ruling that the case of the boy was included in our Mishnah. The second ruling that certain persons CANNOT BESTOW THE PRIVILEGE is not, of course, necessary in his case and applies only to the others enumerated, vi., THE EMBRYO, THE LEVIR, BETROTHAL AND A DEAF-MUTE.

(24) As e.g., a halal who is permitted to enter the assembly (i.e., to marry the daughter of an Israelite), but is forbidden to marry the daughter of a priest. (Cf. supra 37a). Though the expression 'not fit to enter the assembly of Israel' was used in the final clause also, it only implies marriage with the daughter of a priest, since otherwise this part of the Mishnah would have been a mere repetition of the first and, consequently, superfluous.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 68b

But that text is required for its own purpose![1] The expression, 'There shall no strange man', is written twice.[2] But still is not this[3] required for the exposition of R. Jose b. Hanina? For R. Jose b. Hanina stated: There shall no strange man[3] implies, 'I have imposed upon you a prohibition concerning non-priests only but not concerning onan'![4] — R. Jose b. Hanina's exposition may be deduced from the Scriptural use of the longer expression 'And there shall no strange man' instead of 'strange man'.[5]

But still is not this,[6] required for the following which was taught:[7] When she[8] returns,[9] she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and shoulder.[10] And[11] R. Hisda stated in the name of Rabina b. R. Shila, 'What Scriptural text proves this? It is written, but if a priest's daughter be married unto a strange man, she shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things,[12] she must not eat of that which is set apart[13] from the holy things'![14] — If so,[15] Scripture should have written. She shall not eat of the holy things'. why [then the longer expression], of the terumah of the holy things? Two deductions[16] may, consequently be made.

We have now deduced[17] [the law relating to] a priest's daughter;[18] whence, however, is this deduced in respect of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] ‘But a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].[19] so here also [deduction is made from the use of] ‘and a daughter’ [where only] ‘daughter’ [could have been used].[20] In accordance with whose view?[21] Is it Only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin![22] — It[23] may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire Scriptural expression, And a daughter[24] is superfluous.[25] [Thus the disqualification] in respect of terumah has been proved;[26] whence, [however, is it deduced that the disqualification extends also] to the prohibition of marrying a priest?[27] — Has not the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite been included[28] in respect of priestly marriage only? For, as regards terumah, neither of them is ever eligible to eat it.[29]

Are they never eligible?[30] Such eligibility surely occurs when [a mother][31] eats terumah[32] by virtue of the rights of her son![33] — [The case of a mother, who eats terumah] by virtue of the rights of her son, may be deduced by inference a minori ad majus: If the daughter of a priest who eats the terumah by virtue of her own sanctity becomes disqualified[34] how much more so the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite who eats it only by virtue of the rights of her son.[35] [On the contrary], this [very point][36] provides the reason:[37] A priest's daughter whose body is sacred is rightly disqualified,[34] this woman, however, whose own body is not sacred might not become disqualified![38] — The fact is rather, that the prohibition[39] to marry a priest may be deduced a minori ad majus from a divorced woman: If a divorced woman who is permitted to eat terumah is nevertheless forbidden to marry a priest, how much more reason is there that such a woman[40] who is forbidden to eat terumah should be disqualified from marrying a priest.[35]

May a prohibition, however, be deduced by logical argument![41]

This[42] is a mere elucidation [of the law].[43]

Might it not be suggested [that the statement,] ‘she had connubial relations with a disqualified person’[44] [refers to persons cohabitation with whom is] subject to the penalty of kareth![45] — The All Merciful said, If. . . be married,[46] only those with whom marriage is valid;[47] with those who are subject to the penalty of kareth marriage is not valid.[48] If so,[49] no idolater or slave should cause disqualification![50] — These cause disqualification in accordance with a ruling of R. Ishmael. For R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Ishmael: Whence is it deduced that if an idolater or a slave cohabits with the daughter of an Israelite, of a priest or of a Levite, he disqualifies her?[51] — It was stated in, But if a priest's daughter be a widow or divorced etc.,[52]

(1) For the law concerning a non-priest. What proof then is there that a priest's daughter who married such a man is also subject to the same law?

(2) Once in Lev. XXII, 10, which refers to any non-priest; and a second time, ibid. 13. which speaks of the daughter of a priest who returns to her father's house, and concludes with the expression, There shall no strange etc. referring to the priest's daughter who is married to such a man.

(3) The second text, Lev. XXII, 13.

(4) Infra 70b, 71a. אנינות the mourning of an onan, v. Glos.

(5) The superfluous and serves the purpose of R. Jose's deduction, and the remainder of the clause, therefore, indicates the negative precept.

(6) The text of Lev. XXII, 12.

(7) Infra 87a.

(8) The daughter of a priest who was divorced or became a widow and had no child.

(9) To her father's house.

(10) Which are also among the priestly gifts. Cf. Ex. XXIX, 27. Lev. VII, 34. X, 14.

(11) In explanation of the Baraitha.

(12) Lev. XXII, 12. תרומת הקדשים

(13) מורם of the same rt. as צרומת. V. supra n. 3.

(14) From the sacrifices, i.e., the breast and the shoulder. V. supra n. 1.

(15) That only one of the deductions mentioned is to be made from this text.

(16) That (a) a disqualified person disqualifies a priest's daughter with whom he cohabited (supra 68a), and (b) that when a priest's daughter returns as a widow or a divorcee to her father's house she is not permitted to eat of the breast and the shoulder of the peace-offerings.

(17) Lit., ‘we found’.

(18) V. supra n. 7 (a).

(19) Infra 6a, 87a.

(20) The superfluous ‘and’ indicates a comparison between the daughter of the priest and the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(21) Is the deduction made (v. n. 11).

(22) Plur. of waw ‘and’. And not in accordance with the Rabbis who are in the majority? V. Sanh. 51b.

(23) The deduction from ‘and a daughter’.

(24) Not only the jaw.

(25) Since the context, But if a priest . . . and such as are born in his house (Lev. XXII, 11) speaks of the relatives of a priest, it would have been obvious to whom v. 12 referred even if a priest's daughter were omitted, reading only. If she be married etc.

(26) Since Scripture mentions it. Lit., ‘we found’.

(27) If a disqualified person cohabited with her. V. supra 68a.

(28) In the prohibition.

(29) Lit., ‘for if for terumah, are they subjects of eating terumah?’ As they are never allowed to eat terumah there is obviously no need to forbid it to them.

(30) To eat terumah. Lit., ‘why not’.

(31) The daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite.

(32) After the death of her husband who was a priest.

(33) Who survived his father. A Scriptural text might consequently have been required to forbid a woman in such circumstances from eating terumah if she cohabited with a disqualified person!

(34) Lit., ‘he (i.e., the disqualified man who cohabited with her) disqualifies her’.

(35) Hence no Scriptural text was needed to exclude her.

(36) The sacredness of the body of the priest's daughter.

(37) Why a priest's daughter only should be disqualified.

(38) Cf. supra notes 7 and 8 second clause.

(39) On the part of the daughter of a priest who cohabited with one of the disqualified persons mentioned.

(40) Cf. supra n. 13.

(41) A prohibition, which involves the penalty of flogging. must be derived from an explicit Scriptural text. V. Mak. 17b.

(42) The inference a fortiori mentioned.

(43) The actual prohibition, how ever, is based on the fact that she is forbidden to eat terumah; as she is forbidden to eat it owing to the loss of her sanctity, so is she forbidden to marry a priest.

(44) Who, as has been inferred, supra 68a, from a Scriptural text, causes her disqualification.

(45) A brother, for instance, betrothal with whom is invalid. What proof, however, is there that persons, such as a Cuthean, a nathin or a bastard, cohabitation with whom is subject to flogging only and betrothal with whom is valid, also disqualify a priest's daughter from marrying a priest?

(46) Lev. XXII, 12.

(47) Cause disqualification.

(48) Hence there was no need for a Scriptural text to exclude them. The text consequently refers to those who are subject to the penalty of flogging.

(49) That Scripture refers only to those with whom marriage is valid.

(50) But, as stated infra 69b, a slave does cause disqualification.

(51) From (a) marrying a priest; and (b) eating terumah in the case of the daughter of a priest, or in the case of the daughter of a Levite or an Israelite who was married to a priest who left her with children by virtue of whom she was entitled to the privilege of eating terumah.

(52) Lev. XXII, 13 which concludes, and is returned unto her father's house . . . she may eat of her father's bread, i.e., terumah.

only in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood or divorce is applicable;[1] an idolater and a slave, however, are excluded, since in relation to them no widowhood or divorce is applicable.[2]

Thus we have found [the law concerning] the daughter of a priest;[3] whence, however, [is the law concerning] the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite to be inferred? — As R. Abba stated in the name of Rab [that deduction is made from the Scriptural use of] 'And a daughter', [where only] 'daughter' [could have been used],[4] so here also [deduction is made from the use of] 'And a daughter', [where only] 'daughter' could have been used.[5] In accordance with whose view?[6] Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba, who bases expositions on [superfluous] Wawin![7] — It[8] may be said to have been made even according to the view of the Rabbis, because the entire [Scriptural expression] And a daughter[9] is a superfluous text.[10] But might it be suggested that in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce is possible,[11] [the woman][12] may eat terumah if she[13] has no children,[14] and may not eat if she has children, but in the case of a man in relation to whom widowhood and divorce are not possible[15] she may eat terumah even if she[13] has children?[16] — If so,[17] what need was there to include the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite![18]

According to R. Akiba, however, who stated that betrothal with those whose intercourse involves the penalty of a negative commandment has no validity and that the meaning of[19] If . . . be married[20] to a strange man[21] is 'if she cohabits',[22] what need was there[23] [for] 'widow or divorced'?[24] — The widow was stated[25] in order to restrict her privilege;[26] and the divorced woman, in order to relax her restrictions.[27] And [both[28] were] required. For had only the widow been mentioned it might have been assumed that only a widow may eat terumah if she has no children because she is eligible to marry a priests but, a divorced woman who is ineligible to marry a priest may not eat it even if she has no children. And had the divorced woman only been mentioned it might have been suggested that only a divorced woman may not eat terumah if she has children because she is ineligible to marry a priest, but a widow who is eligible to marry a priest may eat it even if she has children. [Hence both were] necessary.

Might it not be suggested [that the statement], 'She had connubial relations with a disqualified person'[29] refers also to one who remarried his divorced wife![30] — The All Merciful said, To a strange man, only one who was formerly a stranger to her.[31] Her former husband[32] is excluded since he was not formerly a stranger to her.

If so, a halal,[33] who is not a stranger[34] to her,[35] should not cause her disqualification! Scripture stated, He shall not profane his seed among his people;[36] 'his seed'[37] is compared to himself, as he disqualifies[38] so does his seed disqualify.[39]

Might it be suggested [that the disqualification[40] is effected] from the moment of betrothal?[41] — [His case[42] must be] similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As a High Priest, in the case of a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation only,[43] so does this [person[44] cause disqualification] by cohabitation only.

Might it be suggested [that disqualification[40] is effected] only where there was betrothal as well as cohabitation? — His case[42] must be similar to that of a High Priest with a widow. As the High Priest, [when he marries] a widow, [causes her disqualification] by cohabitation alone[45] so does this [person[46] cause disqualification] by cohabitation alone.

‘R. Jose however said: ‘Anyone whose children are disqualified causes disqualification, but he whose children are not disqualified does not cause disqualification’. What is the practical difference between the first Tanna and R. Jose? — R. Johanan replied: The difference between them is the case of an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation and an Idumean proselyte of the second generation.[47] And both of them[48] deduced their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. The first Tanna reasons: As a High Priest whose cohabitation with a widow is forbidden causes her disqualification, so does this person[49] also cause disqualification. R. Jose, however, reasons thus: Like a High Priest. As a High Priest whose seed is disqualified causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified; an Egyptian proselyte of the second generation is thus excluded, since his children are not disqualified, for it is written, The children of the third generation that are born unto them may enter into the assembly of the Lord.[50]

‘R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Whenever you may marry his daughter, you may marry his widow etc.’ What is the practical difference between R. Jose and R. Simeon b. Gamaliel? ‘Ullah replied: The difference between them is the case of an Ammonite and a Moabite proselyte.[51] And both of them[52] derived their respective views from none other than [the disqualification] of a widow by a High Priest. R. Jose reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married a widow, his seed is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does any other person cause disqualification only when his seed is disqualified. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, reasons thus: As with a High Priest who married ,a widow, all his seed[53] is disqualified and he himself causes disqualification, so does only such a person cause disqualification, all whose seed is disqualified; an Ammonite and a Moabite are, therefore, excluded since not all their seed are disqualified.[54] For a Master said: An Ammonite,[55] but not an Ammonitess; a Moabite,[55] but not a Moabitess.[56] MISHNAH. THE VIOLATOR, THE SEDUCER AND THE IMBECILE[57] CAN NEITHER DEPRIVE A WOMAN[58] OF THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH NOR CAN THEY BESTOW THE RIGHT UPON HER.[59] IF THEY ARE, HOWEVER, UNFIT TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF ISRAEL[60] THEY DO DEPRIVE A WOMAN[58] OF HER RIGHT TO THE EATING OF TERUMAH.[61] HOW? IF[62] AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST[63] SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH.

(15) An idolater, for instance, or a slave.

(16) The cohabitation with such a person having no legal effect whatsoever.

(17) That from the Scriptural text mentioned a relaxation of the law is to be deduced, its purpose being the indication that a priest's daughter is not disqualified even where she has issue from an idolater or a slave.

(18) If a priest's daughter is not disqualified, how much less the daughter of a Levite or of an Israelite. The purpose of the Scriptural text, therefore, must be taken to be the disqualification of the daughter of a priest. The inclusion of the daughter of a Levite and of an Israelite was, therefore, necessary to indicate that even if either of those was enjoying the privilege of eating terumah, by virtue of the rights of the children she had from a priest, she loses that privilege if she cohabited with an idolater or a slave even though the act resulted in no issue.

(25) Not for the purpose of the deduction made by R. Ishmael.

(26) To indicate that a priest's daughter who was the widow of an Israelite may not eat terumah if she has children, even after the death of her husband. Had no Scriptural text indicated this law it might have been assumed that she may eat terumah even if she had children from the Israelite.

(27) To allow her (cf. supra n. 4) to eat terumah where she has no issue from the Israelite. Had not Scripture indicated this law it might have been assumed that as the divorcee was forbidden to marry a priest so she was forbidden to eat terumah even if her union with the Israelite produced no issue.

(28) Widow and divorcee.

(29) Who, as deduced from a Scriptural text, supra 68a, causes the disqualification of the woman with whom he cohabited.

(30) After she had been married to another man. Such a marriage being forbidden (v. Deut. XXIV, 4), the first husband should be regarded as a ‘strange man’ (Lev. XXII, 12) and consequently included among the persons who cause a woman's disqualification. Why, then, was it stated (supra 44b) that a woman so remarried to her first husband is permitted to marry a priest and, all the more, to eat terumah! (V. Rashi a.l. Cf., however, Tosaf s.v. היא supra 44b).

IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT TERUMAH.[1] IF THE EMBRYO WAS CUT IN HER WOMB SHE MAY EAT.[2] IF[3] A PRIEST HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN[7] OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH[8] BUT NOT AS HER OFFSPRING.[9] HOW? — IF THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A SON BY HIM, AND THE SON WENT AND VIOLATED A BONDWOMAN WHO BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A SLAVE;[10] AND IF HIS FATHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH;[11] BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER AND MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.[12]

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN[13] OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER.[14] HOW? IF AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST OR A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A SLAVE OR AN IDOLATER AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS A BASTARD; AND IF HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER WAS AN ISRAELITE'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST, SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH; BUT IF SHE WAS A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN[13] OF HER RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH. HOW? IF A PRIEST'S DAUGHTER WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE AND SHE BORE A DAUGHTER BY HIM, AND THE DAUGHTER WENT AND MARRIED A PRIEST AND BORE A SON BY HIM, SUCH A SON IS FIT TO BE A HIGH PRIEST, TO STAND AND MINISTER AT THE ALTAR. HE ALSO BESTOWS UPON HIS MOTHER[15] , THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH, BUT DEPRIVES[16] HIS MOTHER'S MOTHER[17] OF THIS PRIVILEGE. THE LATTER[18] CAN RIGHTLY SAY, ‘[MAY THERE] NOT [BE ANOTHER] LIKE MY GRANDSON THE HIGH PRIEST WHO DEPRIVES ME OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH.

GEMARA. [Here][19] we learn what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from levirate marriage.[20]

IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE WITH THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE BECOMES PREGNANT SHE MAY NO LONGER EAT. Since she may not eat when she is definitely with child, precaution should be taken against the possibility that she might be with child![21] Did we not learn, ‘They[22] must be kept apart[23] for three months, since it is possible that they are pregnant’?[24] Rabbah son of R. Huna replied: In respect of genealogy[25] precautions were taken;[26] in respect of terumah no such precautions were considered necessary. But was no such precaution considered necessary in respect of terumah? Surely, it was taught: [If a priest said][27] ‘Here is your letter of divorce [which shall become effective] one hour before my death’, she is forbidden to eat terumah at once![28] — In fact,[29] said Rabbah son of R. Huna, precautions were taken in respect of legitimate marriage,[30] but in respect of illegitimate intercourse[31] no such precaution was considered necessary.[32] But was such precaution, taken in respect of legitimate marriage? Surely, it was taught: If a priest's daughter was married to an Israelite who died,[33] she may perform her ritual immersion[34] and eat terumah the same evening![35] — R. Hisda replied: She performs the immersion but may eat terumah only until the fortieth day. For if she is not found pregnant[36] she never was pregnant;[37] and if she is found pregnant,[38] the semen, until the fortieth day, is only a mere fluid.[39] Said Abaye to him: If so,[40] read the final clause: If the embryo in her womb can be distinguished she is considered to have committed an offence[41] retrospectively![42] — The meaning is that[43] she is considered to have committed an offence[41] retrospectively[44] to the fortieth day.[45]

It was stated: Where a man cohabited with his betrothed in the house of his [future] father-in-law, Rab said: The child is a bastard; and Samuel said: The child is a shethuki.[46] Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable in the case where the betrothed woman was suspected of illicit relations with strangers.[47] Where, however, she is not suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is ascribed to him.[48] Said Raba: Whence do I infer this? From the statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with strangers, why should she be allowed to eat terumah when she bore a child![49] Consequently it must refer to a woman[50] who was suspected of illicit relations with him only but not with strangers. Now, if there[51] where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,[52] the child is regarded as his[53] how much more so[54] here[55] where she is forbidden to all other men and permitted to him. Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with him,[56] the child is deemed to be a bastard even where she is not suspected of such relations with others. What is the reason? Because it is assumed that as she exposed herself to the man who betrothed her so she exposed herself to others also; but our Mishnah[57] deals with the case where both of them[58] were imprisoned in the same gaol.[59]

Others say: Where he[56] cohabited with her, no one disputes that the child is regarded as his; but the statement made was in the following form. Where a betrothed woman became pregnant, Rab ruled: Such a child is a bastard; and Samuel ruled: The child is a shethuki.[60] Raba said: Rab's view is reasonable where the woman was not suspected of illicit relations with him,[56] but was suspected of such relations with others,[61]

(1) The embryo causes its mother's disqualification. V. supra 67b.

(2) Immediately. And the same law applies where the embryo was born dead.

(3) Cur. edd., ‘he was’; Bah, ‘behold’.

(4) An embryo in the womb cannot confer upon its mother the privilege of eating terumah, as deduced from born in his house (Lev. XXII. 11). V. supra 67b.

(5) By virtue of the existence of a son, though he is illegitimate.

(6) While the latter, as a violator or seducer, cannot confer the privilege, the son can.
(7) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
(8) As explained supra 68b.
(9) If the slave is the offspring of a priest's daughter who was married to an Israelite now dead, he does not deprive her of the right of returning to the house of her father again to eat terumah. V. infra for further explanation.
(10) The child of a bondwoman, though of an Israelite father, is deemed a slave, as deduced from Ex. XXI, 4.
(11) If her husband and her son (the father of the slave) are dead. Though the son of a son (like a son) confers upon his grandmother the right of eating terumah (v. infra 70a), the offspring of a union between an Israelite and a bondwoman is not regarded as the legitimate son of his father but as the child of his mother.
(12) The slave not being regarded as legitimate offspring (cf. supra n. 2) to deprive her of the privilege.
(13) If she is a priest's daughter entitled to eat terumah.
(14) If she was the daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest now dead.
(15) Even after the death of his father.
(16) As the living offspring of an Israelite.
(17) Though his own mother is dead. Were it not for his existence, his grandmother would have regained her original right of eating terumah on the death of her daughter. V. infra 87a.
(18) Lit., ‘this’.
(19) In the statement that an imbecile's betrothal neither confers upon a woman, nor deprives her of the right of eating terumah (v. our Mishnah), thus affirming that an imbecile's kinyan has no validity.
(20) Tosef. Yeb. XI, infra 96b, 2b; because there is no validity whatsoever in the kinyan of his marriage.
(21) And should, in consequence. be forbidden to eat terumah immediately after intercourse had taken place. Why then was it stated, IF AN ISRAELITE HAD INTERCOURSE. . . SHE MAY STILL CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH?
(22) Women who have been exchanged for one another. (V. the Mishnah, supra 33b).
(23) I.e., they are forbidden to cohabit with their husbands.
(24) Supra 33b. Similar precaution, then, should have been taken here also!
(25) The Mishnah cited is concerned with safeguarding the status of a legitimate child by taking the necessary precautions to distinguish him from the illegitimate.
(26) In the interests of the purity of family life special precautions were necessary.
(27) To his wife, the daughter of an Israelite.
(28) Suk. 23b, Git. 28a, Ned. 3b; since the priest might die at any moment while the woman was indulging in the consumption of terumah. This proves that in respect of terumah also precautions were taken.

(31) The subject of the section of our Mishnah under consideration.
(32) V. supra 35a.
(33) On the same day, after one act of cohabitation.
(34) Prescribed in Lev. XV, 18.
(35) No precaution being taken against the possibility that the woman may have conceived and thereby remained forbidden to eat terumah.
(36) On the fortieth day.
(37) And is allowed to eat terumah after that day also.
(38) On the fortieth day.
(39) And cannot be regarded as a child.
(40) That prior to the fortieth day the woman is not regarded as pregnant.
(41) Lit., ‘injured’.
(42) She pays compensation for any terumah she may have consumed by returning to the priest the principal plus a fifth. V. Lev. XXII, 14.
(43) Lit., ‘what’.
(44) If she ate terumah at any time after the fortieth day.
(45) But not earlier. She pays no compensation for any terumah she may have consumed prior to the fortieth day.

(47) Lit., ‘when she is spoken of in a low voice from (by) the world’.

(48) The man who betrothed her.
(49) There is no proof that the priest was the child's father.
(50) Lit., ‘but no’.
(51) In our Mishnah.
(52) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man, for it is forbidden to have intercourse with a woman without betrothal.
(53) The violator's or seducer's.
(54) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.
(55) The case where the man cohabited with his betrothed.
(56) The man who betrothed her.
(57) Which regards the child as the son of the violator or seducer.
(58) The man and the woman.
(59) Where no intercourse with any other man was possible.
(60) Only a doubtful bastard. V. Glos. and Kid. 6.
(61) These being in the majority, the child is deemed to be the son of one of the strangers.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 70a

, but where she is suspected of illicit relations with him, the child is regarded as his, although she is also suspected of such relations with others. Said Raba: Whence do I derive this? From the Statement, IF, HOWEVER, SHE GAVE BIRTH TO A CHILD, SHE MAY EAT. For how is this to be understood? If it be suggested to refer to a woman who is suspected of illicit relations with him but not with strangers, was it at all necessary to state that she may eat terumah?[1] Consequently it must refer to a woman[2] who was suspected of illicit relations with strangers also. Now, if there,[3] where she is forbidden to the one as well as to the other,[4] the child is regarded as his,[5] how much more so[6] here[7] where she is forbidden to any other man and is permitted to him.[8] Said Abaye to him: It may still be maintained that Rab is of the opinion that wherever she is suspected of illicit relations with strangers the child is deemed to be a bastard even if she is also suspected of such relations with him; and our Mishnah deals with one who had not been suspected at all.[9]

A SLAVE, BY HIS COHABITATION, DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH etc. What is the reason?[10] — Scripture stated, The wife and her[11] children shall be etc.[12]

A BASTARD DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF THE PRIVILEGE OF EATING TERUMAH AND ALSO BESTOWS THE PRIVILEGE UPON HER. Our Rabbis taught: And have no child.[13] So far I only know[14] of her own child; whence her child's child? It was consequently stated, And have no child,[13] implying ‘any child whatsoever’.[15] So far I only know of a legitimate child; whence the illegitimate child? It was stated, And have no [en lah][16] child,[13] which implies, ‘hold an enquiry[17] concerning her.’[18] But from this text,[13] surely, the deduction concerning a child's child was made! — No Scriptural text is really required for the inclusion of one's child's child, since children's children are like children;[19] if a text is at all required it is for the inclusion of an illegitimate child.

Said Resh Lakish to R. Johanan: In accordance with whose view?[20] Is it only in accordance with that of R. Akiba who maintains that the offspring of a union between such whose intercourse involves them in the penalty of a negative precept is regarded as a bastard![21] — It may even be said to represent the view of the Rabbis, since in respect of an idolater and a slave they agree.[22] For when R. Dimi came[23] he stated in the name of R. Isaac b. Abdimi in the name of our Master:[24] If an idolater or a slave cohabited with the daughter of an Israelite, the child born from such a union is deemed a bastard.

A HIGH PRIEST SOMETIMES DEPRIVES A WOMAN OF HER RIGHT. Our Rabbis taught:

[The grandmother might justly say], ‘I would [willingly] be an atonement[25] for my grandson, the little cruse[26] who bestows upon me the privilege of eating terumah,[27] but would not be an atonement for my grandson, the big jar[28] who deprives me of the privilege of eating terumah.[27]

CHAPTER VIII

MISHNAH. AN UNCIRCUMCISED [PRIEST],[29] AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. THEIR WIVES AND SLAVES, HOWEVER, MAY EAT TERUMAH.[30] [A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES[31] AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF,[32] AS WELL AS THEIR SLAVES, MAY EAT TERUMAH, BUT THEIR WIVES MAY NOT.[33] IF, HOWEVER, NO COHABITATION TOOK PLACE AFTER THE MAN WAS WOUNDED OR HAD HIS MEMBRUM CUT OFF, THE WIVES[34] ARE PERMITTED TO EAT.[35]

WHO IS TERMED A PEZU’ A DAKKAH?[31] A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED EITHER IN BOTH HIS STONES, OR EVEN ONLY IN ONE OF THEM. AND A KERUTH SHOFEKAH ? A MAN WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF. IF, HOWEVER, [ANY PART] OF THE CORONA REMAINED, EVEN SO MUCH AS A HAIR'S BREADTH, THE MAN IS REGARDED AS FIT.

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Eliezer[36] stated, Whence is it deduced that an uncircumcised [priest] may not eat terumah? A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb,[37] and A sojourner and a hired servant were also mentioned in respect of terumah,[38] as the paschal lamb, in connection with which ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised,[39] so is terumah, in respect of which ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised. R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unnecessary. Since it was stated, What man soever,[40] the uncircumcised also is included.[41]

The Master said, ‘R. Eliezer stated, "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned in connection with the paschal lamb, and "A sojourner and a hired servant" were also mentioned in respect of terumah,’[42] as the paschal lamb, in connection with which "A sojourner and a hired servant" were mentioned, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is terumah, in respect of which "A sojourner and a hired servant were mentioned, forbidden to the uncircumcised’. Is it[43] free for deduction?[44] For if it is not free, the objection might be raised[45] that the paschal lamb may be different[46] since in connection with it one may also incur penalties[47] for pigul,[48] nothar[48] and uncleanness![49] — It is certainly free for the deduction. Which expression[50] is free? Is it that of terumah? Surely it is required for its own purpose. For it was taught: A sojourner[51] means one who is acquired for life[52] and a hired servant[51] means one who is acquired for a number of years.[53] But let ‘sojourner’ only be mentioned and a ‘hired servant’ be omitted and one would infer: If one who is acquired for life[54] is not permitted to eat terumah how much less one who is acquired only for a number of years! If so,[55] it might have been assumed that ‘a sojourner’ means one who is acquired for a number of years [and that only he may not eat terumah],[56] but that one who is acquired for life may eat,[57] hence the insertion of the expression, ‘a hired servant’, which explains the meaning of sojourner,[58] [viz.,] that it signifies one who, though acquired for life, may not eat![59] — But [in fact] the one[60] mentioned in respect of the paschal lamb is free for deduction. For what could be the meaning of ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’ which the All Merciful wrote in connection with the paschal lamb?[61] If it be suggested that it means the actual sojourner and hired servant,[62] [could it have been imagined] that [an Israelite][63] is exempt from the Paschal lamb because he is a sojourner or a hired servant? Surely, we have it as an established law in regard to terumah that such a person is not permitted to eat it,[64]

(1) Certainly not; since the child is obviously the son of the priest.

(2) Lit., ‘but no’.

(3) In our Mishnah.

(4) To the violator and seducer as well as to any other man.

(5) The violator's or seducer's.

(6) Should the child be regarded as the son of the man who betrothed her.

(7) The case of the betrothed.

(8) The man who betrothed her.

(9) Either in respect of the violator or seducer on the one hand or in respect of any others. All that our Mishnah teaches is that if cohabitation with the former took place, even if only once, the child is regarded as his.

(10) Why is he not regarded as the offspring of the priest? V. our Mishnah and supra p. 466, n. 16.

(11) Emphasis on her.

(12) Shall be her master's (Ex. XXI, 4), i.e., they are regarded (a) as slaves, and (b) as the offspring of the bondwoman. Hence they cannot be regarded as the offspring of the priest.

(17) עיין ayayn ‘examine’, ‘investigate’. The Aleph of אין is interchangeable with the ‘Ayin of עיין.

(18) An enquiry is to be made whether she has any kind of son, i.e., even if only a bastard. Thus a bastard also is deemed to be her child. Cf. supra 22b.

(19) Supra 62b.

(20) Was it stated in our Mishnah that the offspring of a union between the daughter of an Israelite and an idolater or a slave (a union which is forbidden by a negative precept only, no kareth being involved, cf. supra 45a) is regarded as a bastard.

(21) Does our Mishnah, then, represent the view of an individual, which is contrary to the expressed view of the majority.

(28) The High Priest. Cf. the colloquial expres. ‘big pot’.

(29) Though the uncircumcision was not due to any fault of his. If, e.g.. he was forbidden circumcision because his brothers died as a result of such an operation. Cf. supra 64b.

(30) By virtue of the rights of their husband and master. Uncircumcision and uncleanness are only temporary disqualifications which prevent the priest from eating terumah, while they continue. His sanctity and privileges, however, remain in force.

(44) I.e., is not the expression required in connection with the subject spoken of in the context.

(45) Against deducing terumah from the Paschal lamb.

(46) From terumah, i.e., subject to greater restrictions.
(47) Kareth if the transgression was wilful, and a sin-offering if unwitting.
(48) V. Glos.
(49) How then could terumah which is not surrounded by such restrictions be deduced from it?
(50) Of the two expressions, ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’.
(51) Lev. XXII, 20.
(52) Lit., ‘an everlasting possession’, i.e., a Hebrew servant who, on refusing to go out free, has had his ear bored. (Cf. Ex. XXI, 5f).
(53) The ordinary Hebrew servant who remains the property of his master for six years only, after which he goes out free for nothing (v. Ex. XXI, 2).
(54) Who is in fact his master's absolute property.
(55) If only the sojourner had been mentioned.
(56) Since he is not his master's absolute possession.
(57) Since he is the absolute property of his master.
(58) Since a hired servant implies one who is acquired for a period, the other expression cannot refer to the same class of servant, but to one acquired for life. תושב E.V. a sojourner (rt. ישב ‘to abide’) implies longer service than that of the שכיר E.V., hired servant.
(59) How, then, since the expression is required for the laws of terumah, could it be suggested that the expression, ‘a sojourner and a hired servant’, mentioned in connection with terumah, is free for deduction?
(60) The expression ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’.
(61) Ex. XII, 45, a sojourner . . . shall not eat thereof.

(63) Who is subject to the fulfilment of the commandments.
(64) Though his master is a priest.

which proves[1] that his master does not acquire his person[2] so that here also[3] his master does not acquire his person![4] [The expression][5] must consequently [have been written] for the purpose of the deduction.[6]

But is it[7] not free in one direction only,[8] while R. Eliezer[9] was heard to state [that an analogy between expressions of which only] one[10] is free[11] may be drawn, but may also be refuted![12] — Since [the expressions][13] are not required [for their own context][14] one of them is allotted to the law[15] in respect of which the inference is made[16] and the other is allotted to the law from which the inference is made,[17] so that a word analogy is obtained which is free in both directions.

Might[18] [not the deduction be made:][19] As the paschal lamb is forbidden to an onan[20] so is terumah forbidden to an onan[21] — R. Jose son of R. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, ‘There shall no common man,[22] I commanded you concerning its prohibition to the common man[23] but not concerning that of the onan. But might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised![24] Surely ‘A sojourner and a hired servant’[25] was written.[26] And what reason do you see?[27] — It is logical to infer that the case of the uncircumcised is to be included, since[28] it involves the absence of an act[29] and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;[30] the law[29] was in force before the Revelation;[31] and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating of the paschal lamb].[32] On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,[33] since mourning is an ever- present possibility,[34] is common to men as well as to women, and no man has the power to cure himself of it![35] — Those[36] are more in number.

Raba said: Even if those[36] were not more in number, you could not suggest that uncircumcision, which is actually mentioned in respect of the Paschal lamb, should be excluded[37] while the mourning of an onan, which in the case of the paschal lamb itself was deduced from that of the tithe,[38] should be deduced from it.

Might[39] [it not be said:][40] As the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars one from the eating of the paschal lamb, so should the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debar one from the eating of terumah! — Scripture stated, When thou hast circumcised him, then shall he eat thereof,[41] the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars one from the eating thereof, of the Paschal lamb only; the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves does not, however, debar one from the eating of terumah. If so,[42] [why not] say, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof[43] [also implies:] He may not eat 'thereof' only but may eat terumah![44] — Surely it was written A sojourner and a hired servant.[45] And what reason do you see?[46] — It is only logical to include a man's own circumcision, since the act is performed on his own person and its neglect is punishable by kareth. On the contrary; the circumcision of one's male children and slaves should have been excluded because it may occur at any time! — The former restrictions are more in number. And if you prefer I might say that even if those were not more in number your suggestion could not be entertained; for is there anything which is not debarred by his own state of uncircumcision but is debarred by that of the other!

Now that it has been said that the expression. 'Thereof,' was introduced for expository purposes. what[47] was the purpose of the text, There shall no alien eat of it?[48] — Only with regard to it[49]

---

(1) Since a Canaanite slave, whose body is acquired by the master, may eat of his terumah.

(2) The Hebrew servant sells only his labour, while he himself remains a free man.

(3) In respect of the Paschal lamb.

(4) As he is thus a free man, it is obviously his duty to observe the commandment of the Paschal lamb. What need then was there for the specification of A sojourner and hired servant?

(5) A sojourner and a hired servant. Ex. XII, 45.

(6) [The verse would then be referring to a non-jew, 'a sojourner' denoting a resident alien and 'a hired servant' an idolater. This, however, would be included in uncircumcised' (Ex. Xli, 48) and 'alien' (verse 43). Consequently the verse must have been written for deduction (Tosaf.)].

(15) That of terumah.

(16) That terumah may not be eaten by the uncircumcised.

does apostasy disqualify,[1] but in respect of tithe, apostasy does not disqualify.

What was the purpose of, But no uncircumcised person shall eat thereof?[2] — ‘Thereof’[3] only may he not eat, but he may eat of the unleavened bread and bitter herbs.[4] And it was necessary for Scripture to specify[5] both ‘Uncircumcised’ and ‘There shall no alien.’ For had the All Merciful mentioned the ‘uncircumcised’ only it might have been assumed [that the prohibition applies only to him], because he is repulsive. but not to an alien who is not repulsive. And had the All Merciful written only ‘There shall no alien’ it might have been assumed [that only he is subject to the prohibition]. because his heart is not directed towards heaven, but not the uncircumcised whose heart is directed towards heaven. [Hence both were] required.

What[6] was the purpose of repeating the expression. ‘Of it’,[7] twice? — As expounded by Rabbah in the name of R. Isaac.[8]

The Master said, ‘R. Akiba stated: This deduction is unneces sary. Since it was stated, What man soever,[9] the uncircumcised also was included’.[10] Might it be suggested that it[11] includes the onan?[12] R. Jose b. Hanina replied: Scripture stated, There shall no common man,[13] I commanded you concerning its prohibition to a common man[14] but not concerning that of an onan.[12] Might it be suggested: But not the uncircumcised?[15] — Surely, what man soever’ was written.[16] And what reason do you see?[17] — It is logical that the case of the uncircumcised should be included, since[18] it involves the absence of an act[19] and that act is one affecting the man's own body; [the uncircumcised] is punishable by kareth;[20] the law[21] was in force before the Revelation;[22] and the [non]-circumcision of one's male children and slaves debars [one from eating the paschal lamb].[23] On the contrary; the case of the onan should have been included,[24] since mourning is an ever-present possibility,[25] is common to men as well as women, and no man has the power to cure himself of It![26]

— Those[27] are more in number. Raba said: Even if those[27] were not more in number, you could not make your suggestion.[28] For Scripture stated, What man soever.[29] Now what disability is it that is applicable to a man and not to a woman? You must, of course, say that it is uncircumcision.

What expository use does R. Akiba[30] make of the expression A sojourner and a hired servant?[13] R. Shemaia replied: To include[31] a circumcised Arab and a circumcised Gibeonite.[32] Are these, however, regarded as circumcised at all? Surely we learned: [If a man said]. ‘Konam[33] , if I benefit from the uncircumcised’, he may benefit from uncircumcised Israelites[34] but is forbidden to benefit from circumcised idolaters.[35] [If he said]. ‘Konam’, if I benefit from the circumcised’, he is permitted to benefit from circumcised idolaters but is forbidden to benefit from uncircumcised Israelites![36] — But In truth [the text referred to] includes[37] a proselyte who had been circumcised but did not perform the prescribed ritual immersion,[38] and a child who was born circumcised,[39] he[40] holding that it is necessary to provide for a few drops of the blood of the covenant[41] to flow;[42] while R. Eliezer[43] follows his own view, he having stated that ‘A proselyte who has been circumcised, though he has not performed his ritual immersion, is regarded as a proper proselyte’.[44] and he is also of the opinion that it is not necessary to provide for any drops of the blood of the covenant[41] to flow where a child was born circumcised.[39]

What expository use, however, does R. Eliezer make of the expression. What man soever?[45] — The Torah, [he maintains], speaks in the language of [ordinary] men.[46]

R. Hama b. Ukba inquired: May an uncircumcised child[47] be anointed with the oil of terumah?[48] Does non-circumcision in the pre-circumcision period[49] constitute a bar[50] or not? — R. Zera replied: Come and hear: I only know [of the command][51] concerning the circumcision of the male children [which he has] at the time of the preparation[52] [of the paschal lamb].[53] and concerning the slaves [which he has] at the time of the eating thereof;[54] whence, however, is it deduced that the restriction mentioned in respect of this category is to be applied to the other, and that of the other to this one?[55] Then[56] was specifically stated in both categories[57] so that an analogy between the two might be drawn.[58] Now, it is quite possible to imagine a man's slaves as being with him at the time of the eating of the paschal lamb but not at the time of its preparation,[59] when, for instance, he bought them in the meantime.[60] How is it possible, however, that a person's male children should be in existence during the eating and not during the preparation? Obviously only when birth occurred in the interval between the preparation and the eating.[61] Thus it may be inferred that uncircumcision in the pre-circumcision period[62] constitutes a legal status of uncircumcision.[63] Said Rabbah:[64] Do you understand this? The All Merciful said, Let all his males be circumcised, and then let him come near and keep[65] it; but such a child is not fit to be circumcised![66] But what are we dealing with here? With a child[67] who recovered from a fever.[68] Then[69] let him be granted [a period of convalescence of] full seven days.[70] for[71] Samuel said that a child who recovered from a fever must be allowed a period of convalescence of full seven days![72] — Where he was already granted the seven days' period.[73] He should, then,[74] have been circumcised in the morning![75] — We require

(73) And it expired on the Passover Eve.

(74) V. supra n. 9.

(75) I.e., before the time of the preparation of the Paschal lamb; and, since that was not done, the child was in a legal state of uncircumcision not only during the time of eating, but also during the time of the preparation. The difficulty then arises again: What need was there for a Scriptural text to include the prohibition of eating the Paschal lamb while such a child remained uncircumcised, when the preparation that must precede the eating is already forbidden!

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 71b

a full period of seven days.[1]

But, surely, Luda'ah learned, 'The day of a child's recovery is like the day of his birth'.[2] Does not this mean that as in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required[3] so is no full period required in respect of the day of his recovery? — No; the day of his recovery is superior to the day of his birth. For, whereas in respect of the day of his birth no full period is required.[3] in respect of the day of his recovery a full period is required.[1] R. Papa replied:[4] Where, for instance, the child had a pain in his eye and recovered[5] in the meantime.[6] Raba replied:[7] Where, for instance, his father and mother were confined in prison.[8] R. Kahana son of R. Nehemiah replied:[7] Where, for instance, the child was a tumtum[9] who in the meantime[10] was operated upon and was found to be a male. R. Sherabia replied:[7] 'Where, for instance, the child put forth his head out of the forechamber [of the uterus]'.[11] But can such a child survive? Surely it was taught: As soon as the child emerges into the air of the world the closed organ[12] is opened and the opened[13] is closed,[14] for otherwise he could not survive even for one hour![15] — Here we deal with a case where the heat of the fever sustained him. Whose fever? If 'his own fever' be suggested, he should, if such was the case, be allowed a full period of seven days![16] — It means, where the fever of his mother sustained him. And if you prefer I might say that the statement[17] applies only when the child does not cry. When, however, it cries it undoubtedly survives.

R. Johanan stated in the name of R. Bana'ah: An uncircumcised [Israelite] is eligible to receive sprinkling;[18] for so we find that our ancestors[19] received sprinkling[20] while they were still uncircumcised, since it is said, And the people came up out of the Jordan on the tenth day of the first month,[21] but on the tenth they were not circumcised owing to the fatigue of the journey; when, then, [could the sprinkling] have been performed?[22] Obviously[23] while they were still uncircumcised.[24] But is it not possible that they prepared no Paschal lamb at all? — This suggestion cannot be entertained at all, since it is written, And they kept the Passover.[25] Mar Zutra demurred: It is possible that it[26] was a paschal lamb that was prepared in uncleanness![27] — R. Ashi retorted: It was explicitly taught: They were circumcised, they performed their ritual ablutions, and they prepared their paschal lambs in a state of cleanness.

Rabbah b. Isaac stated in the name of Rab: The commandment of uncovering the corona at circumcision[28] was not given to Abraham; for it is said, At that time the Lord said unto Joshua: ‘Make thee knives of flint etc.’ [[19] But is it not possible [that this applied to] those who were not previously circumcised; for it is written, For all the people that came out were circumcised,[29] but all the people that were born etc.?[29] — If so,[30] why the expression. ‘Again!’ Consequently[31] it must apply to the uncovering of the corona.[32] Why, then,[33] the expression, ‘A second time?’[34] — To compare the termination of the circumcision with its commencement; as the commencement of the circumcision is essential[35] so is the termination of circumcision[36] essential;[37] for we learned, ‘These are the shreds which render circumcision invalid: Flesh which covers the greater part of the corona; and [a priest whose circumcision was so defective] is not permitted to eat terumah’; and Rabina, or it might be said, R. Jeremiah b. Abba, stated in the name of Rab: Flesh which covers the greater part of the height of the corona.[38]

Why were they not circumcised in the wilderness? — If you wish I might say: Because of the fatigue of the journey; and if you prefer I might say: Because the North wind[1] did not blow upon them. For it was taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness the North wind did not blow upon them. What was the reason? — If you wish I might say: Because they were under divine displeasure.[2] And if you prefer I might say: In order that the clouds of glory[3] might not be scattered.

R. Papa said: Hence, no circumcision may be performed on a cloudy day or on a day when the South wind[4] blows; nor may one be bled[5] on such a day. At the present time, however, since many people are in the habit of disregarding these precautions,[6] The Lord preserveth the simple.[7]

Our Rabbis taught: In all the forty years during which Israel was in the wilderness[8] there was not a day on which the North wind[9] did not blow at the midnight hour; for it is said, And it came to pass at midnight, that the Lord smote all the firstborn etc.[10] How is the deduction arrived at? — By this we were taught that an acceptable time[11] is an essential.[12]

R. Huna said: A mashuk[13] is Pentateuchally permitted to eat terumah but has been forbidden to do so by Rabbinical ordinance, because he appears to be like one uncircumcised.

An objection was raised: The mashuk requires to be [re-] circumcised![14] — Only by Rabbinical ordinance.

But he who raised the objection on what ground did he raise it, when it was definitely stated ‘requires’![15] — He misunderstood the final clause: R. Judah said, He[16] should not be circumcised because such an operation is dangerous in his case.[17] They said to him: ‘Surely many were circumcised in the days of Ben Koziba[18] and yet gave birth to sons and daughters, [such circumcision being lawful] as, in fact, it is said in Scripture, Must needs be circumcised,[19] even a hundred times. And, furthermore, it is said, He hath broken My covenant,[20] which includes the mashuk’.[21] What need was there for the additional text? — In case you might argue that Must needs be circumcised[22] includes only the shreds which render a circumcision invalid[23] [so he added]. Come and hear, He hath broken My covenant[20] which includes the mashuk.[24] He[25] consequently thought that, as the Talmud[26] made use of a Scriptural text, the law[27] must be pentateuchal; but the fact is that it is only[28] Rabbinical, and the Scriptural text is a mere prop.

An objection was raised: A tumtum[29] may not eat terumah,[30] but his women[31] and slaves may eat of it. A mashuk[32] and one born circumcised[33] may eat of it. The hermaphrodite[34] may eat terumah but not holy food[35] while the tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.[36] At all events, it was taught here that the mashuk and one born circumcised may eat terumah; is not this a refutation against R. Huna![37] — It is indeed a refutation.[38]

The Master said,’A tumtum may not eat terumah, but his women[39] and slaves may eat of it’. By what legal act could a tumtum acquire his wives?[40] If it be suggested, by betrothing them; for it was taught. ‘If a tumtum betrothed a woman, his betrothal is valid and if he was betrothed by a man his betrothal is also valid’,[41] it might be retorted that the validity was intended only as a restrictive measure;[42] was it, however, intended also as a relaxation of a law?[43] He[44] is possibly a woman, and no woman, surely, may betroth a woman! — Abaye replied: Where his testes can be distinguished externally. Raba replied: ‘What is the meaning of "his women"? — His mother’. But [is not the case of his mother] self-evident?It might have been presumed that only one capable of procreation bestows the privilege of eating terumah, but one who is incapable does not bestow it, hence we were taught [that even a tumtum may bestow the privilege].

Come and hear: A tumtum may eat neither terumah nor holy food.[45] According to Abaye, this[46] is quite correct, since the first clause speaks of the certainly non-circumcised person[47] while the final clause speaks of the doubtful one; according to Raba, however, what need was there for the mention of the tumtum in the final clause? — The meaning of[48] tumtum[49] is ‘the uncircumcised’.[50] If, however, one whose status as a non-circumcised person is in doubt is not permitted to eat terumah,[51] would any one who is definitely an uncircumcised person be permitted to eat it?[52] — The final clause is an interpretation of the first:[53] Why may not ‘a tumtum eat terumah’? Because he might have the status of an uncircumcised person,[54] and a man who is uncircumcised ‘may eat neither terumah nor holy food’.

May it be assumed that this[55] is a question in dispute among Tannaim: A mashuk,[56] and[57] a proselyte whose conversion took place while he was already circumcised,[58] and a child, the proper time of whose circumcision had passed,[59] and all other circumcised persons, this means to include one who has two foreskins, may be circumcised in the daytime only. R. Eleazar b. Simeon, however, said: At the proper time[60] children may be circumcised in the daytime only; and if not at the proper time they may be circumcised both by day and by night,[1] Do they not differ on the following principle: While one Master[2] is of the opinion that the circumcision of a mashuk is a pentateuchal law, the other Master[3] is of the opinion that the circumcision of the mashuk is only a Rabbinical ordinance?[4] — And can you understand this?[5] Is there any authority who maintains that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed[6] is only Rabbinical![7] But the fact is that both[8] agree that the circumcision of a mashuk is a Rabbinical ordinance,[9] and that the duty to circumcise a child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, is Pentateuchal. Here,[10] however, their difference depends on the following principle: One Master[11] holds that [the conjunctive in the expression]. And in the day[12] is to be expounded;[13] and the other Master[3] is of the opinion that [the conjunctive in] And in the day[12] is not to be expounded.[14] [The exposition here is of the same nature] as the following:[15] When R. Johanan was once sitting [at his studies] and expounding that ‘nothar[16] at its proper time[17] may be burned in the daytime only,[18] and if not at its proper time,[19] it may be burned either in the day or in the night’. R. Eleazar raised an objection: I only know that a child whose circumcision takes place on the eighth day must be circumcised in the daytime only; whence, however, is it deduced that the case of a child whose circumcision takes place on the ninth, tenth, eleventh or twelfth[20] is also included? Because it was expressly stated, ‘And in the day’;[21] and even he[22] who bases no expositions on a Waw does base his exposition on the basis of a Waw and a He![23] The other remained silent. After he went out, R. Johanan said to Resh Lakish: I observed that the son of Pedath[24] was sitting and making expositions like Moses in the name of the Almighty. ‘Was this his’? Resh Lakish replied.’It is really a Baraitha’. ‘Where’, the first asked. ‘was it taught’? — ‘In Torath Kohanim’.[25] He went out and learned it[26] in three days; and was engaged in making deductions and drawing conclusions from it for a period of three months.

R. Eleazar stated: The sprinkling[27] performed[28] by an uncircumcised person is valid, for his status is similar to that of a tebul yom[29] who, though forbidden to eat terumah, is permitted to prepare[30] the red heifer.[31]

The case of the tebul yom,[29] however, might be different, since he is also permitted to eat tithe![32] — Are we speaking of eating?[33] We speak only of touching: If a tebul yom who is forbidden to touch terumah is permitted [to occupy himself] with the red heifer,[30] how much more so the uncircumcised who is permitted to touch terumah!

The same [law] was also taught [elsewhere]: The sprinkling[34] performed[35] by an uncircumcised man is valid; and such an incident once happened, and the Sages declared his sprinkling to be valid.

An objection was raised: If a tumtum[36] performed sanctification,[37] his sanctification is invalid, because he [has the status of the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of] doubt, and such a person is forbidden to perform sanctification.[37] If an hermaphrodite.[38] however, performed sanctification,[37] his sanctification is valid. R. Judah said: Even if an hermaphrodite performed sanctification his act has no validity. because [his sex might] possibly be that of a woman, and a woman is ineligible to perform sanctification.[39] At all events it was taught here that the uncircumcised or the person whose uncircumcision is a matter of doubt is forbidden to perform sanctification![39] R. Joseph replied: This Tanna is one of the school of R. Akiba who include the uncircumcised in the same prohibition as that of the unclean; as it was taught: R. Akiba said, ‘What man soever[40] includes also the uncircumcised’.[41]

Raba related: I was once sitting before R. Joseph when I raised the following difficulty: Then[42] the Tanna[43] should not have omitted to state.[44] ‘The uncircumcised and the unclean’, and one would at once suggest that the author was R. Akiba![45] — But does he not?[46] Surely it was taught: The uncircumcised and the unclean are exempt from appearing at the Festivals![47] — There [the case is different], because he is a repulsive person.[48]

They[49] follow their own respective views. For it was taught: All[50] are permitted to perform sanctification,[51] with the exception of the deaf, the imbecile and the minor. R. Judah permits in the case of the minor but regards a woman and an hermaphrodite as unfit.[52] What is the Rabbi's reason? — Because it is written, And for the unclean they shall take of the ashes of the burning of the purification from sin,[53] those who are ineligible[54] for the gathering[55] are also ineligible for the sanctification,[56] but those who are eligible[57] for the gathering[55] are also eligible for the sanctification.[58] And R. Judah?[59] — He can answer you: If so,[60] Scripture should have used[61] the expression ‘He shall take’,[62] why then, And they shall take?[63] To indicate that even those who are ineligible there[64] are eligible here. If so, a woman also should be eligible![65] Shall he put[66] but not ‘Shall she put’. And the Rabbis? — Had it been written, ‘He shall take’[67] and ‘Shall he put’.[67] it might have been assumed that only one individual must take[68] and only one must put,[69] hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take.[70] And had the All Merciful written, ‘And they shall take’ and also ‘Shall they put’.[70] it might have been assumed that two must take[68] and two must put,[69] hence did the All Merciful write, And they shall take[67] and Shall he put.[67] [to indicate that the rites are duly performed] even if two take[68] and one put.[69]

(5) That the point at issue should be the one suggested.

(6) V. supra note 4.

(7) Certainly not. Being obviously a Pentateuchal law, the point at issue in the Baraitha cited cannot be the one suggested.

(8) Lit., ‘but, that all the world’, i.e., the first Tanna and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.

(12) The Wow (and) in וביום Lev. XII, 3.

(13) Since the statement, In the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised (ibid.) would have sufficiently indicated that circumcision must be performed in the daytime, the addition of the conjunction waw is regarded as an indication that even a circumcision that takes place after its proper time must be performed in the daytime only. And the case of the mashuk was, by Rabbinical ordinance. given the same force as that of the child.

(14) Nothing may be inferred from the use of the conjunctive Waw, not even the case of the child whose proper time of circumcision had passed, much less that of the circumcision of the mashuk, which is altogether a Rabbinical enactment. The circumcision of either may consequently be performed in the night also.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 73a

And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean;[1] [since] clean [was mentioned][2] the implication must be that he is [somewhat unclean.[3] Thus it was taught that a tebul yom[4] is permitted to prepare the red heifer.

R. Shesheth was asked: Is an uncircumcised person permitted to eat tithe:[5] Is tithe deduced from the paschal lamb in the case of circumcision[6] as the paschal lamb is deduced from tithe in the case of the mourning of an onan,[7] or may only the major [sanctity] be deduced from the minor but not the minor from the major [sanctity]? He replied. You have learned this: In respect of terumah and the first ripe fruits[8] one may incur the penalties of death[9] and a fifth;[10] these furthermore are forbidden to non-priests, they are the [undisputed] property of the priest,[11] they are neutralized[12] in one hundred and one,[13] and they require washing of the hands,[14] and sunset,[15] All these restrictions apply to terumah and bikkurim only but not to tithe.[16] Now, if that were so,[17] it should have been stated here, ‘The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of them, which prohibition is not applicable to tithe’![18] — He might have taught some[19] and omitted others.[20]

What else did he omit that he should have omitted this?[21] — He omitted the following. In the final clause while it was stated: ‘Some restrictions apply to tithe and the first ripe fruits, but not to terumah, since tithe and the first ripe fruits must be brought to the appointed place,[22] they require confession[23] and are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]; they are,[24] furthermore, subject to removal;[25] but R. Simeon exempts them’,[26] [the laws that] they may not be burned[27] even when levitically unclean,[28]

and that the man[1] who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged,[2] and that these laws do not apply to terumah, were not stated.[3] This proves clearly that only some were taught and others were omitted.[4]

The Master said,[5] 'And are forbidden to an onan, and R. Simeon permits [the bikkurim to an onan]'.[6] Whence do they derive their views? — From the Scriptural text, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thine oil or the firstlings of thy herd[5] etc. nor the offering of thy hand,[2] and a Master said that 'the offering of thy hand' refers to bikkurim;[7] and bikkurim were compared to tithe: As tithe is forbidden to the onan so are bikkurim also forbidden to the onan. And R. Simeon?[8] — The All Merciful called them terumah: As terumah is permitted to the onan[9] so are bikkurim permitted to the onan.

'They are, furthermore, subject to removal; but R. Simeon permits them'. One Master[10] compares [bikkurim to tithe][11] and the other Master does not.

'They may not be burned when levitically unclean, and the man who eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged'. Whence is this derived? — From what was taught: R. Simeon said, Neither have I burned[12] thereof, being unclean,[13] whether I was unclean and it was clean or I was clean and it was unclean. I do not know, however, where one was forbidden to eat it'.[14] (But, surely, in relation to it, the uncleanness of the body was specifically stated: The soul that touches any such shall be unclean until the even, and shall not eat of the holy things,[15] unless he bathe his flesh in waters — This is the question: Whence the prohibition [to eat it] where the thing itself is unclean?[16] It was expressly stated,[17] Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn[18] but further on[19] it was stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates; the unclean and the clean may eat it alike as the gazelle, and as the hart,[20] and at the school of R. Ishmael it was taught that the unclean and the clean may eat together even on the same table, and the same plate, and no precautions need be taken. Thus the All Merciful stated, ‘That, concerning which I told you there, Thou shalt eat it within thy gates,[20] you may not eat here’.[21]

‘That these laws do not apply to terumah’. Whence do we derive this? — R. Abbahu replied in the name of R. Johanan: Scripture stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,[22] you may not burn ‘thereof’, but you may burn the oil of terumah if it has become unclean.[23] Might it not be suggested: You may not burn any ‘thereof’. but you may burn holy[24] oil that became unclean? — This, surely. may be inferred a minori ad majus: If in respect of the tithe, the sanctity of which is of a minor character, the Torah stated, Neither have I burnt thereof, being unclean,[22] how much more so in respect of holy food the Sanctity of which is of a major character. If so, terumah also might be inferred a minori ad majus! — Surely ‘thereof’ was written. And what reason do you see?[25] It is logical that holy food should not be excluded, since[26] [the following restrictions also apply to it:] piggul,[27] nothar,[27] sacrifice, me'ilah,[27] kareth,[27] and it is also forbidden to an onan.[27] On the contrary; terumah should not be excluded since [to it apply the restrictions of][28] death.[29] a fifth,[30] it cannot be redeemed[31] and it is forbidden to non-priests![32] — Those[33] are more in number. And if you prefer I might say: Kareth[34] is regarded as being of greater importance.

‘The man that eats of them while they themselves are levitically unclean is to be flogged, and that these laws do not apply to terumah’. He is apparently[35] exempt only from flogging, but a prohibition[36] remains. Whence is this derived? — Scripture stated. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates.[37] only ‘it’[38] but not any other;[39] and a negative precept that is derived from a positive one [has only the force of] a positive.[40]

R. Ashi said:[41] From the first clause also[42] you may infer that the Tanna taught some[43] and omitted others,[44] since he did not state

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 74a

‘And they[1] apply in all[2] the years of the septennial cycle[3] and cannot be redeemed’, and that ‘this does not apply to the [second] tithe’. This proves it.

Come and hear: ‘If shreds[4] which render the circumcision invalid remain, he may not eat terumah, nor the paschal lamb, nor holy food, nor tithe’. Does not tithe refer to the tithe of the corn? — No; the tithe of cattle.[5] But is not the tithe of cattle the same as holy food?[6] — Even on your view are we not told here of the paschal lamb and yet ‘holy food’ also is mentioned! — One can well understand why it was necessary to mention both the paschal lamb and holy food; for if the paschal lamb only had been stated it might have been assumed that it only is forbidden, because uncircumcision was written in Scripture in connection with the paschal lamb, but not holy food. And if holy food only had been stated it might have been assumed that what was meant by holy food was the paschal lamb.[7] What need, however, was there for the mention here of the tithe of cattle![8] — [No, say,] rather, tithe refers to the first tithe; and this [teaching] is that of R. Meir who holds that the first tithe is forbidden to non-priests.[9]

Come and hear: Since R. Hiyya b. Rab of Difti has learned, ‘An uncircumcised is forbidden to eat of both tithes’, is not one the tithe of the corn and the other the tithe of the cattle! — Here also the first tithe was meant and the ruling is that of R. Meir.

Come and hear: ‘An onan is forbidden to eat of tithe but is permitted to eat terumah, and [to engage] in the [preparation of] the red heifer;[10] a tebul yom[11] is forbidden to eat terumah, but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, and to eat tithe; and he who was still short of atonement[12] is forbidden [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer, but is permitted to eat terumah and tithe'. Now, if it were so,[13] it should have been stated, 'The uncircumcised is forbidden to eat terumah but is permitted [to engage] in [the preparation of] the red heifer[14] and to eat tithe'![15] — This represents the view of a Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who includes the uncircumcised, like the unclean, in the prohibition.[16] As it was taught: Any man soever[17] includes the uncircumcised.

Who is the Tanna who differs from R. Akiba?[18] — It is the Tanna who [is in disagreement with] R. Joseph the Babylonian. For it was taught: The burning[19] by an onan or by one who is still short of atonement is valid; but R. Joseph the Babylonian said: That of the onan is valid but that of him who is short of atonement is not valid.[20]

R. Isaac also is of the opinion that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe. For R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that the uncircumcised is forbidden to eat [second] tithe? 'Thereof' was stated in respect of [the] tithe,[21] and 'thereof' was also stated in respect of the paschal lamb;[21] as the paschal lamb, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, is forbidden to the uncircumcised, so is [the] tithe, in respect of which 'thereof' was used, forbidden to the uncircumcised. Is it[22] free for deduction? For if it is not free, it could be objected: The Paschal lamb is rightly subject to the restriction[23] since one may incur in respect of it the penalties for piggul,[24] nothar'' and levitical uncleanness![25] — It is indeed free for the deduction. Which[26] is free? Raba replied in the name of R. Isaac: 'Thereof' is written three times in connection with the paschal lamb.[27] One is required for the paschal lamb itself;[28] one for the analogy;[29] and as to the third, according to him who maintains that Scripture intended[30] a positive precept to follow a negative[31] one,[32] 'thereof' was written [a second time],[33] because nothar was written [a second time];[33] and according to him who maintains [that the repetition of until the morning[34] was intended] to allow a second morning for its burning,[35] 'thereof' was written [a second time],[36] because until the morning[34] had to be written [a second time]. Also, in connection with tithe, 'thereof' was written three times. One is required for its own purpose;[37] one is required for the deduction which R. Abbahu made in the name of R. Johanan;[38] and the third is required for the exposition made by Resh Lakish. For Resh Lakish stated in the name of R. Simya: Whence is it deduced that second tithe which has become levitically unclean may be used for anointing? It is said, Nor have I given thereof for the dead,[39] only for a dead man have I not given, but I have given for a living man in the same manner as for the dead. Now, what is it that may be equally applied to the living and to the dead? You must say that it is anointing.[40] Mar Zutra demurred: It[39] might be suggested to refer to the purchase for the dead of a coffin and shrouds![41] — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: 'Thereof' means of the tithe itself.[42] R. Ashi replied: Nor have I given[39] must be analogous to I have not eaten,[39] as there[43] it refers to the tithe itself so here also[44] it must refer to the tithe itself. But still it[45] is free, however, in one direction only![46] [The analogy is] quite satisfactory according to him who maintains that deduction may be made [even in such a case]. and may not be refuted.[47] According to him, however, who is of the opinion that deduction may be made but also refuted, what can be said?[48] — R. Abbahu's deduction[49] may be inferred from the text cited in the statement which R. Nahman made in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha. For R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: What was meant by the Scriptural text, And I, behold, I have given thee[50] the charge of My heave-offerings?[51] Scripture speaks of two kinds of terumah. One, clean terumah, and the other, unclean terumah; and concerning these the All Merciful said, 'It shall be thine,[50] even for burning under your dish.'[52]

AND ALL LEVITICALLY UNCLEAN PERSONS etc. Whence is this deduced? — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Ishmael: Scripture stated, What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath an issue etc.[53] Now, what is it that is equally applicable to all the seed[1] of Aaron? You must say that it is terumah.[2] But might it not be assumed to refer to the breast and the shoulder?[3] — [These are] not [permitted] to [a woman] who returns.[4] But terumah also is not permitted to a halalah![5] — A halalah is not regarded as of the seed of Aaron.[6] And whence is it inferred that until he be clean[7] means ‘until sunset’,[8] perhaps it means, ‘until the atonement is brought’? — This cannot be entertained. For a Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael [taught] that Scripture[7] speaks of a zab[9] who noticed only two issues, and of a leper while under observation,[10] both being cases similar to that of one who is unclean by the dead;[7] as he who is unclean by the dead[7] is not liable to bring an atonement so are these[11] such as are not liable to bring an atonement.[12] Let it be said, then, that this[13] applies only to those who are not liable to bring an atonement, but that for those who are liable to an atonement,[14] purification is incomplete until the atonement has been brought! Furthermore, in respect of what we learned, ‘If he performed the prescribed ablution and came up from his bathing he may eat of the [second] tithe; after sunset he may eat terumah; and after he has brought his atonement he may also eat of the holy food’;[15] whence, it may also be asked, are these laws derived? — Raba replied in the name of R. Hisda: Three Scriptural texts are recorded: It is written, And shall not eat of the holy things, unless he bathe his flesh in water,[16] implying if he bathed, however, he is clean. It is also written, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and afterwards he may eat of the holy things.[17] And finally, it s written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean.[18] How, [then, are these contradictory conditions[19] to be reconciled]?[20] The first refers to [second] tithe; the second to terumah, and the third to holy food. Might not these be reversed?[21] It is reasonable that terumah should be subject to the greater restriction, since[22] it is also subject to the restrictions of the death penalty,[23] the fifth,[24] it cannot be redeemed,[25] and is also forbidden to the non-priest.[26] On the contrary; [second] tithe might be regarded as subject to the greater restriction, since it[27] has to be brought to the appointed place,[28] requires confession,[29] is forbidden to an onan, must not be burned[30] [even] when unclean, the penalty of flogging is incurred for eating it when it is unclean,[31] and it is also subject to the law of removal![32] — The penalty of death, nevertheless, is of the greatest severity. Raba said: Apart from the fact that the death penalty is of the greatest severity it could not be said so;[33] for Scripture stated, soul.[34] Now, what is it that is equally [permitted] to every soul? You must admit that it is tithe.[35] Still, this[36] might apply only to one who is not liable to bring an atonement;[37] but where a man is liable to an atonement it might be said that [purification is not complete] until he has brought the atonement! — Abaye replied: Two Scriptural texts are recorded in the case of a woman in childbirth.[38] It is written, Until the days of her purification be fulfilled,[39] as soon as her days are fulfilled she is clean; and it is also written, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,’[40] how, [then, are the two to be reconciled]?[41] The former applies to terumah, the latter to holy food.[42]

But might not these be reversed?[43] — It stands to reason that holy food should be subject to the greater restriction,[44] since it is also subject to the restrictions of[45] piggul[46] nothar,[46] sacrifice, me'ilah,[46] kareth,[46] and is also forbidden to an onan.[46] On the contrary, terumah should be subject to the greater restriction,[47] since it is also subject to the restrictions[48] of[45] the death penalty,[49] the fifth,[50] it cannot be redeemed,[51] and is also forbidden to the non-priest![52] — Those[53] are more in number.

Raba said: Apart from the fact that those[53] are more in number this[54] could not be maintained. For Scripture stated, And the priest shall make atonement for her, and she shall be clean,[55] which implies that [until that moment] she was unclean. Now, were it to be assumed that this text[56] speaks of holy food,[57] the text, And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten[58] should apply to it![59] It must, therefore, be concluded that the text[60] speaks of terumah.

R. Shisha son of R. Idi demurred: How could it be said that the law of terumah was prescribed in this text?[60] Surely it was taught: [From the text]. Speak unto the children of Israel.[61] one would only learn [that these laws[62] are applicable to] the children of Israel; whence, however, is one to infer that they also apply to a proselyte or an emancipated slave? Scripture consequently stated,[63] Woman.[64] Now, if it were to be assumed that the text speaks of terumah, are a proselyte and an emancipated slave, [it may be asked,] permitted to eat terumah![65] Said Raba: But does it[66] not?[67]

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 75a

Surely it is written,[1] She shall touch no hallowed thing[2] [which] includes terumah![3] The fact, however, is that Scripture enumerated a number of distinct subjects.[4] Now what need was there for three distinct texts[5] in respect of terumah! — They are all required. For were terumah to be deduced from Until he be clean,[6] it would not be known whereby,[7] hence did the All Merciful write, And when the sun is down, he shall be clean.[8] And if the All Merciful had written only And when the sun is down,[8] it might have been assumed [to apply to such a person] as is not liable to bring a sacrifice, but in the case of one who is liable it might have been presumed that cleanness is not effected before he has brought his atonement, hence the All Merciful wrote, Until. . . be fulfilled.[9] And had the All Merciful written only, Until . . . be fulfilled,[10] it might have been presumed that cleanness may be effected even without ablution, hence did the All Merciful write, Until he be clean.[6]

According. however, to that Tanna who disagrees with the Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael, maintaining that the text[6] speaks of a zab who had three attacks of gonorrhoea and of a confirmed leper,[11] and that the deduction from Until he be clean[6] is ‘until he brings his atonement,’[12] what need was there for two texts[13] in respect of holy food? — [They are both] required. For had the All Merciful written about the woman after childbirth only,[14] the law[15] might have been said to apply to her only because her uncleanness is of long duration,[16] but not to a zab. And had the All Merciful written the law[17] in connection with a zab only,[18] it might have been assumed to apply to him only since his uncleanness does not automatically cease,[19] but not to a woman after childbirth.[20] [Hence both texts were] necessary.

What was the need[21] for the text, It must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even?[22] — R. Zera replied: In respect of touch;[23] as it was taught: And it shall be unclean[24] might have been taken to refer to all cases,[25] hence it was stated, Then shall it be clean.[26] And if only Then shall it be clean[26] had been stated it might have been assumed to refer to all cases,[27] hence it was stated, And it shall be unclean.[28] How then [are the two to be reconciled]? The one[29] refers to [second] tithe and the other[30] to terumah. But might not the deduction be reversed? — It stands to reason that as the eating of terumah is more restricted than the eating of tithe, so shall the touching of terumah be more restricted than the touching of tithe.

If you prefer I might say that the prohibition against the touching of terumah[31] is deduced from the following. It was taught:[32] She shall touch no hallowed thing,[33] is a warning against its consumption.[34] Perhaps it is not so, but against touching it? It was stated, She shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary;[33] the hallowed thing is thus compared to the sanctuary; as [an offence against] the sanctuary involves loss of life,[35] so [must the offence against] the hallowed thing be such as involves loss of life, while in respect of touch no loss of life is involved; and the reason [why eating] was expressed by a term denoting touch is to indicate that touching and eating are equally [forbidden].[36]

[A PRIEST WHO IS] WOUNDED IN HIS STONES etc. Who is it that taught: A woman subject to a pentateuchally forbidden cohabitation[37] may eat terumah?[38] — R. Eleazar replied: This question is the subject of a dispute, and the ruling here is that of R. Eleazar and R. Simeon.[39] R. Johanan said: [The ruling here] may even be that of R. Meir,[39] the circumstances here being different, since the woman has already been eating.[40] And R. Eleazar? — The argument, ‘since she has already been eating’ cannot be entertained; for should you not admit this,[41] a daughter of an Israelite who was married to a priest and whose husband subsequently died, should also be permitted to eat terumah since she has already been eating it.[42] And R. Johanan? — There,[43] his kinyan had completely lapsed;[44] here, however, his kinyan did not lapse.[45]

WHAT IS TERMED A PEZU'A? Our Rabbis taught: What is termed a pezu'a dakkah? A man both of whose stones were wounded or even only one of them; even though they were only punctured, crushed, or simply defective. Said R. Ishmael son of R. Johanan b. Beroka: I heard from the mouth of the Sages at the Vineyard[46] at Jabneh that one having only one stone is a natural born eunuch[47] and is, therefore, a fit person. How could it be said that such a person is a natural born eunuch![48] — Say rather, he is like a natural born eunuch and is, therefore, fit.[49]

Is [a man whose stones are] punctured incapable of procreation? Surely, a man once climbed up a palm tree and a thorn pierced his stones, [his semen] issued like a thread of pus, and, [despite the accident], he begat children! — In that case, as a matter of fact, Samuel sent word to Rab, telling him, ‘Institute enquiries respecting the parentage of his children’.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: A man whose stones have been injured by a supernatural agency[1] is regarded as a fit person.[2] Said Raba: This is the reason why the Scriptural text reads, Who is wounded[3] and not ‘the wounded’.[4]

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded . . . shall not enter[3] and it was also said, A bastard shall not enter,’[5] as the latter is the result of human action, so is the former the result of human action.[6]

Raba stated: Wounded[3] applies to all,[7] crushed[3] applies to all,[7] and cut off[8] applies to all.[9] ‘Wounded applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords of the stones were injured. ‘Crushed applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were crushed. ‘Cut off applies to all’: Whether the membrum, the stones or the spermatic cords were cut off.

A certain Rabbi asked Raba: Whence is it inferred that the expression pezu'a dakkah[8] refers to an injury in the privy parts; might it not be said to refer to the head? The other replied: As no number of generations is mentioned,[10] it may be inferred that the reference is to the privy parts.[11] But is it not possible that the reason why no number of generations is given in this case is because only he himself[12] is forbidden,[13] while his son and the son of his son are permitted! — [This must be] similar to the case of him whose membrum is cut off; as the latter involves the privy parts, so must the former involve those parts.

And whence is it inferred that the injury of the keruth shafekah[14] himself involves his privy parts? Might it not be one involving his lips![15] — Shafekah[16] is written, implying, ‘at the spot where it discharges’,[17] But might it not refer to one's nose? — It is not written, ‘[Cut] at the organ that discharges’, but ‘a cut organ that discharges’; thus implying that organ which in consequence of a cut discharges, and in the absence of a cut does not discharge but flows out. This excludes the nose which in either case[18] emits a discharge.[19]

In a Baraitha it was taught: It was said in Scripture. He who is wounded in his stones shall not enter,[8] and it was also said. A bastard shall not enter,[20] as the latter refers to the privy parts, so does the former refer to the privy parts.

In a case where a puncture beginning below the corona terminated[21] at the other end of it above the corona, R. Hiyya b. Abba desired to declare the sufferer as fit.[22] Said R. Assi to him: Thus ruled R. Joshua b. Levi, ‘[A perforation of] any size in the corona constitutes a bar [against fitness]’.

IF, HOWEVER, ANY PART OF THE CORONA REMAINED etc. Rabina, while sitting [at his studies], raised the following question: Must the HAIR'S BREADTH of which they spoke extend over the entire circumference thereof or only over its greater part? — ‘The HAIR'S BREADTH’, said Rabbah[23] Tosfa'ah to Rabina, must extend over the greater part of it and towards its upper section’.[24]

R. Huna ruled: If it[25] is cut away like a reed pen it constitutes no disqualification; if like a gutter[26] it causes disqualification. For in the latter case the air penetrates;[27] in the former it does not. R. Hisda, however, ruled: [If the cut was] in the shape of a gutter no disqualification is constituted; if it had the shape of a reed pen disqualification is constituted. For in the first case friction may be produced; in the latter it cannot.

Raba said: It is reasonable to adopt the view of R. Huna that in the latter case the air penetrates while in the former it does not. For in regard to friction it is only like a bung in a cask.[28]

Said Rabina to Meremar: Thus said Mar Zutra in the name of R. Papa, ‘The law is that no disqualification is constituted whether the corona was cut away like a reed pen or like a gutter He raised, however, the question. [whether such a cut must be] below the corona or may even be above it?[24] — It is obvious that it may even be above it; for were it to be below the corona, the man would be regarded as fit even if the entire membrum there had been cut off. Rabina, however,[29] only desired to test Meremar.

Such an incident[30] once occurred at Matha Mehasia, and R. Ashi arranged for the corona to be cut into the shape of a reed pen, and then declared the man to be fit. It once happened at Pumbeditha that a man had his semen duct blocked, and the discharge of the semen made its way through the urinal duct. R. Bibi b. Abaye intended to declare the man fit. R. Papi, however, said to him, ‘Because you are yourselves frail beings you speak frail words;[1] through its proper duct it fertilizes but when not passing through its proper duct it does not fertilize.’

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If it had a small perforation which was closed up, the man is deemed to be unfit if the wound re-opens when semen is emitted, but if it does not re-open the man is regarded as fit.

In respect of this ruling Raba raised the question: Where? If the perforation is below the corona,[2] [the man should remain fit] even if it were cut off! — It means, in the corona itself. So it was also stated elsewhere: R. Mari b. Mar said in the name of Mar Ukba in the name of Samuel: If a hole that has been made in the corona itself is closed, the man is disqualified if it re-opens when semen is emitted; but if it does not [re-open the man is deemed to be] fit.

Raba the son of Rabbah sent to R. Joseph: Will our Master instruct us how to proceed.[3] The other replied: Warm barley bread is procured, and placed upon the man's anus. Thereby the flow of semen sets in, and the effect can be observed. Said Abaye: Is everybody like our father Jacob concerning whom it is written, My might, and the first-fruits of my strength,[4] because he never before experienced the emission of semen![5] — No, said Abaye, coloured garments[6] are dangled before him.[7] Said Raba: Is everybody then like Barzillai the]Gileadite![8] — In fact it is obvious that the original answer is to be maintained.

Our Rabbis taught: If it[9] was punctured [the man is regarded as] unfit, because the flow is sluggish.[10] If it was closed up [he is deemed to be] fit, because he is then capable of production. And this is a case where the unfit may return to his former state of fitness. What does the expression ‘this’ exclude? — It excludes the case where a membrane was formed on the lungs in consequence of a wound; since such cannot be regarded as a proper membrane.[11]

R. Idi b. Abin sent the following question to Abaye: How are we to proceed?[12] — A grain of barley is to be procured wherewith the spot[13] is lacerated.[14] Tallow is rubbed in, and a big ant, procured for the purpose, is allowed to bite in, and its head is severed.[15] It must be a grain of barley; an iron instrument would cause inflammation. This procedure, furthermore, applies only to a small perforation; a large one would peel off.

Rabbah son of R. Huna stated: A man who urinates at two points is an unfit person.[16]

Said Raba: The law is in agreement neither with the view of the son nor with that of the father. As to the son, there is the statement just mentioned. As to the father? — Since R. Huna said: Women who practise lewdness with one another are disqualified from marrying a priest.[17] And even according to R. Eleazar, who stated that an unmarried man who cohabited with an unmarried woman with no matrimonial intention renders her thereby a harlot, this disqualification ensues only it, the case of a man;[18] but when it is that of a woman[19] the action is regarded as mere obscenity.

MISHNAH. A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE. THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY,[20] AS IT IS SAID IN SCRIPTURE, HE THAT IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES OR HATH HIS PRIVY MEMBRUM CUT OFF SHALL NOT ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY OF THE LORD.[21]

GEMARA. R. Shesheth was asked: May a priest who is wounded in his stones marry a proselyte or an emancipated slave;[22] does he[23] remain in his state of holiness and is consequently forbidden[24] or does he not remain in his state of holiness and is consequently permitted?[24] — R. Shesheth replied: You have learned this [law in the following]. ‘An Israelite who is wounded in his stones is permitted to marry a nethinah’.[25] Now, were it to be assumed that he[26] retains his holiness, the text, Neither shalt thou make marriages with them[27] should be applicable here.[28] Said Raba: Is the law there[29] due at all to sanctity or non-sanctity? [It is merely due to] the possibility that he[30] might beget a child who[31] would proceed to worship idols. This, then, is applicable only when they[32] are still idol worshippers. When, however, they are converted, they are undoubtedly permitted,[33] and it was only the Rabbis who placed them[34] under a prohibition as a preventive measure.[35] But such a preventive measure was instituted by the Rabbis in respect of those only who are capable of procreation, not in respect of those who are incapable of procreation.[36]

Now, then,[37] a bastard also, since he is capable of procreation,[38] should also be forbidden,[39] while in fact, we have learned, ‘Bastards and nethinim may intermarry with one another’![40] — In fact [this is the explanation:] the Rabbis instituted a preventive measure only in the case of the fit but not in that of the unfit.[41]

Subsequently Raba stated: What I said[42] is of no consequence. For while they are still idolaters their marriages are invalid; only when they are converted are their marriages valid.[43]

R. Joseph raised an objection: And Solomon became allied to Pharaoh King of Egypt by marriage, and took Pharaoh's daughter![44] — He caused her to be converted. But, surely, no proselytes were accepted either in the days of David or in the days of Solomon![45] — Was there any reason for it[46] but [that the motive of the proselytes might be the benefits] of the royal table?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 76b

Such a woman[1] obviously was in no need of it.[2] But let the inference[3] be drawn from the fact that she[1] was an Egyptian of the first generation![4] And were you to reply that those[5] had already departed, and these[6] are others;[7] surely, it may be pointed out, it was taught: R. Judah stated, ‘Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte, was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian woman of the first generation; I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian of the second generation in order that my grandson may be enabled to enter into the congregation of Israel!’[8] R. Papa replied: Are we to take our directions from Solomon! Solomon did not marry at all,[9] for it is written, Of the nations concerning which the Lord said unto the Children of Israel: ‘Ye shall not go among them, neither shall they come among you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods’; Solomon did cleave unto them in love.[10] The expression. And he become allied. . . in marriage,[11] however, presents a difficulty![12] — On account of his excessive love for her. Scripture regards him as if he had become allied by marriage to her. Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Surely we learned A MAN WHO IS WOUNDED IN HIS STONES, AND ONE WHOSE MEMBRUM VIRILE IS CUT OFF, ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY A PROSELYTE OR AN EMANCIPATED SLAVE, [from which it follows] that they are forbidden to marry a nethinah![13] — The other replied: According to your view,[14] read the final clause, THEY ARE ONLY FORBIDDEN TO ENTER INTO THE ASSEMBLY, [from which it follows] that they are permitted to marry a nethinah! But [the fact is that] no inference may be drawn from this Mishnah.

MISHNAH. AN AMMONITE AND A MOABITE ARE FORBIDDEN[15] AND THEIR PROHIBITION IS FOR EVER[16] , THEIR WOMEN, HOWEVER, ARE PERMITTED AT ONCE.[17] AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN[18] ONLY UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION.[19] WHETHER THEY ARE MALES OR FEMALES. R. SIMEON, HOWEVER, PERMITS THEIR WOMEN FORTHWITH.[17] SAID R. SIMEON: THIS LAW[20] MIGHT BE INFERRED A MINORI AD MAJUS: IF WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN FOR ALL TIME[21] THE FEMALES ARE PERMITTED FORTHWITH,[22] HOW MUCH MORE SHOULD THE FEMALES BE PERMITTED FORTHWITH WHERE THE MALES ARE FORBIDDEN UNTIL THE THIRD GENERATION ONLY.[23] THEY REPLIED: IF THIS[20] IS AN HALACHAH,[24] WE SHALL ACCEPT IT; BUT IF IT IS ONLY AN INFERENCE,[25] AN OBJECTION CAN BE POINTED OUT. HE REPLIED: NOT SO.[26] [BUT IN FACT] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.

GEMARA. Whence are these laws inferred? — R. Johanan replied: Scripture stated, And when Sail saw David go forth against the Philistine, he said into Abner, the captain of the host: ‘Abner, whose son is this youth’? And Abner said: ‘As thy soul liveth, O King, I cannot tell’.[27] But did he[28] not know him? Surely it is written, And he loved him greatly; and he became his armour bearer![29] — He rather made the inquiry concerning his father. But did he not know his father? Surely it is written, And the man was an old man in the days of Saul, stricken in years among them;[30] and Rab or, it might be said, R. Abba, stated that this referred to the father of David, Jesse. who came in with an army[31] and went out with an army![31] — It is this that Saul meant: Whether he descended from Perez,[32] or from Zerah.[33] If he descended from Perez he would be king, for a king breaks[34] for himself a way and no one can hinder him. If, however, he is descended from Zerah he would only be an important man.[35] What is the reason why he gave instructions that enquiry be made concerning him? — Because it is written, And Saul clad David with his apparel.[36] being of the same size as his,[37] and about Saul it is written, From his shoulders and upward he was higher than any of the people.[38] Doeg the Edomite then said to him,[39] ‘Instead of enquiring whether he is fit to be king or not, enquire rather whether he is permitted to enter the assembly or not’! ‘What is the reason’?[40] ‘Because he is descended from Ruth the Moabitess’. Said Abner to him,[41] ‘We learned: An Ammonite,[42] but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,[42] but not a Moabitess![43] But in that case[44] a bastard[45] would’ imply: But not a female bastard?’ — ‘It is written mamzer [Which implies] anyone objectionable’.[46] ‘Does then[47] Egyptian[48] exclude the Egyptian woman’? — ‘Here[49] it is different, since the reason for the Scriptural text is explicitly stated: Because they met you not with bread and with water;[50] it is customary for a man to meet [wayfarers]; It is not, however, customary for a woman to meet [them]’.[51]

He[52] remained silent, Thereupon. the King said.’[53] ‘Inquire thou whose son the stripling is’.[54] Elsewhere he calls him youth;[55] and here[54] he calls him, stripling![56] — It is this that he implied, ‘You have overlooked[57] an halachah,’ go and enquire at the college!’ On enquiry, he was told: An Ammonite,[58] but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,[58] but not a Moabitess.

As, however, Doeg submitted to them all those objections[1] and they eventually remained silent, he desired to make a public announcement against him.[2] Presently [an incident occurred]: Now Amasa was the son of a man, whose name was Ithna the Israelite, that went in to Abigal[3] the daughter of Nahash,[4] but elsewhere it is written, Jether the Ishmaelite![5] This teaches, Raba explained, that he girded on his sword like an Ishmaelite and exclaimed, 'Whosoever will not obey the following halachah will be stabbed with the sword; I have this tradition from the Beth din of Samuel the Ramathite: An Ammonite but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite, but not a Moabitess'![6] Could he, however, be trusted?[7] Surely R. Abba stated in the name of Rab: Whenever a learned man gives directions[8] on a point of law, and such a point comes up [for a practical decision], he is obeyed if his statement was made[9] before the event;[10] but if it was not so made he is not obeyed! Here the case was different, since Samuel and his Beth din were still living.[11]

The difficulty,[12] however, still remains! — The following[13] interpretation was given: All glorious is the king's daughter within.[14] In the West[15] it was explained. others quote it in the name of R. Isaac: Scripture said, And they said unto him: 'Where is Sarah thy wife?' etc.[16]

The question[17] is a matter in dispute between Tannaim: An Ammonite,[18] but not an Ammonitess; A Moabite,[18] but not a Moabitess. So R. Judah. R. Simeon, however, said: Because they met you not with bread and with water;[19] it is customary for a man to meet etc.[20]

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by, Thou hast loosed my bonds![21] David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, 'O Master of the world! Two bonds were fastened on me,[22] and you loosed them: Ruth the Moabitess[23] and Naamah the Ammonitess.[24]

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Many things hast Thou done, O Lord my God, even Thy wondrous works, and Thy thoughts toward us?[25] It is not written, 'toward me', but toward us. This teaches that Rehoboam[26] sat on the lap of David when the latter said to him. 'Those two Scriptural verses[27] were said concerning me and you.'[28]

Raba made the following exposition: What was meant by the Scriptural text, Then said I: 'Lo, I am come with the roll of a book which is prescribed for me'?[29] David said,[30] 'I thought I have come[31] only now; but I did not know that in the Roll of the Book[32] it was already[33] written about me'. For there it is written, That are found,[34] and here it is written. l have found[35] David My servant; with My holy oil have I anointed him.[36]

'Ulla said in the name of R. Johanan: The daughter of an Ammonite proselyte[37] is eligible to marry a priest. Said Raba b. 'Ulla to 'Ulla: In accordance with [whose view is your statement made]? If in accordance with that of R. Judah, he surely had stated that the daughter of a male proselyte is like the daughter of a male halal![38] And if in accordance with the view of R. Jose, your statement is self-evident,for surely he had stated: Even where a male proselyte had married a female proselyte his daughter is eligible to marry a priest![39] And were you to reply that this[40] applies to such as are fit to enter the assembly[41] but not to this man who[42] is not fit to enter the assembly[43] whence [it may he asked] is this distinction [inferred]! — It is inferred from the case of a High Priest who married a widow.[44] [But it may be objected] the marriage between a High Priest and a widow is different, since his cohabitation constitutes a transgression![45] — [Then the case of the] halal proves it?[46] [But it may be objected that] a halal is different since his formation was in sin![47] — [Then the case of the] High Priest[48] proves it; and thus the argument will go round;[49] though the aspect of the one is unlike that of the other and the aspect of the other is unlike that of the first, their common characteristic is that either of them is unlike the majority of the assembly[50] and his daughter[51] is ineligible,[52] so here also since he[53] is unlike the majority of the assembly,[54] his daughter should be ineligible.[52] [But it may again be objected] their common characteristic[55] is different, since it also involves an aspect of sin![56] Did you possibly[57] speak of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite,[58] [informing us that], though his cohabitation is an act of transgression, his daughter is nevertheless eligible? — The other replied: Yes; for when Rabin came[59] he reported in the name of R. Johanan on the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte[60] and the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation[60] that R. Johanan declared her eligible[61] while Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible.[61]

'Resh Lakish maintained that she was ineligible', for he infers this case from that of a High Priest who married a widow. 'R. Johanan declared her eligible'.

And thus the question remains, what need was there for R. Johanan to teach the evident case of the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 77b

as R. Zakkai recited[1] in the presence of R. Johanan, ‘[The expression,] But a virgin of his own people shall he take to wife,[2] includes a woman who is fundamentally a proselyte[3] who is eligible to marry a priest’, and the other said to him, ‘I learn: ["Since. instead of] ‘His people’. Of his people [was written]. a virgin who descended from two peoples[4] is also included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!’ Now. what is meant by ‘two peoples’? If it be suggested that it refers to the case of an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess. and that these are described as of ‘two peoples’ because the males are forbidden and the females are permitted, such a case [it may be objected] is the same as that of a fundamental proselyte! Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite.[5]

Others say: He said to him,[6] 'I learn: ["Since, instead of] 'His people'. Of his people[2] [was written], a virgin who is descended from two peoples[7] and from a people consisting of two groups of people[8] is included", and you mention only a fundamental proselyte and no other!'[9]

According to this latter version, however,[10] whence is it inferred that the daughter of an Egyptian of the second generation[11] is eligible to marry a priest? And should you suggest that this might be inferred from the case of an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite, [it may be objected that] the case of the Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite is different since the Ammonite females are eligible.[12] — An Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation might prove it.[13] But [it may be objected that the case] of an Egyptian of the second generation who married an Egyptian woman of the second generation is different since his cohabitation constitutes no transgression? — An Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite might prove it,[14] and thus the argument would go round etc.[15]

Said R. Joseph: This[16] then it is that I heard Rab Judah expounding on 'His people. Of his people' and I did not [at the time] understand what he meant.[17]

When R. Samuel b. Judah came, he stated: Thus he[18] recited in his[19] presence: An Ammonite woman is eligible;[20] her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible; and her daughter that is born from an Ammonite is eligible. This, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible. [On hearing this] the other said to him, 'Go recite this outside. For your statement that "an Ammonite woman is eligible" [is quite acceptable, since] Ammonite[21] excludes the Ammonitess. That "her son that is born from an Ammonite is ineligible" [is also correct] since he is in fact an Ammonite. In what respect, however, is "her daughter that was born from an Ammonite eligible"? If in respect of entering the assembly, is there, now that her mother is eligible. any need to mention her! The eligibility must consequently be in respect of marrying a priest. [But then what of the statement], "this, however, applies only to an Ammonite and an Ammonitess who were converted; but her daughter that was born from an Ammonite is ineligible"? What is meant by "her daughter that was born of an Ammonite"? If it be suggested that it refers to an Ammonite who married an Ammonitess,[22] then this is the same case as that of a fundamental proselyte![23] Consequently it must refer to an Ammonite who married the daughter of an Israelite'.[24] [Concerning this] he told him. 'Go recite this outside'.[25]

AN EGYPTIAN AND AN EDOMITE ARE FORBIDDEN ONLY etc. What is the OBJECTION?[26] — Raba b. Bar Hana replied in the name of R. Johanan: Because it may be said that the case of forbidden relatives proves it,[27] since in respect of them the prohibition extends to the third generation only[28] [and is nevertheless applicable to] both males and females.[29] [But can it not be argued that the case] of forbidden relatives is different.[30] since in their case the penalty of kareth is involved?[31] — [The case of the] bastard[32] proves it. [But can it not be suggested that the case] of the bastard is different[33] since he is forever ineligible to enter the congregation?[34] — [The case of] forbidden relatives[35] proves it. Thus the argument could go round.[36] The aspects of one are unlike those of the other and the aspects of the other are unlike those of the first. Their common characteristic, however, is that both males and females are equally forbidden; so might one also include the Egyptian man and the Egyptian woman so that in their case also both males and females should be equally forbidden.[37] This common characteristic, however, [it may be retorted,] is different.[33] since in one respect it also involves kareth.[38] And the Rabbis?[39] They infer it[40] from the halal[41] who is the offspring of a union between those who through it, are guilty of transgressing a positive commandment;[42] and in accordance with the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob.[43] Then what is meant by, NOT SO?[44] — It is this that he said to them: As far as I am concerned, I do not accept the view of R. Eliezer b. Jacob;[45] but according to you, since your view is that of R. Eliezer b. Jacob,[46] [my reply is that] IT IS AN HALACHAH THAT I AM REPORTING.[47]

It was taught: R. Simeon said to them,[48] ‘I am reporting an halachah and, moreover, a Scriptural text supports my view, [it having been written] sons[49] but not daughters’.

Our Rabbis taught: Sons,[49] but not daughters; so R. Simeon. R. Judah, however, said: Behold it is said in Scripture. The sons of the third generation that are born unto them;[50] Scripture has made them dependent on birth.[51]

R. Johanan said: Had not R. Judah declared, ‘Scripture made them dependent on birth’,[52] he would not have found his hands and feet at the house of study.[53] For as a Master said that a congregation of proselytes is also called an assembly.[54]

---

(1) I.e., from this statement it is deduced what was R. Johanan's view.

(2) Lev. XXI, 14.

(3) Or ‘a proselyte of her own status’ (Jast.). who was a proselyte from her birth, i.e., when her father and mother were converted after their marriage and before her birth. Where an Ammonite proselyte marries the daughter of an Israelite, the offspring of such a union is not fundamentally a proselyte and is ineligible to marry a priest since the union was a forbidden one.

(4) This is explained presently

(5) Thus it is proved (v. supra n. 4) that, in the opinion of R. Johanan, such a case is eligible.

(6) R. Johanan to R. Zakkai.

(7) From the daughter of an Israelite who married an Ammonite proselyte.

(8) I.e., whose father is the Ammonite proselyte, a descendant of a people whose males are forbidden and whose females are permitted.

(9) According to this version, unlike the former where it was arrived at by inference. R. Johanan's view is explicitly stated.

(10) Since the case of the Ammonite only was mentioned. (Cf. supra n. 2).

(11) Who married the daughter of an Israelite and thus contracted a forbidden union.

(12) While the Egyptian females, like the man, are forbidden for three generations.

(13) His daughter is permitted since she belongs to the third generation, although she also belongs to the Egyptian people whose males and females are equally forbidden. As this latter restriction is no bar in this case it should form no bar in the case of an Egyptian of the second generation who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(14) His daughter is eligible though his marriage constitutes a transgression.

(15) Continued as supra 77a.

(16) The ruling permitting the daughter of an Ammonite proselyte who married the daughter of an Israelite.

(17) R. Joseph, as a result of a serious illness, lost his memory and only dimly recollected some of the rulings and expositions of his teachers.

(18) R. Zakkai. V. supra.

(19) R. Johanan's.

(20) This is explained presently.

(21) Deut. XXIII, 4.

(22) Who were converted prior to the birth of their daughter.

(23) Who, as stated in the first clause, is eligible!

(24) The daughter being ineligible because of the forbidden marriage of her parents.

(25) In such a case also the daughter is eligible as deduced supra from the expression, Of his people (Lev. XXI. 14) instead of ‘his people’.

(26) That can be advanced, according to the Rabbis, against R. Simeon's argument in our Mishnah.

(27) That R. Simeon's argument is untenable.

(28) Both in the ascending and the descending line.

(29) Similarly in the case of the Egyptian and the Edomite.

(30) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(31) Since they are subject to the one restriction (kareth) they are also subject to the other (equal prohibition of males and females). The case of the Egyptian and the Edomite, however, which does not involve kareth might not include the females either!

(32) Cohabitation with whom is not subject to the penalty of kareth, and both males and females are nevertheless equally subject to the prohibition.

(33) I.e., it is more restricted than that of marriage with an Egyptian etc.

(34) As he is subject to this restriction he is also subject to the other (cf. supra n. 1).

(35) Who are only forbidden to intermarry with each other, but are severally permitted to all the other members of the congregation.

(36) Should objection be raised against the case of the forbidden relatives, that of the bastard could be adduced as proof; and should objection be raised against that of the bastard, that of the forbidden relatives might be adduced as proof.

(37) This then, is the objection which the Rabbis could raise against R. Simeon's a minori argument.

(38) Even in the case of the bastard, kareth is involved as the penalty of his parents for the action which was the origin of his birth. In the case of the Egyptian and Edomite, however, there is no aspect whatsoever involving this penalty. The latter, therefore, cannot be deduced from the others.

(39) How could they still maintain their objection against R. Simeon's argument.

(40) The prohibition of the females.

(41) And not, as has previously been assumed, from the bastard.

(42) When, e.g., a High Priest married a seduced woman (cf. supra 60a) who is forbidden to him by virtue of the positive precept of Lev. XXI. 13.

(43) Who, contrary to the view of the Sages, regards such a child as halal (supra 59b and 60a). Thus it has been proved that even where no kareth is involved, both males and females (the halalah like the halal) are included in the prohibition. Similarly in the case of the Egyptians and the Edomites.

(44) The objection of the Rabbis is strong enough!

(45) Cf. supra p. 523. n. 13. ab. init., R. Simeon being of the opinion that the offspring of a union between those who are thereby guilty of transgressing a positive precept only is not regarded as a halal.

(46) And consequently you might derive the prohibition of the females from the law of the halal.

(47) And an objection is of no validity in the face of a definite tradition.

(48) The Rabbis of our Mishnah.

(49) בנים Deut. XXIII, 9.

(50) Ibid. emphasis on are born.

(51) Irrespective of sex. Had the law applied to males only the clause ‘that are born etc,’ should have been omitted.

(52) I.e., that the females also are forbidden.

(53) His position would have been untenable.

(54) The assembly of the Lord (cf. Deut. XXIII, 2, 3, 4, 9. and Kid. 73a.).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 78a

how[1] could an Egyptian of the second generation ever attain purity![2] But is not this possible when he transgressed and did marry one?[3] — Scripture[4] would not have written of a case of ‘when’.[5] Behold the case of the bastard which is one of ‘when’[6] and yet Scripture did write it![7] — It wrote of a ‘when’ [leading] to a prohibition;[8] it would not have written of a ‘when’ [if it led] to permissibility.[9] Behold the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife,[10] which involves a ‘when’ [leading] to a permitted act[11] and yet did Scripture write of it! — In that case it was written mainly for the purpose of the original prohibition.[12]

Our Rabbis taught: If the expression of sons[13] was used, why was also that of generations[13] used; and if that of generations was used, why also that of sons?[14] If the expression of ‘sons’ had been used and not that of ‘generations’[15] it might have been assumed that only the first and second son is forbidden but that the third[16] is permitted, the expression of ‘generations’[17] was, therefore, used. And had the expression of ‘generations’ only been used and not that of sons,[18] it might have been assumed that the precept was given only to those who stood at Mount Sinai,[19] the expression of sons’ was therefore used.[20] Unto them,[21] Count from them.[22] Unto them.[23] Be guided by the status of the ineligible among them.[24]

It was necessary [for Scripture] to write unto them,[25] and it was also necessary for it to write, That are born.[25] For had the All Merciful written only. ‘That are born’, it might have been presumed that the counting must begin from their children,[26] hence did the All Merciful write ‘Unto them’.[27] And had the All Merciful written only ‘Unto them’,[28] it might have been presumed that, where a pregnant Egyptian woman became a proselyte, she and her child are regarded as one generation. hence did the All Merciful write. ‘That are born’.[29]

It was, furthermore. necessary to write unto them[28] in this case,[30] and Unto him[31] in respect of the bastard. For had the All Merciful used the expression here only,[30] [the restriction[32] might have been assumed to apply to this case only], because the child descended from a tainted origin.[33] but not to a bastard, since he is descended from an untainted origin.[34] And had the All Merciful written the expression in respect of the bastard, [the restriction[32] might have been presumed to apply to him only]. because he is for all time unfit to enter into the assembly, but not in this case.[35] [Both texts were, therefore,] required.

Rabbah b. Bar Hana stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation, her son is [regarded as belonging to the] third generation. From this it is obvious that he[36] is of the opinion that the child is ascribed to him.[37]

R. Joseph raised an objection: R. Tarfon said, ‘Bastards may attain to purity. How? If a bastard married a female slave, their child is a slave. When, however, he[38] is emancipated he becomes a free man’.[39] This[40] clearly proves that the child is ascribed to her! — There it is different, because Scripture said, The wife and her children shall be her master's.[41]

Raba raised an objection: R. Judah related, ‘Menjamin, an Egyptian proselyte. was one of my colleagues among the disciples of R. Akiba, and he once told me: I am an Egyptian of the first generation and married an Egyptian wife of the first generation; and I shall arrange for my son to marry an Egyptian wife of the second generation in order that my grandson shall be eligible to enter the congregation’.[42] Now, if it could be assumed that the child is ascribed to his father, [he could have married a wife] even of the first generation![43] — The fact is that[44] R. Johanan said to the Tanna:[45] Read, ‘[a woman of the] first generation’.

When R. Dimi came[46] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: If an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian wife of the first generation. her son is [regarded as belonging to the] second generation. From this it is obvious that a child is ascribed to his mother.

Said Abaye to him: What then of the following statement of R. Johanan. ‘If a man set aside a pregnant beast as a sin-offering and it then gave birth, his atonement may be made, if he desires, with the beast itself, and, if he prefers, his atonement may be made with her young’.[47] This law would be intelligible if you admit that an embryo is not regarded as a part[48] of its mother, since this case would be similar to that of one who set aside as a security two sin-offerings,[49] in respect of which R. Oshaia had stated that a man who set aside two sin-offerings as a security[49] is to be atoned for with either of them, while the other goes to the pasture.[50] If you maintain, however, that an embryo is a part[51] of its mother, the former is like the young of a sin-offering,[52] and the young of a sin-offering is sent to die![53] The other remained silent. ‘Is it not possible’, the first said to him, ‘that there[54] it is different.[55] since it is written That are born,[56] Scripture made it dependent on birth’?[57] — ‘Clever man’,[58] the other replied, ‘I saw your chief[59] between the pillars[60] when R. Johanan gave the following traditional ruling: The reason[61] here is because it was written, That are born;[56] elsewhere, however, the child is ascribed to the father’.[62]

What, however, of the following statement of Raba. ‘If a pregnant gentile woman was converted, there is no need for her son to perform ritual immersion’.[63] Why[64] is there no need for him to perform immersion? Should you reply that it[65] is due to a ruling of R. Isaac; for R. Isaac stated: Pentateuchally [a covering of] the greater part,[66] if one objects to it,[67] constitutes legally an interposition,[68] and if one does not object to,[69] no legal interposition is constituted;[70]

(1) If Egyptian women were not included in the prohibition to enter the assembly.

(2) Entry into the assembly. Egyptian women proselytes being regarded, like Israelites, as an assembly (v. supra n. 12), no Egyptian male proselyte of the first or second generations would ever be permitted to marry them. How then, since he can marry neither a woman of Israel nor a proselyte of his own people, would he ever produce a third generation (v. Deut. XXIII, 9) that would be fit to enter the assembly?

surely [it may be retorted] R. Kahana stated: This applies only in respect of its greater part, but when the whole of it is effected a legal interposition is constituted![1] — The case of the embryo is different since its position[2] is that of its natural growth.[3]

When Rabina[4] came, he stated in the name of R. Johanan: Among the other nations follow the male.[5] If they are converted[6] follow the more tainted of the two.[7]

‘Among the other nations follow the male, as it was taught: Whence is it deduced that if one of the other nations[8] cohabited with a Canaanitish[9] woman and begat a son, that son may be purchased as a slave?[10] It is said, Moreover of the children of the strangers[11] that do sojourn among you, of them may ye buy.[12] As it might have been assumed that even if one of the Canaanites[9] had cohabited with one of the women of the other [gentile] nations[8] and begat a son, you may buy that son as a slave, it was explicitly stated, That they have begotten in your land;[12] only from those who were begotten[13] in your land, but not from those who dwell in your land.[14]

'If they are converted, follow the more tainted of the two'. In what case? If it be suggested that it refers to an Egyptian[15] who married an Ammonitess,[16] how could the expression 'the more tainted of the two', be applicable when Scripture explicitly said, An Ammonite,'[17] but not an Ammonitess?[18] — Rather, the reference is to an Ammonite[19] who married an Egyptian wife.[20] If [the child of such a marriage] is a male, he is ascribed to the Ammonite;[21] if it is a female, she is ascribed to the Egyptian.[22]

MISHNAH. BASTARDS AND NETHINIM[23] ARE INELIGIBLE,[24] AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES.

GEMARA. Resh Lakish said: A woman bastard is eligible[25] after ten generations. This is derived from an analogy between tenth,[26] and tenth[27] mentioned in respect of the Ammonite and the Moabite; as in the latter case the females are permitted[27] so are they permitted in the former case.[28] Should you suggest that as in the latter case eligibility begins forthwith so it does in the former case, [it may be replied] that the analogy can only be effective in respect of the generations after the tenth.[29] But, surely, we learned, BASTARDS AND NETHINIM ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME, WHETHER THEY BE MALES OR FEMALES![30] — This is no difficulty: One statement[31] is in agreement with him who holds[32] that a deduction is carried through in all respects,[33] while the other[34] is in agreement with him who maintains[32] that a deduction is restricted by its original basis.[35]

R. Eliezer was asked: What [is the legal position[36] of] a female bastard after ten generations? 'Were anyone to present to me', he replied, 'a third generation. I would declare it pure!' He is obviously of the opinion [that the stock of] a bastard does not survive.[37] So also did R. Huna state: A bastard's stock does not survive. Did we not learn, however, BASTARDS ARE INELIGIBLE, AND THEIR INELIGIBILITY IS FOR ALL TIME? — R. Zera replied: It was explained to me by Rab Judah that those who are known[38] survive;[39] those who are not known[38] do not survive; and those who are partly known and partly unknown survive for three generations but no longer.

A certain man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Ammi. and the latter made a public announcement that he was a bastard. As the other was bewailing the action,[40] [the Master] said to him: I have given you life.[41]

R. Hana b. Adda stated: David issued the decree of prohibition[42] against the nethinim,[43] for it is said, And the king called the Gibeonites,[44] and said unto them-now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel etc.[45]

Why did he issue the decree against them? — Because it is written. And there was a famine in the days of David three years. year after year.[46] In the first year he said to them, 'It is possible that there are idolaters among you, for it is written, And serve other gods, and worship them . . . and he will shut up the heaven, so that there shall be no rain etc.'[47] They instituted enquiries but could not discover any idolaters. In the second year he said to them, 'There may be transgressors among you, for it is written, Therefore the showers have been withheld and there hath been no latter rain; yet thou hadst a harlot's forehead etc.'[48] Enquiries were made but none was found. In the third year he said to them, 'There might be among you men who announce specified sums for charity in public but do not give them, as it is written, As vapours and wind without rain, so is he that boasteth himself of a false gift'.[49] Enquiries were made and none was found. 'The matter', he concluded, 'depends entirely upon me; Immediately, he sought the face of the Lord.[46] What does this mean? — Resh Lakish explained: He enquired of the Urim and Tummim.[50] How is this inferred? R. Eleazar replied: It is arrived at by an analogy between two occurrences of the expression of 'countenance of'; for here it is written, And David sought the countenance of the Lord,[46] and elsewhere it is written, Who shall enquire for him by the judgment of the Urim before the countenance of the Lord.[51] And the Lord said: ‘It is for Saul and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites’.[52] ‘For Saul’, because he was not mourned for in a proper manner; ‘and his bloody house, because he put to death the Gibeonites’. Where, however, do we find that Saul ‘put to death the Gibeonites’! The truth is that, as he killed the inhabitants of Nob, the city of the priests who were supplying them[53] with water and food, Scripture regards it as if he himself had killed them.

Justice is demanded for Saul because he was not properly mourned for, and justice is demanded because he put to death the Gibeonites?[54] — Yes; for Resh Lakish stated: What is meant by the Scriptural text, Seek ye the Lord, all ye humble of the earth, that have executed His ordinance?[55] Where there is his ordinance,[56] there are also his executions.[57]

David said: As to Saul, there have already elapsed

(29) Since in the case of the bastard the prohibition of the first ten generations was explicitly stated and includes, as the term mamzer connotes (v. supra 76b), both men and women, whereas the prohibition after ten generations in the case of bastards is not stated explicitly but derived on the basis of analogy from an Ammonite, in respect of whom ‘for ever’ is

As the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in one respect, it must also agree with it in all other respects, including eligibility of the females after the tenth generation, as Resh Lakish ruled. It is only in respect of the first ten generations which are explicitly forbidden in Scripture that deduction could not be made (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15).

(34) The ruling in our Mishnah.

(35) Lit., ‘judge from it and set it in its (original) place’, i.e., the rules of the case deduced limit the scope of the deduction. Though the case of the bastard is deduced from that of the Ammonite in respect of forbidding the former, like the latter, for all time, the exclusion of the females, though applicable to the latter, does not apply to the former, and female bastards (cf. supra p. 532, n. 15) remain, therefore, forbidden for all time.

the twelve months of the [first] year[1] and it would be unusual to arrange for his mourning now. As to the nethinim,[2] however, let them be summoned and we shall pacify them. Immediately[3] the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them . . . ‘What shall I do for you? and wherewith should I make atonement, that ye may bless the inheritance of the Lord’? And the Gibeonites said to him: ‘It is no matter of silver or gold between us and Saul, or his house,’ neither is it for us [to put] any man etc. . . . Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us and we will hang them up unto the Lord etc.’[4] . He tried to pacify them but they would not be pacified. Thereupon he said to them: This nation[5] is distinguished by three characteristics: They are merciful, bashful and benevolent. ‘Merciful’, for is is written, And shew thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee.[6] ‘Bashful’, for it is written, That His fear may be before you.[7] ‘Benevolent’, for it is written, That he may command his children and his household etc.[8] Only he who cultivates these three characteristics is fit to join this nation.[9]

But the king took the two sons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bore into Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she bore to Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite.[10] Why just these? — R. Huna replied: They[11] were made to pass before the Holy Ark. He whom the Ark retained [was condemned] to death and he whom the Ark did not retain was saved alive.

R. Hana b. Kattina raised an objection: But the king spared Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan the son of Saul![12] — He did not allow him to pass.[13] Was there favouritism then! — In fact he did let him pass and it retained him, but he invoked on his behalf divine mercy and it released him. But here, too, favouritism is involved![14] — The fact, however, is that he invoked divine mercy that the Ark should not retain him. But, surely, it is written, The fathers shall not be pit to death for the children etc.![15] — R. Hiyya b. Abba replied in the name of R. Johanan: It is better that a letter be rooted out of the Torah than that the Divine name shall be publicly profaned.[16]

And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harvest until water was poured upon them from heaven; and she suffered neither the birds of the air to rest on then by day, nor the beast of the field by night.[17] But, surely, it is written, His body shall not remain all night upon the tree![18] — R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Jehozadak: It is proper that a letter be rooted out of the Torah so that thereby the heavenly name shall be publicly hallowed. For passers-by were enquiring, ‘What kind of men are these?’ — ‘These are royal princes’ — ‘And what have they done?’ — ‘They laid their hands upon unattached[19] strangers’ — Then they exclaimed: ‘There is no nation in existence which one ought to join as much as this one. If [the punishment of] royal princes was so great. how much more that of common people; and if such [was the justice done for] unattached proselytes, how much more so for Israelites

A hundred and fifty thousand men immediately joined Israel; as it is said, And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bore burdens, and fourscore thousand that were hewers in the mountain.[20] Might not these have been Israelites? — This cannot be assumed, for it is written, But of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondservants.[21] But that[22] might have represented mere public service![23] — [The deduction,] however, [is made] from the following: And Solomon numbered all the strangers that were in the Land of Israel, etc. And they were found a hundred and fifty thousand etc. And he set threescore and ten thousand of them to bear burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountains.[24]

Was it David, however, who issued the decree of prohibition against the nethinim? Moses, surely, issued that decree, for it is written, from the hewer of thy wood to the drawer of thy water![25] — Moses issued a decree against that generation only[26] while David issued a decree against all generations.

But Joshua, in fact, issued the decree against them, for it is written, And Joshua made them that day hewers of wood and drawers of water for the congregation, and for the altar of the Lord![27] — Joshua made his decree for the period during which the Sanctuary was in existence[28] while David made his decree for the time during which the Sanctuary was not in existence.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 79b

In the days of Rabbi there was a desire to permit the nethinim.[1] Said Rabbi to them, ‘We could very well surrender our portion; who could surrender the portion of the altar?’[2] He[3] is thus in disagreement with R. Hiyya b. Abba. For R. Hiyya b. Abba stated in the name of R. Johanan: The portion of the congregation is forbidden for ever,[4] and the portion of the altar is forbidden only when the Sanctuary is in existence, but when the Sanctuary is not in existence it is permitted.

MISHNAH. R. JOSHUA STATED: I HAVE HEARD[5] THAT A SARIS[6] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH[6] AND THAT HALIZAH IS ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND ALSO THAT A SARIS[6] DOES NOT SUBMIT TO HALIZAH AND THAT NO HALIZAH IS TO BE ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, AND I AM UNABLE TO EXPLAIN THIS.[7] R. AKIBA SAID, I WILL EXPLAIN IT: A MAN-MADE SARIS[8] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE THERE WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS IN A STATE OF FITNESS. A SARIS BY NATURE[9] NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE THERE NEVER WAS A TIME WHEN HE WAS FIT. R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO, BUT A SARIS BY NATURE[9] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH AND HALIZAH IS ALSO ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, BECAUSE HE MAY BE CURED. A MAN-MADE SARIS[10] NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR IS HALIZAH ARRANGED FOR HIS WIFE, SINCE HE CANNOT BE CURED. R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM. THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR, THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA.

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE

MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION MUST NEITHER PERFORM HALIZAH NOR BE TAKEN IN LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.[10] IF, HOWEVER, HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.[11] SINCE HIS ACT IS SHEER PROSTITUTION.[12] SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION, THEY DO NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.[11] IF, HOWEVER, THEY COHABITED WITH HER, THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED.[11] SINCE COHABITATION WITH HER IS AN ACT OF PROSTITUTION.[13]

GEMARA. Observe! R. Akiba was heard to state that ‘Those who are subject to the penalty of negative precepts[14] are on a par with those who are subject to the penalties of kareth’;[15] but those who are subject to the penalty of kareth are not eligible for halizah or levirate marriage![16] — R. Ammi replied: ‘What we are dealing with here is with a case, for instance, where his brother[17] had married a proselyte; and R. Akiba is of the same opinion as R. Jose, who stated that an assembly of proselytes is not regarded as an assembly.’[18] If so,[19] he should also be permitted to contract levirate marriage![20] — The law is so indeed; only because R. Joshua used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’[21] he [R. Akiba] also used the expression ‘SUBMITS TO HALIZAH’. This[22] may also be proved by inference; for it was stated, R. JOSHUA B. BATHYRA TESTIFIED CONCERNING BEN MEGOSATH, WHO WAS A MAN-MADE SARIS LIVING IN JERUSALEM, THAT HIS WIFE WAS ALLOWED TO BE MARRIED BY THE LEVIR,[23] THUS CONFIRMING THE OPINION OF R. AKIBA. This proves it.[22]

Rabbah raised an objection: He who is wounded in the stones or has his privy member cut off, a man-made saris, and an old man, may either participate in halizah or contract levirate marriage. How?[24] If these died[25] and were survived by wives and brothers, and those brothers addressed a ma'amar to the wives, or gave them letters of divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are legally valid;[26] if they cohabited with them, the widows become their lawful wives.[27] If the brothers died and they[28] addressed a ma'amar to their[29] wives, or gave them divorce, or participated with them in halizah, their actions are valid;[30] and if they cohabited with them the widows become their lawful wives, but they[31] may not retain them, because it is said in Scripture. He that is wounded in the stones or hath his privy member cut off shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord.[32] This clearly proves that we are dealing[33] with members of the assembly![34] — The fact is, said Rabbah, that this[35] is a case where the widow became subject to him[36] first and he was subsequently maimed.[37] Said Abaye to him: Let the prohibition against the maimed man override the positive precept of the levirate marriage! Did we not learn [of a similar case]: R. Gamaliel said, If she[38] made a declaration of refusal[39] well and good;[40] and if not, let [the elder sister] wait until the minor grows up and she will then be exempt as his wife's sister.[41] Thus it follows that the prohibition against a wife's sister has the force of overriding [that of the levirate marriage]; here also, then, let the prohibition against the maimed man have the force of overriding it! — But, said R. Joseph. this Tanna[42] represents the view of the Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who maintains that [the issue] of a union which is subject to the penalty of negative precepts owing to consanguinity[43] is regarded as a bastard, but [the issue] of a union that is merely subject to the penalty of negative precepts is not a bastard.[44]

The text, ‘To raise up unto his brother a name’[45] should be applicable to this case[46] also, but he,[47] surely, is incapable of raising it![48] — Raba replied: If so,[49] there exists no woman who is eligible for the levirate marriage whose husband was not a saris by nature[50] for a short time, at least, prior to his death.[51]

Against R. Eliezer,[52] however, Raba's reply[53] presents a [valid] objection! — There[54] it is only a general state of debility[55] that had set in.[56]

What are we to understand by A SARIS BY NATURE? — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: Any man

(1) To enter into the congregation.

(2) Both the congregation and the altar have shares in them (cf. Josh. ibid.).

(3) Rabbi, who forbade the portion of the altar in his time though the Sanctuary was no more in existence.

(4) Until a properly constituted authority should allow it.

(5) A tradition from his teachers.

(6) V. Glos.

(7) In what case of saris halizah is, and what case it is not applicable.

(8) סרים אדם lit., a ‘eunuch of man’, one whose emasculation was the result of human action. (Cf. infra n. 12).

(9) סרים חמה lit., a ‘eunuch of the sun’, one who was a eunuch from the time he first saw the sun, i.e., a congenital eunuch.

(10) V. p. 538, n. 10.

(11) To marry a priest.

(12) The woman being forbidden to him as ‘his brother's wife’.

(13) Cf. supra n. 3.

(14) A man-made saris is one of these, since cohabitation with him is forbidden by a negative precept in Deut. XXIII, 2.

(15) V. supra 49a.

(16) How then could R. Akiba maintain in our Mishnah that A MAN-MADE SARIS SUBMITS TO HALIZAH.

(17) The deceased brother of the saris.

(18) A proselyte, not being included in the term assembly (v. Deut. XXIII. 2) she is permitted to the saris. Hence he submits to her halizah.

(19) V. supra n. 1.

(20) Why then was only halizah mentioned?

(21) According to R. Joshua, who regards an assembly of proselytes as a congregation, marriage is in fact forbidden. Only halizah is permitted because in his opinion it is applicable in the case of those a union between whom is subject to the penalty of a negative precept.

(22) That according to R. Akiba even the levirate marriage is permitted.

(23) Levirate marriage. V. supra n. 5.

(24) I.e., in what connection is this law applicable?

(25) Without issue.

(26) Lit., ‘what they did they have done’; after their ma'amar, a divorce is required; after their divorce, no marriage may take place; and their halizah is valid.

(27) Lit., ‘they acquired’.

(28) The maimed mentioned or the old man.

(29) Brothers’.

(30) V. supra note 9.

(31) Those that are maimed. The old man is excluded. V. infra.

(32) Deut. XXIII, 2. V. Tosef. XI.

(33) In regarding the halizah and marriage with an impotent person as valid.

(34) How then could it be suggested that R. Akiba speaks of women proselytes who are not included in the term ‘assembly?’

(35) R. Akiba's statement in our Mishnah.

(36) As his deceased brother's wife.

(37) Since the obligation arose while the man was still in a state of potency, halizah with him is both necessary and valid.

(38) A minor who was given away in marriage by her mother or brothers after the death of her father and whose elder sister has now become subject to the levirate marriage of her husband.

(39) Mi'un (v. Glos.). No divorce is needed in the case of such a minor's marriage.

(40) Lit., ‘she refused’. Her marriage becomes null and void retrospectively, and, as she has thus never been the legal wife of the levir, her sister (who is now no more the levir's wife's sister) may well contract with him the levirate marriage.

(41) Supra 18a, infra 109a.

(42) Who, in fact, deals with a case where the impotency had set in prior to the obligation and yet permits the halizah.

(43) Of the contracting parties.

(44) This Tanna, like the Tanna of our Mishnah, thus draws a distinction between two classes of trespass that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts: (a) cases due to consanguinity and (b) other cases. While the former are subject to the restrictions of those who are liable to kareth, the latter are not. Maimed persons belong to the latter class and are consequently subject to the levirate law. Cf. supra 49a.

(45) Deut. XXV, 7.

(46) The maimed levir.

(47) Owing to his impotency at the time of the halizah.

(48) Though at some earlier period he might have been; why then should he be subject to halizah?

(49) If his former potency is not to be taken into consideration.

(50) Approaching death deprives a person of his generating powers, and he may then be regarded virtually as a saris.

(51) The widow of such a saris should consequently be exempt from halizah (v. our Mishnah). How, then, would a widow ever be subject to halizah? It must, therefore, be admitted that a person's former capacity for propagation is taken into consideration even though that capacity was subsequently lost.

(52) Who maintains that a manmade saris does not submit to halizah, though prior to his incapacitation he was capable of propagation.

(53) Which proves the contrary of R. Eliezer's statement (cf. supra n. 6).

(54) Where the power of propagation is lost on approaching death.

(55) Which precedes death.

(56) And this cannot at all be compared with the case of an actual saris whose incapacity is due to a definite defect in his generative organs.

R. Mari raised an objection: R. Hanina b. Antigonos stated, ‘It[9] is to be examined[10] three times in eighty days’![11] — Precautions are to be taken in respect of one limb;[12] in respect of the entire body[13] no such precautions need be taken.[14]

R. ELIEZER SAID: NOT SO etc. A contradiction may be pointed out: If at the age of twenty he[15] did not produce two hairs,[16] they[17] must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age and he, being confirmed as a saris,[18] neither submits to halizah nor performs the levirate marriage. If the woman[19] at the age of twenty did not produce two hairs,[20] they[21] must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age and she, being confirmed as a woman who is incapable of procreation neither performs halizah nor is taken in levirate marriage; so Beth Hillel. But Beth Shammai maintain that with the one as well as with the other [this takes place at] the age of eighteen. R. Eliezer said. In the case of the male, the law is in accordance with Beth Hillel and in the case Of the female, the law is in accordance with Beth Shammai because a woman matures earlier than a man![22] Rami b. Dikuli replied in the name Of Samuel: R. Eliezer changed his view.[23]

The question was raised: From which statement did he withdraw? — Come and hear what was taught: R. Eliezer said. A congenital saris[24] submits to halizah, and halizah is arranged for his wife, because cases of such a nature are cured in Alexandria in Egypt.[25]

R. Eleazar said: As a matter of fact he[26] did not change his view at all, but that statement[27] was taught in respect [of the age of] punishment.[28]

It was stated: If a person[29] between the age of twelve years and one day[30] and that of eighteen years[31] ate forbidden fat,[32] and after the marks of a saris had appeared, he grew two hairs.[33] Rab ruled that the person is deemed to be a saris retrospectively.[34] But Samuel ruled [that the person is regarded as] having been a minor at that time.[35]

R. Joseph demurred against Rab.[36] According to R. Meir,[37] a woman who is incapable of procreation[38] should be entitled to a fine![39] — Abaye replied: She passes from her minority [directly] into adolescence.[40] The other said to him: May all such fine sayings be reported in my name. For so it was taught: A saris is not tried as a stubborn and rebellious son,[41] because no stubborn and rebellious son is tried unless he bears the mark of the pubic hair.[42] Nor is a woman who is incapable of procreation tried as a betrothed damsel[43] because from her minority she passes [directly] into adolescence.[44]

R. Abbahu stated: On [the basis of] the marks of a saris, of a woman incapable of procreation, and of an eight-[month] child[45] no decision is made[46] until they attain the age of twenty.[47] Is, however, an eight-[month] child viable? Surely it was taught: An eight-month child is like a stone,[48] and it is forbidden to move him;[49] only his mother may bend over him and nurse him

(1) I.e., who was born with defective organs.

(2) That a child was a saris from birth.

(3) Of congenital impotency.

(4) The heat of the oven combined with the heat of the day obviously affected the generative organs of the embryo.

(5) Others, ‘pale’, ‘diluted’.

(6) The congenital eunuch or ‘saris by nature’ spoken of in our Mishnah.

(7) Lit., ‘from his mother's bowels’.

(8) Between the periods of his early and present impotency. And since he was possessed of his manly powers even if only for a short time, bow could he (v. our Mishnah) be regarded as a ‘saris by nature’?

(9) The firstborn of a beast afflicted with a serious blemish which renders it unfit for the altar.

(10) To ascertain whether the blemish is a permanent one. If it was only a passing affliction it does not affect the legal fitness of the animal.

(11) At the beginning, middle and end of the period. Only where the blemish remained for the full eighty days is it regarded as permanent. If no examination was made in the middle of the period mentioned, the blemish cannot be deemed to be a permanent since it is possible that it had disappeared for some time and reappeared again V. Bek. 38b. Why, then, is the middle period disregarded in the case of the saris?

(12) The eye, for instance, which was the limb affected in the case cited.

(13) The impotency of the saris is an affliction affecting his body as a whole.

(14) It is unlikely that such a defect should appear, disappear and reappear again.

(15) A levir whose duty it is to contract levirate marriage or to submit to halizah.

(16) The marks of puberty.

(17) The relatives of the widow who wish to exempt her from the halizah and the marriage.

(18) By a display of the required symptoms.

(19) The widow whose husband had died without issue.

(20) The marks of puberty.

(21) The levir's relatives. Cf. supra note 9, mutatis mutandis.

(22) Nid. 47b. Now, the case spoken of here is that of a congenital saris and yet R. Eliezer stated that he is subject neither to halizah nor to the levirate marriage, which is in direct contradiction to his statement in our Mishnah!

(23) The two statements were made at an earlier and later period respectively.

(24) V. supra p. 538. n. 11.

(25) As this Baraitha agrees with our Mishnah and, in addition, contains also a reason for its statement, based on actual experience. it is reasonable to assume that R. Eliezer withdrew from his other view contained in the Baraitha of Niddah.

(26) R. Eliezer.

(27) Supra, that the age of a male is twenty, in agreement with Beth Hillel, and that that of a female is eighteen, in agreement with Beth Shammai.

(28) At the ages stated males and females respectively, emerging from their state of minority and entering that of majority, become subject to all legal obligations and penalties. The statement has no reference at all to halizah or the levirate marriage.

(29) The reference is to a female though the masc. gender ‘saris’ is used. The age of twelve years and one day is applicable to females only.

(30) Below this age a girl is regarded as a minor.

(31) This will be according to R. Eliezer, supra.

(32) Or committed any other transgression. The eating of forbidden fat, חלב is invariably taken as the example of a punishable offence. Cf. Golds. a.l.

(33) The marks of puberty.

(34) From the age of twelve years and one day. Despite the absence of the hairs until after the age of eighteen. and their subsequent appearance. the girl is regarded as having passed into her majority at the earlier age of twelve years and one day. and consequently subject from that time to all legal penalties, the delay in the emergence of her marks of puberty being attributed to her mere impotence.

(35) Between the ages of twelve and eighteen. Samuel holds that majority sets in at the latter age only when the girl's impotency is definitely established.

(36) Who regards a girl, who was only subsequently found to be a saris, as having been a saris and consequently also of age from the moment she was twelve years and one day old.

(37) Who exempts the seducer of a minor from the payment of the fine prescribed in Deut. XXII, 29.

(38) The seducer of whom is also exempt from the fine mentioned (supra note 2) on the ground that, as she did not produce the required hairs, she was regarded at the time as a minor. V. Keth. 35b.

(39) Because, since it was later established that she was sterile, she should be regarded (cf. supra note 1) as having been sterile, and so also of age, retrospectively.

(40) The former age is twelve years and one day; the latter is twelve and a half plus one day. In the intervening age a girl is described as נערה damsel or maiden; and it is during this period (נערות) that she is entitled to the fine mentioned. The sterile woman does in fact become of age retrospectively, as Rab laid down, but she assumes the status of the adolescent woman who is not entitled to the fine.

(41) Cf. Deut. XXI, 18ff.

(42) Lit., ‘lower beard’.

(43) Who has been outraged (v. Deut. XXII, 23ff).

(44) Cf. supra n. 5.

(45) Born in the eighth month of conception. who, as a rule, is not viable.

(46) As to whether in the case of the former they are impotent and of age, and in the case of the latter whether he is viable.

(47) Between the age of twelve and this age the former are regarded as minors until they have produced two pubic hairs, if these appear before they were twenty; and if these were not produced at twenty their majority begins from the age of twelve. In the case of the child he cannot be regarded as viable before he has completed the twentieth year of his life.

(48) Obviously because he is not viable.

(49) On the Sabbath when only such objects may be moved as were intended to be used on that day. The moving of a stone is forbidden.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 80b

in order to avert danger![1] — Here[2] we are dealing with one whose marks[3] have not[4] been developed.[5] For it was taught: Who is an eight-month child? He whose months [of conception] have not been completed. Rabbi said: The marks, his hair and nails which were not developed, would indicate it.[6] The reason then is because they were not developed, but had they been developed it would have been assumed that the child was a seven-month one[7] only his [birth] was somewhat delayed.[8]

With reference, however, to the practical decision which Raba Tosfa'ah gave in the case of a woman whose husband had gone to a country beyond the sea and remained there for a full year of twelve months, where he declared the child legitimate,[9] in accordance with whose [view did he act]? [Was it] in accordance with that of Rabbi who maintains that [birth] may be delayed![10] — Since R. Simeon b. Gamaliel also maintains that [birth may] be delayed. he acted in agreement with a majority. For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said: Any human[11] child that lingers for thirty days can not be regarded as a miscarriage.[12]

Our Rabbis taught: Who is a congenital saris?[13] Any person who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.[14] And even if he produced them afterwards he is deemed to be a saris in all respects. And these are his characteristics: He has no beard, his hair is lank, and his skin is smooth. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said in the name of R. Judah b. Jair:[15] Any person whose urine produces no froth; some say: He who urinates without forming an arch; some say: He whose semen is watery; and some say: He whose urine does not ferment. Others say: He whose body does not steam after bathing in the winter season. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said:[15] He whose voice is abnormal so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

What woman is deemed to be incapable of procreation? — Any woman who is twenty years of age and has not produced two pubic hairs.[14] And even if she produces them afterwards she is deemed to be a woman incapable of procreation in all respects. And these are her characteristics: She has no breasts and suffers pain during copulation. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel said:[15] One who has no mons veneris like other women. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said: One whose voice is deep so that one cannot distinguish whether it is that of a man or of a woman.

It was stated: As to the characteristics of a saris, R. Huna stated, [Impotency cannot be established] unless they are all present. R. Johanan, however, stated: Even if only one of them is present.[16] Where two hairs were produced[17] all agree that impotency cannot be established unless all characteristics[18] are displayed. They only differ in the case where these were not produced. With reference, however, to what Rabbah b. Abbuha said to the Rabbis, ‘Examine R. Nahman. and if his body steams I will allow him to marry my daughter’; in accordance with whose view [was he acting]? [Was it] according to R. Huna![19] — No; R. Nahman had some stray hairs.[20]

THE SARIS NEITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH NOR CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND SO ALSO A WOMAN WHO IS INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The saris was mentioned in the same way as the woman who is incapable of procreation; as the woman's incapacity is due to an act of[21] heaven so must that of the saris be an act[21] of heaven; and this anonymous [Mishnah] is in agreement with R. Akiba who stated [that halizah applies] only to a man-made [saris but] not [to one afflicted] by the hand of heaven.[22]

IF A SARIS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, HE DOES NOT THEREBY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED etc. The reason then [why when HE COHABITED WITH HER HE CAUSES HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because he[23] cohabited with her; another man, however, does not;[24]

The latter might otherwise die of starvation before his time, and the former might contract serious illness through the accumulation of superfluous milk in her breasts. V. Tosef. Shab. XVI. (11) In the case of an animal the period is eight days.

[The reference will be accordingly to an emergence of hairs after the age of twenty, for had they appeared earlier, he would no longer be regarded as a saris even in the face of all other characteristics of a saris, v. supra p. 543. Tosaf., however, retains the reading of our text and consequently draws a distinction between hairs of the beard and on any other part of the body. The former in themselves, unlike the latter, are not sufficient to establish potency. V. Tosaf. s.v. דהביא].

(23) The levir to whom, as his brother's wife, she is forbidden under the penalty of kareth.

(24) Cause her to be disqualified.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 81a

is this, then, an objection to the view of R. Hamnuna who stated that a widow awaiting the decision of her levir who committed adultery[1] is disqualified [from marrying her] brother-in-law![2] — No; the same law[3] is applicable to [the case of cohabitation with] another man also; Only because the first clause was taught in respect of himself,[4] the latter clause also was taught in respect of himself.

SIMILARLY, WHERE BROTHERS SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH FROM A WOMAN INCAPABLE OF PROCREATION etc. The reason then [why when THEY COHABITED WITH HER THEY CAUSE HER TO BE DISQUALIFIED] is because they cohabited with her, but had they not cohabited with her they would not;[5] in accordance with whose view [is this statement made]? — Not in accordance with that of R. Judah; for should it [be suggested that it is in agreement with] R. Judah, he, surely, [it might be objected,] stated that a woman incapable of procreation is regarded as a harlot.[6]

MISHNAH. IF A PRIEST WHO WAS A SARIS BY NATURE[7] MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH. R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED: IF A PRIEST WHO WAS AN HERMAPHRODITE MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, HE CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT TO EAT TERUMAH.

R. JUDAH STATED: IF A TUMTUM,[8] WAS OPERATED UPON[9] AND HE WAS FOUND TO BE A MALE, HE MUST NOT PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH,[10] BECAUSE HE HAS THE SAME STATUS AS A SARIS. THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE] BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN].[11] R. ELIEZER[12] STATED: [FOR COPULATION] WITH AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.[13]

GEMARA. [Is not this][14] obvious![15] — It might have been assumed that only one who is capable of propagation is entitled to bestow the right of eating[16] and that he who is not capable of propagating is not entitled to bestow the right of eating; hence we were taught [that even the saris may bestow the right].

R. JOSE AND R. SIMEON STATED . . . HERMAPHRODITE. Resh Lakish said: He CONFERS UPON HER THE RIGHT OF EATING TERUMAH but does not confer upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder.[17] R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and shoulder.[17]

According to Resh Lakish,[18] why is the breast and the shoulder different?[19] [Obviously] because [it was] Pentateuchally [ordained].[20] [Was not] terumah, [however]. also Pentateuchally [ordained]? — We are dealing here with terumah at the present time,[21] which [is only a] Rabbinical [ordinance].[22] What is the law, however, when the Sanctuary is in existence?[23] [Obviously that terumah may] not [be eaten]![24] Why, then, did he state, ‘But does not confer the right of eating the breast and the shoulder’?[25] He should rather have drawn the distinction in respect of the terumah itself, thus: This[26] applies only to Rabbinical terumah,[27] but not to terumah that has been Pentateuchally ordained![28] — It is this, in fact, that he meant: When he[29] confers upon her[30] the right of eating, he enables her to eat terumah at the present time[27] only when it is a Rabbinical ordinance;[31] he is not entitled, however, to confer upon her the right of eating terumah at the time when the law of the breast and the shoulder is in force,[32] even if the terumah is only Rabbinical,[33] for she might in consequence also come to eat of Pentateuchal terumah.[34]

‘R. Johanan, however, said: He also confers upon her the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder’. Said R. Johanan to Resh Lakish: Do you[35] maintain that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance? — ‘Yes’, the other replied, ‘for I read:[36] A cake of figs[37] among cakes of figs is neutralised’.[38] ‘But I’, said the first, ‘read, "A piece[39] among pieces[40] is neutralized";[41] you obviously believe that the reading[42] is, "Whatsoever[43] one is wont to count",[44] the reading in fact is, "That which one is wont to count"’.[45]

What [Mishnah[46] is] it? — That wherein we learned: If a man had bundles of fenugrec of kil'ayim[47] of the vineyard[48] they must be burned.[49] If these were mixed up with others,[50]

(1) With any man.

(2) As any harlot. Consequently she would also be forbidden to marry a priest. But according to the implication of our Mishnah she is not disqualified from marrying a priest!

(37) A number of figs pressed together.
(38) If such a cake of terumah was mixed up with a hundred non-consecrated cakes of the same size, or if a cake of terumah that was levitically unclean was mixed up with a hundred such cakes of clean terumah, the entire quantity is permitted. in the latter case, to clean priests and, in the former case, to Israelites also. This proves that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical ordinance, since such neutralization, had the ordinance been Pentateuchal, would not, owing to its comparative importance (its high commercial value, v. infra), have been permitted. Though the terumah of figs, like that of all other fruit of trees, is at all times a Rabbinical ordinance only, its neutralization would not have been permitted at the present time had there been any Pentateuchal terumah in existence at the same time. The neutralization of the former would have been forbidden as a preventive measure against the possible assumption that the ‘latter also might be neutralized.
(39) Of an unclean sin-offering which is Pentateuchally forbidden. V. the Baraitha infra 81b.
(40) Of clean meat.
(41) And is permitted to be eaten. As a piece of meat which is Pentateuchally forbidden (v. supra n. 5) may be neutralized, even though its importance, owing to its commercial value, may be as high as that of a cake of figs, so may any food be neutralized even though its prohibition is Pentateuchal.
(42) Cf. the Mishnah cited infra.
(43) Any objects which any person whatsoever sells by counting the units. V. infra n. 11.
(44) Cannot be neutralized.
(45) ‘Whatsoever’ is more comprehensive than ‘that’. According to the former reading, neutralization is not permitted in the case of any objects which are regarded as of sufficiently high commercial value to be sold not in bulk but in units. According to the latter reading, neutralization is permitted in all cases except those where the units are of such a high value that they are not sold save by counting single units. Now, since cakes of figs are not invariably sold in units they may of course be neutralized even though they consist of Pentateuchal terumah (cf. supra n. 7). Resh Lakish, therefore, remains with no proof whatsoever that terumah at the present time is a mere Rabbinical ordinance. [This interpretation which follows Rashi does not account for the phrase ‘one is wont etc’, mentioned also with the latter reading. Me'iri explains the former as including whatever is being sold as a rule by counting among the poor, whereas the latter requires the sale by counting to be the general practice among the rich as well as the poor. On either reading it is the general practice rather than the invariable rule which is the determining factor].

they must all be burned;[1] so R. Meir. The Sages, however, stated: They are neutralized in [a mixture of] two hundred and one.[2] R. Meir, [in his ruling,] is of the opinion that whatever[3] might be counted causes forfeiture,[4] while the Sages are of the opinion that only six things cause forfeiture.[5] R. Akiba said: Seven. They are the following: Crack-nuts,[6] the pomegranates of Badan,[7] sealed jugs [of wine], young shoots of beet,[8] cabbage roots and the Grecian gourd. R. Akiba adds also home made[9] bread.[10] Those which are subject to the law of ‘orlah[11] [impart the prohibition of] ‘orlah[12] [and those which are subject] to the law of kil'ayim of the vineyard[13] [impart[12] that of the] kil'ayim of the vineyard.[14] R. Johanan holds the view that the reading[15] was, ‘That which one is wont to count’[16] while Resh Lakish holds the view that the reading was ‘Whatsoever one is wont to count’.[17]

What [is the Baraitha about the] piece?[18] — It was taught: A piece of a levitically unclean sin-offering that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean sin-offerings and, similarly, a piece of levitically unclean shewbread[19] that was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean shewbread is neutralized.[20] R. Judah said: It is not neutralized.[21] If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat, and similarly if a piece of levitically clean shewbread was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean unconsecrated bread, all agree that neutralization cannot take place.[22] Now in the first clause, at any rate, it was stated that it ‘is neutralized’![23] — R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: In [the case where it was] crushed.[24] If so,[24] what is R. Judah's reason?[25]

---

(1) The forbidden kil'ayim cannot be neutralized. The reason is given infra.

(2) I.e., if the permitted food is two hundred times the quantity of the forbidden kil'ayim.

(3) V. supra p. 551. n. 9.

(16) Cf. supra p. 551, n. 11. Only such objects cannot be neutralized. Cakes of figs and pieces of meat, however, since some people do not always sell them singly but in bulk, are of less commercial importance and may, therefore, be neutralized.

(17) Cf. supra p. 551, nn. 7 and 8. As cakes of figs are sometimes sold by being counted singly. they are regarded as commercially important objects which, were they Pentateuchally forbidden, could never be neutralized. As it was stated, however, that a cake of figs of terumah may be neutralized, it follows, according to Resh Lakish, that terumah at the present time is only a Rabbinical, and not a Pentateuchal ordinance.

(18) Mentioned by R. Johanan. Cf. supra p. 551. n. 5.

(19) Cf. Ex. XXV, 30.

(20) The entire mixture is regarded as clean sin-offering meat and clean shewbread respectively.

(21) The reason is discussed infra.

(22) Neutralization would have removed a Pentateuchal prohibition (that of eating consecrated food by a non-priest) from the piece of the sin-offering or from that of the shewbread. As, however, the entire mixture, which consists of pieces that are sometimes sold by number, may be eaten even without recourse to neutralization by a priest to whom it could be sold, though this might have to be done at a reduced cost, the law of neutralization, which is applied even in such circumstances whenever the prohibition is Rabbinical. as in the case of the cake of figs (supra). is not applied here where it is Pentateuchal.

(23) Though these objects are sometimes sold in units. This obviously proves that the reading was, as R. Johanan stated. ‘That which one is wont to count . How, then, could Resh Lakish maintain that the reading was ‘Whatsoever one is wont to count ?

(24) When it is no longer sold in units but in bulk.

(25) Why does he in such a case object to neutralization?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82a

— R. Judah follows his own view; for he stated:[1] The law of neutralization takes no effect in homogeneous objects.[2] [Had the piece] not been crushed, however, what [would have been the law]? Assumingly that it could not be neutralized! Why. then, was it taught. ‘If, however, a piece of a levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place’?[3] Let the distinction be drawn in [the case of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This[4] applies only where it[5] was crushed; but when it was not crushed it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak of] a mixture of clean with clean.[6]

According to Resh Lakish,[7] wherein lies the difference between the first clause and the final clause?[8] — R. Shisha the son of R. Idi replied: The first clause deals with uncleanness that was due to liquids,[9] which is only Rabbinical,[10] while the final clause [deals with a prohibition][11] which is Pentateuchal.[12] What, however, [would be the law in the case of] uncleanness through a reptile?[13] Assumingly that no neutralization is permitted! Why, then, did he state in the final clause, ‘If, however, a piece of levitically clean sin-offering was mixed up with a hundred pieces of clean and unconsecrated meat . . . neutralization cannot take place’?[14] Let the distinction rather be drawn in [respect of consecrated meat] itself, thus: This[15] applies only to uncleanness due to liquids, but when it is due to a reptile it may not be neutralized! — He preferred [to speak] of a mixture of clean with clean.[16]

Rabbah replied:[17] The first clause [deals with] a prohibition under a negative precept[18] while the final clause [deals with] one that involves the penalty of kareth.[19] But surely was it not Rabbah who stated that in all Pentateuchal prohibitions there is no difference[20] between a prohibition that is due to a negative precept and one that involves kareth![21] — This is a difficulty.

R. Ashi replied:[17] [The law[22] in the] final clause is due to the fact that [the consecrated food] is an object which may be made[23] permissible,[24] and any object which [in certain circumstances] becomes permitted[24] cannot be neutralized even in a thousand.[25] This statement of R. Ashi, however, is mere fiction.[26] For to whom [would the mixture become permitted]![27] To[28] the priest it is permitted [all the time];[29] to the Israelite[28] it is for ever forbidden![30] The statement of R. Ashi must consequently be regarded as mere fiction. But is R. Johanan of the opinion that terumah at the present time[31] is Pentateuchal?[32] Surely it was taught: If in front of two baskets, one of which contained unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, were two se'ah measures, one containing unconsecrated fruit and the other that of terumah, and the latter fell into the former, behold these are permitted,[33] for it is assumed that the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit fell into the unconsecrated fruit.[34] And [in reference to this ruling] Resh Lakish stated: ‘Only if the unconsecrated fruit[35] was more than that of the terumah’;[36] while R. Johanan stated, ‘Even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah’.[37] Now, according to Resh Lakish[38] the ruling[39] may well be justified since he may hold the opinion that with Rabbinically [forbidden food] also it is necessary[40] to have a larger quantity [of the permitted food]. According to R. Johanan.[41] however, a difficulty arises![42] ‘This’[43] [R. Johanan may reply] ‘is the view of[44] the Rabbis,[45]

(8) In either case the piece is Pentateuchally forbidden. As neutralization takes place in the case of the first clause owing to the insignificant value of the piece. neutralization should also take place, for the same reason, in the case of the final clause! According to R. Johanan, the reason for the difference between the two clauses has been explained supra p. 553, n. 6.

(9) If the crushed mixture was contained, for instance. in a vessel that had been in contact with unclean liquids.

(10) Pentateuchally no unclean liquid can impart uncleanness to a vessel.

(11) The consumption of consecrated food by a non-priest.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 82b

while I maintain the view of R. Jose’.[1] For it was taught in Seder ‘Olam:[2] Which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it,[3] they had a first,[4] and a second[5] possession,[6] but they had no third one;[7] and R. Johanan stated, ‘Who is the author of Seder ‘Olam? R. Jose’.[8]

But is R. Johanan of the opinion that in respect of a Rabbinically forbidden object no excess is required?[9] Surely we learned: A ritual bath containing exactly forty se'ah [of water][10] to which one se'ah[11] was added and from which one se'ah[12] was taken off, is deemed to be ritually fit.[13] And R. Judah b. Shila stated in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan. ‘As much as its greater part’.[14] Does not this mean that the greater part must remain?[15] — No; that the greater part must not be removed.[16] And if you prefer I might say: Here[17] it is different,[18] since it may be said, ‘For it is assumed’.[19]

We learned, THE HERMAPHRODITE MAY MARRY [A WIFE]![20] — Read, ‘If he married’,[21] But, surely, it was stated MAY MARRY![22] — And even in accordance with your view what is the meaning of BUT MAY NOT BE MARRIED [BY A MAN]?[23] Consequently it must be granted that as MAY . . . BE MARRIED[23] implies an act that had already been performed, so also MAY MARRY implies an act that had already been performed. It may still be urged: No;[24] MAY MARRY implies that the act is permissible; but MAY NOT BE MARRIED[23] implies, not even if the act had already been performed.[25] But surely since it was taught in the final clause, R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE, it is to be inferred that the first Tanna was doubtful on the point![26] — The law[27] was clear to the one Master as well as to the other Master; the only difference between them was the question of stoning for copulation through either of his two organs. One Master[28] was of the opinion that the penalty of stoning is incurred by copulation through either of the two organs,[29] while the other Master[30] was of the opinion [that it is incurred through the male organ only] AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

(1) Who stated in our Mishnah that the hermaphrodite may confer upon his wife the right of eating terumah. It was in reference to this that R. Johanan had stated that the hermaphrodite may also confer upon his wife the right of eating the breast and the shoulder, which are Pentateuchally ordained, since terumah also according to R. Jose is even at the present time a Pentateuchal ordinance.

(7) Which was not necessary, the second sanctification having remained for all time. As the land thus remained sacred the Pentateuchal obligation of terumah also remained in force.

(8) V. Nid. 46b.

(9) To effect neutralization. It is now assumed that the reason why R. Johanan maintains that ‘even if the unconsecrated fruit were no more than the terumah’ it is permitted is because, in the case of a Rabbinical prohibition, neutralization is effected by the mere accident of the mixing of consecrated with unconsecrated fruit even though the latter did not form the larger part and not because he relies on the above mentioned assumption.

(10) The minimum quantity of water that constitutes a ritual bath.

(11) Of unsuitable liquid.

(12) Of the entire quantity of forty-one se'ah.

(13) Mik. VII, 2. The se'ah of unsuitable liquid is regarded as having been neutralized in the forty se'ah of water, so that when one se'ah of the mixture was subsequently removed, the minimum of forty se'ah of suitable liquid still remained in the bath.

(14) Zeb. 22a. This is explained presently.

(15) I.e., se'ah after se'ah of unsuitable liquid may be added and an equal quantity of the mixture may be successively removed only until a minimum of twenty-one se'ah of suitable water remains in the bath. Should there remain less, so that the suitable liquid no longer represents the greater part of the mixture, the bath would become ritually unfit. This (the unsuitability of certain liquids in a ritual bath being only a Rabbinical provision) proves that according to R. Johanan an excess is required even in the case of Rabbinical ordinances!

(16) If only half of the suitable water remained the unsuitable liquid is neutralized, no excess being required.

(17) The case in the Baraitha of Terumoth.

(18) From the case of the ritual bath or other Rabbinical ordinances where an excess may in fact be required.

(19) ‘That the terumah fell into the terumah and the unconsecrated fruit etc.’ (v. supra), so that no forbidden food had ever entered the basket of the unconsecrated fruit. Such an assumption is obviously inapplicable in the case of the bath.

(20) נושא. This shews that he is regarded as a proper male. As such he should confer upon his wife the right to eat of the breast and the shoulder. How then could Resh Lakish maintain supra that he does not?

(21) נישא i.e., if marriage had already taken place it is valid in so far as to require a letter of divorce for its dissolution since it is possible that he is a male. Originally, however, no such marriage is permitted owing to the equal possibility that he is not a male but a female.

(22) Implying that marriage may be contracted in the first instance.CF. supra n.1.

(23) נישא. Perfect. Surely this cannot refer to marriage in the first instance but to a marriage already performed?

(24) The two expressions are not identical.

(25) The difficulty against the view of Resh Lakish consequently remains, while the opinion of R. Johanan receives confirmation.

(26) Whether the hermaphrodite is to be regarded as a male. This, then, presents an objection against the view of R. Johanan.

(27) That the hermaphrodite is regarded as a male.

(28) The first Tanna.

(29) Even if it was effected through his female organ.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83a

Our Mishnah[1] cannot be maintained in the presence of the following Baraitha. For it was taught: R. Jose stated, ‘The hermaphrodite is a creature sui generis, and the Sages did not determine whether he is a male or a female’.[2] On the contrary; the Baraitha[2] cannot be maintained in the face of our

Mishnah![3] — As R. Jose left his colleague[4] it may be inferred that he changed his opinion.[5]

Samuel, however, said: The Baraitha[2] cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.[3] On the contrary; our Mishnah[3] cannot be maintained in the face of the Baraitha,[2] since Samuel was heard to take note of an individual opinion![6] — This[7] applies only to a case where the Mishnah is not thereby uprooted; when the Mishnah, however, is thereby uprooted it need not be taken into consideration.

At the school of Rab it was stated in the name of Rab that the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose in respect of the hermaphrodite and grafting; and Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture.

As to the 'hermaphrodite', there is the ruling just mentioned.[8] 'Grafting'? — As we have learned: There must be no planting, no sinking[9] and no grafting on the eve of the Sabbatical Year[10] within thirty days before the new year; and if one planted or sank or grafted, the tree must be uprooted.[11] R. Judah said: Any grafting[12] which takes no root within three days will never take root. R. Jose and R. Simeon stated: [Within] two weeks.[13] And, [in reference to this.] R. Nahman stated in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha that according to him who stated, 'thirty days', thirty and thirty are required;' according to him who stated 'three days', three and thirty are required;[14] and according to him who stated 'two weeks', two weeks and thirty days are required.[14]

'And Samuel stated: In respect of protracted labour and forfeiture'. 'Protracted labour'? — As we learned: How long does the period of protracted labour[15] continue? R. Meir said: Forty or fifty days.[16] R. Judah said: Her [ninth] month is sufficient.[17] R. Jose and R. Simeon said: Protracted labour cannot extend beyond two weeks.[18] 'Forfeiture'? As we have learned: If one causes his vine to overhang[19] above the crops of his neighbour, behold he causes thereby their forfeiture,[20] and he is liable to make compensation; so R. Meir. R. Jose and R. Simeon said:

(1) Which attributes to R. Jose the opinion that the hermaphrodite bestows upon his wife the right of eating terumah.

(2) Tosef. Bik. II. Since his sex is a matter of doubt he cannot obviously bestow the right(v. p. 558, n. 12) upon his wife.

(5) Which he first expressed in our Mishnah.

(6) If that opinion is more rigid. (Cf. supra 41a Meg. 18b). Here too R. Jose's opinion in the Baraitha is more restrictive than his opinion in our Mishnah and should therefore be taken into consideration!

(7) That an individual opinion is to be taken into consideration.

(8) In our Mishnah (cf. Rashi a.l.).

(14) Since the last thirty days of the eve of the Sabbatical Year are regarded as part of the next Sabbatical Year (v. M.K. 3b). the plant, in order that it may be permitted, must have taken root prior to these last thirty days.

(15) During this period a woman is not subject to the restrictions of a zabah (v. Glos.), if the flow occurred during the eleven days that intervene between her menstrual periods, even if the discharge continued for three consecutive days. Such a continuous discharge at any other time, when it cannot be attributed to labour, subjects a woman to the uncleanness of a zabah. As in this case, however, the discharge may be regarded as that attendant on labour, the woman must observe only the days prescribed for one after childbirth (cf. Lev. XII, 2ff) and not those prescribed for a zabah (cf. ibid. XV, 25ff). V. Nid. 36b.

(16) Prior to the birth of the child.
(17) Should the flow begin prior to the ninth month and continue for three consecutive days she is regarded as a zabah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 83b

No man can impose a prohibition upon that which is not his.[1]

The question was raised: What would Samuel[2] have said with regard to the hermaphrodite?[3] — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: The Baraitha cannot be maintained in the face of our Mishnah.[4]

What would Samuel have said in respect of grafting?[3] — Come and hear what Samuel said to R. Anan: Teach in accordance with the view of him who stated ‘three and thirty’.

What is the opinion of Rab[5] in respect of protracted labour?[6] — This is undecided.[7]

What is Rab's Opinion in respect of forfeiture?[6] R. Joseph replied. Come and hear what R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: The halachah is not in agreement with R. Jose.

Said Abaye to him:[8] What reason do you see for relying upon this statement?[9] Rely rather on that which R. Adda made in the name of Rab: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose! — Who is it [that is referred to by the phrase] ‘At the school of Rab it was stated’?[10] R. Huna [of course];[11] and R. Huna it was who stated that the halachah is not in agreement [with R. Jose].[12]

R. JUDAH STATED: A TUMTUM etc. R. Ammi remarked: What would R. Judah[13] have done with a case like that of the tumtum of Bairi,[14] who, after having been placed upon the operating table[15] and operated upon, begat seven children![16] And R Judah?[17] — He could tell you:[18] An enquiry should be made as to the origin of his children.

It was taught: R. Jose son of. R. Judah stated that a tumtum must not participate in halizah, since it is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a congenital saris.[19] Is everyone then,[20] who is operated upon a male! — It is this that he meant: It is possible that on being operated upon he may be found to be a female; and were he found to be a male, it is even then possible that he might be found to be a congenital saris. What is the practical difference between them?[21] — Raba replied: The practical difference between them is the question of disqualification[22] where other brothers are in existence,[23] and that of halizah where no other brothers exist.[24]

R. Samuel son of R. Judah said in the name of R. Abba, the brother of R. Judah b. Zabdi, in the name of Rab Judah in the name of Rab: In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs.

An objection was raised: R. Eliezer stated, ‘In respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred as in the case of a male. This, however, applies only to his male organ; but in respect of his female organ no penalty is incurred’![25] — He[26] holds the same opinion as the following Tanna. For it was taught: R. Simai stated that in respect of the hermaphrodite the penalty of stoning is incurred through either of his organs. What is R. Simai's reason? — Raba replied: Bar Hamduri has explained it to me as follows: And thou shalt not lie with a male, as well as with womankind;[27] what male is it that is capable of two manners of lying?[28] Obviously[29] the hermaphrodite. And the Rabbis? — Though he is capable of two manners of lying it is nevertheless written in Scripture.

With a male.[30] Whence, however, do the Rabbis[31] derive the law concerning an ordinary male? — From And.[32] Whence[33] the prohibition in respect of unnatural intercourse with a woman? — From Woman.[34]

R. Shezbi stated in the name of R. Hisda: It is not in all respects that R. Eliezer maintains that the hermaphrodite is a proper male. Since, were you to say so, [such an animal][35] would be fit for consecration.[36] And whence is it derived that it[37] may not be consecrated? — From what the Rabbis taught: [A bird] that was covered,[38] set aside [for idolatrous purposes], or worshipped, that was the hire of a harlot[39] or the price of a dog,[39] a tumtum or hermaphrodite, causes the defilement of one's clothes[40] by [contact with one's] oesophagus.[41] R. Eliezer said: [A bird that was] a tumtum or hermaphrodite does not impart the defilement of clothes through contact with one's oesophagus; for R. Eliezer maintained that wherever male and female were mentioned,[42] the tumtum and hermaphrodite are to be excluded; but [in the case of the sacrifice of a] bird, since in respect of it no mention was made of male or female, the tumtum and hermaphrodite are not to be excluded.[43]

R. Nahman b. Isaac said: We also learned [a similar Baraitha]: R. Eliezer stated:

According to R. Jose, however, the widow is disqualified. since the tumtum might possibly be a male and his halizah might be valid.

A hybrid, terefah,[1] one that was extracted through the abdominal wall,[2] the tumtum and the hermaphrodite can neither become sacred nor can they impart sanctity to others; is and Samuel explained: They neither become sacred by means of exchange,[3] nor do they impart sanctity [to any other beast][4] by causing it to become an exchange.[5] This proves [what has been said].

R. ELIEZER STATED . . . THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE. It was taught: Rabbi related, ‘When I went to learn Torah at [the school of] R. Eleazar b. Shammu'a, his disciples combined against me like the cocks of Beth Bukya[6] and did not let me learn more than this single thing in our Mishnah: R. ELIEZER STATED: [FOR COPULATION WITH] AN HERMAPHRODITE THE PENALTY OF STONING IS INCURRED AS [IF HE WERE] A MALE.

MISHNAH. SOME WOMEN ARE PERMITTED[7] TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBldden[7] TO THEIR LEVlrs,[8] OTHERS ARE PERMITTED[7] TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN[7] TO THEIR HUSBANDS, OTHERS ARE PERMITTED TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER, WHILE OTHERS ARE FORBIDDEN TO THE FORMER AS WELL AS TO THE LATTER. IN THE FOLLOWING CASES THE WOMEN[9] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR LEVIRS: IF A COMMON PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST; IF A HALAL[10] WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS[11] HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS;[12] IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, ‘OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED[7] TO THEIR HUSBANDS AND FORBIDDEN[7] TO THEIR LEVIRS.

THE FOLLOWING[9] ARE PERMITTED[7] TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN[7] TO THEIR HUSBANDS: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW[13] HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST; IF ONE OF LEGITIMATE STATUS[12] WHO MARRIED A HALALAH[10] HAD A BROTHER A HALAL;[10] IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE PERMITTED TO THEIR LEVIRS AND FORBIDDEN TO THEIR HUSBANDS.

THE FOLLOWING[14] ARE FORBIDDEN[15] TO BOTH THE FORMER AND THE LATTER;[16] IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST, OR IF A COMMON PRIEST OF LEGITIMATE STATUS[17] WHO MARRIED A HALALAH[18] HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS,[17] OR IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE, OR IF A BASTARD WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD, [IN ALL THESE CASES THE WOMEN] ARE FORBIDDEN[15] BOTH TO THE FORMER AND THE LATTER.[16] ALL OTHER WOMEN ARE PERMITTED[15] TO BOTH THEIR HUSBANDS AND THEIR LEVIRS.

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE, [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES,[19] A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR,[20] IS FORBIDDEN TO THE HUSBAND AND PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR; [A WOMAN WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE LEVIR BUT NOT WITHIN THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE HUSBAND IS FORBIDDEN TO THE LEVIR AND PERMITTED TO THE HUSBAND; [WHILE ONE WHO IS WITHIN] THE SECOND GRADE OF KINSHIP TO THE ONE AND TO THE OTHER IS FORBIDDEN TO THE ONE AS WELL AS TO THE OTHER. SHE CANNOT CLAIM EITHER KETHUBAH,[18] OR USUFRUCT,[21] OR ALIMONY, OR HER WORN CLOTHES.[22] [SHOULD A] CHILD [BE BORN HE] IS ELIGIBLE [FOR THE PRIESTHOOD]; BUT THE HUSBAND MUST BE COMPELLED TO DIVORCE HER. A WIDOW, HOWEVER, WHO WAS MARRIED TO A HIGH PRIEST, A DIVORCEE OR HALUZAH WHO WAS MARRIED TO A COMMON PRIEST, A BASTARD OR A NETHINAH[23] WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE, OR THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A NATHIN[23] OR A BASTARD IS ENTITLED TO HER KETHUBAH.

GEMARA. What was the point in teaching MARRIED?[24] He could have taught: ‘Betrothed’![25] And were you to reply that the reason [for the prohibition[26] is only] because he MARRIED, since [in that case][27] a positive[28] as well as a negative[29] precept is involved,[30] but where betrothal only took place the positive precept[26] does override the negative;[31] but [it could be retorted] the whole of our section deals with a positive,[32] versus a negative precept.[33] and the positive nevertheless does not override the negative! — As it was desired to state in the final clause, A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW, [who is forbidden][34] only where [the High Priest] MARRIED her, since in that case he caused her to be a halalah, but [not where he only] betrothed [her in which case] she is permitted [to his brother],[35] he taught in the first clause also: MARRIED.

But why should the expression[36] be determined by[37] the final clause? Let it be determined by[38] the middle clause: IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO BETROTHED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A COMMON PRIEST![39] — The determining factor,[40] rather, is the case immediately following in the same context.[41] As it was desired to teach, IF A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS, where the reason [for her prohibition[42] is] because [the halal] MARRIED her and thus caused her to become a halalah, but where he had only betrothed her she would have been permitted to him; MARRIED was, therefore, taught [here also].[43]

What point, however, was there in teaching, A widow? He should have taught: ‘A virgin’![44]

(3) If any of these was exchanged for a consecrated beast. (Cf. Lev. XXVII, 10). That these cannot be directly consecrated is obvious. Cf. Bek. 14a.

(4) If they themselves were sacred. In the case of the hybrid, tumtum and hermaphrodite their sanctity is possible only where they were born from a consecrated beast. In the case of the terefah and the one extracted by means of the Caesarean operation sanctity is possible if the former was consecrated before it became terefah and the latter while it was still in its embryonic state.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 84b

And should you reply that this Tanna holds the opinion that the original marriage[1] causes the subjection;[2] behold, [it may be pointed out, the case of] the HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS[3] where it is not said that ‘the original marriage causes the subjection’![4] — This[5] is certainly due to the final clause. As it was desired to teach in the final clause, IF A HIGH PRIEST WHO MARRIED A WIDOW HAD A BROTHER A HIGH PRIEST OR A COMMON PRIEST, where [the prohibition[6] applies to] a WIDOW only[7] but [not to] a virgin who is eligible to marry him,[8] therefore, WIDOW was taught [here also].[9]

R. Papa demurred: If the law is in agreement with the following ruling[10] which R. Dimi, when he came,[11] reported in the name of R. Johanan, viz., that if an Egyptian of the second generation married an Egyptian woman of the first generation her son is regarded as belonging to the second generation,[12] [our Mishnah] should also have taught: If an Egyptian of the second generatlon married two Egyptian women, one of the first, and the other of the second generation, and he had sons from the first and from the second, [the wives of these sons], if they[13] married in the proper manner,[14] are permitted to their husbands but forbidden to their levirs,[15] and if they married in the reverse order[16] [the wives] are permitted to their levirs[17] and forbidden to their husbands;[18] proselyte women[19] are permitted to the one as well as to the other,[20] and women who are incapable of procreation are forbidden to the one as well as the other![21] — He taught some cases and omitted others. What else did he omit that he should have omitted this also? — He omitted [the case of the man] wounded in the stones.[22] If this is all that can be pointed out,[23] the case of the man wounded in the stones cannot be regarded as an instance of an omission, since those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts were [already] mentioned![24] — Were not several specific cases mentioned[25] of those that are subject to the penalty of negative precepts? Surely it was stated, IF A COMMON PRIEST MARRIED A WIDOW and then again IF A HALAL MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS![26] That case[27] was required [for the specific purpose] of informing us [that the law is] in agreement with [the ruling] Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab. For Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth.[28]

But, surely, he taught regarding A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS and then again regarding AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE AND HE HAD A BROTHER A BASTARD![29] — This also is not a repetition of what was already taught, since thereby he taught us [first] regarding a negative precept which is not applicable to all[30] and then he taught us regarding a negative precept which is applicable to all. But did he not teach[31] IF AN ISRAELITE WHO MARRIED A BASTARD HAD A BROTHER AN ISRAELITE![32] Con sequently[33] it must be concluded that he taught some cases while others he omitted. This proves it.

[Reverting to] the main text, ‘Rab Judah reported in the name Of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth’. Might it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? [It was stated], A HALAL WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF LEGITIMATE STATUS; does not [this refer to] a priestess (who was fitting unto him);[34] and is not the meaning of[35] LEGITIMATE STATUS eligible for priesthood![36] — No; [it might refer to] the daughter of an Israelite, and LEGITIMATE STATUS means[35] eligible for the assembly.[37] If so, HAD A BROTHER OF LEGITIMATE STATUS would also [mean] 'eligible for the assembly', from which it would follow that he himself is ineligible for the assembly![38] Consequently it must refer to a priest; and since he is a priest she also must be a priestess.[39] What an argument! Each phrase may bear its own peculiar interpretation.[40]

Rabin b. Nahman raised an objection: They shall not take . . . they shall not take[41] teaches[42] that the prohibition was addressed to the woman through the man![43] — Raba replied, [This is the meaning]: Where the prohibition is applicable to him it is also applicable to her, but where it is not applicable to him it is also inapplicable to her.[44] Is this,[45] however, deduced from this text? Surely it was deduced from a text which Rab Judah expounded in the name of Rab! For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab and so it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael: When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit;[46] Scripture compared the woman to the man in respect of all the punishments in the Torah![47] — If deduction had been made from that [text][46] it might have been assumed [to apply only to] a prohibition that is equally applicable to all, but not to a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all.[48]

(1) Of the deceased brother.

(2) Of the woman to the levirate marriage, i.e. , the widow's status at the time of her husband's death is determined by the status in which she found herself when he married her, not by that in which his death placed her, consequently if at the time of the marriage she was a virgin she would not have been regarded as a widow and would, therefore, have been permitted to marry a priest.

(3) Who becomes, thereby. disqualified from marrying his brother.

(4) Had this been the case, his brother should have been permitted to marry her, owing to the fact that at the time of her marriage with the deceased (when she presumably became subject to the levirate marriage) she was no halalah.

(5) The mention of WIDOW rather than 'virgin'.

(6) To her husband who was a High Priest. and to the levir who was a common priest.

(7) Who becomes a halalah through such a forbidden marriage.

(8) The High Priest, (her first husband) and, after his death, also his brother if he was a common priest.

(9) In the first case, that of the common priest who married a widow.

(10) Lit., 'if there is that'.

(11) From Palestine to Babylon.

(12) Supra 78a.

(13) The sons.

(14) I.e., if the son of the Egyptian of the second generation, who thus belongs to the third and is permitted to enter the assembly (v. Deut. XXIII, 9), married the daughter of an Israelite; while the other who belongs to the second generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(15) Should one of the brothers die without issue. The son of the third generation is forbidden to marry the Egyptian of the second generation, while the son of the second generation is forbidden to marry the daughter of an Israelite.

(16) I.e., if the son of the second generation married the daughter of an Israelite, while the son of the third generation married an Egyptian of the second generation.

(17) Cf. supra n. 5 mutandis mutandis.

(18) Cf. supra. 6 mutatis mutandis.

(19) Who are not included in the term 'assembly of the Lord' (v. Deut. XXIII, 9).

(20) Both the Israelite and (for the reason indicated in n. 10) the Egyptian of the second generation may marry a proselyte.

(21) The son of the second generation may not marry her because she is the daughter of an Israelite, while after his death she is forbidden to his brother because a woman who is incapable of procreation is not subject to the levirate marriage and is consequently forbidden to him as his brother's wife.

(22) In respect of such a maimed person, prohibition and permission similar to those in our Mishnah could be stated: If he is maimed and his brother is fit the woman is forbidden to him (v. Deut. XXIII, 2) and permitted to his brother; if he is fit and his brother maimed she is permitted to him and forbidden to his brother; if both are maimed etc. proselyte women are permitted to both.

(23) Lit., ‘if because of’.

(24) And among these, this case also is included. What proof, then, is there that any cases other than that of R. Dimi were omitted?

(25) Lit., ‘did be not teach and then taught again’.

(26) Which proves that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(27) Of a halal who married a woman of legitimate status.

(28) Kid. 731, 76a, infra 85a. The purpose of our Mishnah in giving the law of the halal was not to teach the prohibition of the woman to the levir (which, of course, as pointed out supra, was unnecessary) but her permission to marry a husband though he is a halal and she is of legitimate status or of pure priestly stock. The prohibition to marry one of impure stock is incumbent upon the man and not upon the woman.

(29) Which shews that the Mishnah did not avoid giving more than one example of the same type of prohibition.

(30) The case of the halal is applicable to priests only, not to Israelites.

(31) Lit., ‘surely he taught’.

(32) Also a case of a negative precept! (cf. n. 7). Cur. edd. insert In parenthesis ‘and a bastard who married a bastard and he has a brother an Israelite’, which Rashal omits.

(33) Lit., ‘but not’?

(34) Though he may marry the daughter of an Israelite he should preferably marry the daughter of a priest. Cf. Pes. 49a. [The bracketed words are rightly omitted in MS.M].

(35) Lit., ‘and what’.

(36) To marry a priest. Which is in agreement with the opinion of Rab.

(37) I.e. ‘ to marry an Israelite.

(38) Surely not!

(39) I.e., since the term ‘legitimate status in the case of the man has reference to a priest, so the reference in the case of the woman must be to a priestess which shews that a priestess may marry one of tainted birth.

(40) Lit., ‘that as it is and that as it is’.

(41) Lev. XXI, 7.

(42) Since the expression was repeated.

(43) This is now assumed to mean that as the untainted priest may not marry a halalah so may not the untainted priestess marry a halal. An objection against the opinion of Rab.

(44) The halalah whom an untainted priest is forbidden to marry is herself forbidden to marry such a priest. The untainted priestess however, whom a halal is not forbidden to marry, may also marry the halal.

(45) The equality of men and women in respect of prohibitions

(46) Num. v, 6.

(47) Whether flogging or kareth.

(48) That of the priesthood does not apply to Israelites. Hence it was necessary to have the text of Lev. XXI, 7.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85a

Behold, however, [the prohibition against] defilement[1] which is a prohibition that is not equally applicable to all[2] and [yet the sole] reason [why it is inapplicable to woman is] because the All Merciful wrote The sons of Aaron[3] and not the daughters of Aaron; had, however, no such text been available[4] it would have been assumed that women also come under the same obligation. What is the reason? Obviously[5] because of the deduction Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab![6] — No; this might have been deduced from They shall not take.[7]

Others Say:[8] [The prohibition in regard] to marrying had to be specified.[9] Since it might have been assumed that it[10] should be inferred from [that relating to] defilement,[11] therefore he taught us[12] [that women are subject to the same prohibition as men].

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua once happened to be at Hinzebu,[13] the town of R. Idi b. Abin, when the following question was asked of them: Were women of legitimate [priestly] status forbidden to be married to men of tainted birth or not? R. Papa replied, ‘You have learned it [in the following]. Ten different genealogical classes went up from Babylon:[14] Priests, Levites, Israelites, halalim,[15] proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,[16] shethuki[17] and asufi.[17] Priests, Levites and Israelites may intermarry with one another. Levites, Israelites, halalim, proselytes and emancipated slaves may intermarry with one another. Proselytes, emancipated slaves, bastards, nethinim,[16] shethuki[17] and asufi[17] are permitted to intermarry with one another.’[18] That daughters of priests, however, [may be married to a] halal was not mentioned.[19] Said R. Huna son of R. Joshua to him: Only cases where the women may marry the men, and the men may marry the women were enumerated;[20] the case of the Priest, however,[21] was not mentioned, because a halalah, should he even desire to marry one, is forbidden to him.[22] When they came before R. Idi b. Abin he said to them, ‘O, school-children! Thus said Rab Judah in the name of Rab: Women of legitimate [priestly] status were not forbidden to be married to men of illegitimate Status’.[23]

[IN RESPECT OF] RELATIVES OF THE SECOND GRADE [WHO ARE FORBIDDEN] BY THE ORDINANCES OF THE SCRIBES etc. The men of Bairi[24] enquired of R. Shesheth: Is a woman who is of the second grade of kinship to her husband but not to her levir entitled to claim her kethubah from the levir or not? [Do we say that] since a Master said that her kethubah[25] is a charge on the estate of her first husband[26] she has no [claim upon the levir];[27] or, possibly, since the Rabbis have ordained that wherever she is unable to obtain it from her first husband[28] [she may collect it] from the second, she[29] is entitled to claim it[30] [from the levir]? R. Shesheth replied, ‘You have learned this: Her kethubah[25] is a charge upon the estate of her first husband, but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

Does [the expression,[31] however,] imply that some [widows] do receive their[30] kethubah from the levir![32] — There is a lacuna, and thus it is the correct reading:[33] Her kethubah[25] is a charge upon the estate of her first husband; and if she obtains nothing from the first, the Rabbis have ordained [that she is to receive it] from the second; but if she was a relative of the second grade of kinship to her husband she receives nothing even from the levir.

R. Eleazar enquired of R. Johanan: Is a widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or a haluzah [who was married] to a common priest entitled to maintenance or not? How is this question to be understood? If [it is a case] where she still lives with him,[34] would she, when it is his duty to divorce her,[35] be entitled to receive maintenance![36] — This question was necessary in the case[37] where he went to a country beyond the sea and she borrowed money wherewith to maintain herself;[38] it being desired to ascertain[39] whether, [owing to the fact that] maintenance[39] among the conditions of the kethubah, she is entitled to mainte nance just as she is entitled to the kethubah, or is she entitled to the kethubah only because she receives it and goes, but not to maintenance which might induce her to remain with him? — The other replied: She is not entitled to maintenance.[40] But, surely, it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance.[41] — That was taught In respect of [alimony] after [her husband's] death.[42]

Another reading:[43] He said to him, ‘It was taught: She is entitled to maintenance’.[41] ‘Surely’, [the other asked], ‘it is his duty to divorce her!’[44] ‘But then’, [the first retorted], ‘it was taught: She is entitled to maintenance’![41] — ‘That’, [the other replied], ‘was taught in respect of [alimony] after his death’.[42]

Our Rabbis taught: A widow [who was married] to a High Priest, or a divorcee or haluzah [who was married] to a common priest is entitled to her kethubah, usufruct,[45] alimony and worn clothes,[46] but she becomes thereby unfit, and her child is unfit, and [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. Relatives of the second grade of kinship [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of scribes are entitled neither to kethubah, nor to usufruct,[45] nor to alimony[46] nor to worn clothes;[46] the woman remains fit and her child is fit; but [the husband] is compelled to divorce her. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said, ‘Why was it ordained that a widow married to a High Priest is entitled to her kethubah? Because he becomes unfit[47] and she becomes unfit and wherever he becomes unfit and she becomes unfit[48]

(7) Lev. XXI, 7, from which it has been deduced (supra 84b, end) that women are subject to the same prohibitions as men even where the prohibitions are not applicable to all. Hence the necessity for the text of Lev. XXI, 1 , which excludes women. From Num. v, 6, however, it may still be maintained, deduction could be made only in respect of a prohibition that is applicable to all.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 85b

[the Rabbis] have penalized him [by ordering him to pay her] kethubah.[1] And why was it ordained that relatives of the second grade of kinship, [who are forbidden] by the ordinances of the Rabbis, are not to receive their kethubah? Because the man remains fit and the woman remains fit, and wherever he as well as she remains fit [the Rabbis] have penalized her [by depriving her of her] kethubah.[2] Rabbi said, ‘The former[3] are prohibitions[4] of the Torah, and prohibitions of the Torah require no reinforcement;[5] while the latter[6] are prohibitions of the scribes, and the prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.[7] Another reason[8] is: In the former case the man induces the woman[9] [into the marriage];[10] in the latter case she induces him.[11] Who stated the ‘other reason’? One opinion asserts[12] that it was R. Simeon b. Eleazar who stated it; and he gave an answer[13] [to the question] ‘what is the reason’. ‘What is the reason’, [he said in effect,] ‘why it was ordained that when the man is unfit and the woman is unfit the man is penalized by having to pay the kethubah? Because he induces the woman into the marriage.[14] And what is the reason why when he remains fit and she remains fit she is penalized by losing her kethubah? Because she induces him, [into the marriage’].[15] Another opinion asserts[12] that it was Rabbi[16] who stated it, because the case of the haluzah presented to him the following difficulty: A haluzah, surely, is only Rabbinically [forbidden to be married to a common priest][17] and yet she receives her kethubah.[18] Thereupon he stated: Since the man disqualifies her by Rabbinical law[19] it is he, [who in the former case], induces[20] her [into marriage][21] but in the latter case it is she that induces him [into marriage].[22]

What practical difference is there between [the reason given by] Rabbi and [that given by] R. Simeon b. Eleazar? — R. Hisda replied: The practical difference between them is the case of a bastard or a nethinah [who was married] to an Israelite. According to him who gave the reason[23] that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case[24] also is Pentateuchal;[25] but according to him who gave as the reason,[23] that the man induces the woman[26] then here, it is she that induces him [into the marriage].[27] According to R. Eliezer, however, who[28] stated, ‘Behold he[29] is both a slave and a bastard’,[30] the woman, surely, would not induce the man at all![31] — Rather, said R. Joseph, the practical difference between them[32] is the case of the man who remarried his divorced wife after she had been married.[33] According to him who gave the reason[34] that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case[35] also is Pentateuchal;[36] but according to him who gave as the reason[34] that the man induces the woman[37] then here, surely, she induces him.[38]

But according to R. Akiba who stated that the offspring of a union forbidden under the penalty of a negative precept is deemed to be a bastard,[39] she,[40] surely, would not induce the man at all![41]

Rather, said R. Papal the practical difference between them[42] is the case of a be'ulah[43] [who was married] to a High Priest.[44] According to him who gave as the reason[34] that [the prohibitions were] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateuchal;[45] but according to him who gave as the reason[34] that the man induces the woman,[37] then here, surely, it is she that induces him.[46]

According to R. Eliezer b. Jacob, however, who stated that the offspring of a union that is forbidden under a positive precept is deemed a halal,[47] she,[48] surely, would not at all induce him![49]

Rather, said R. Ashi, the practical difference between them[42] is the case of the man who cohabits again with his doubtful sotah.[50] According to him who stated that the reason[34] is that [the prohibition is] Pentateuchal, then this case also is Pentateucha[46] but according to him who stated that the reason[34] is that the man induces the woman[37] here it is she that induces him.[46]

And according to R. Mathia b. Heresh who stated that even a woman whose husband, while going to arrange for her drinking [of the water of bitterness][51] cohabited with her on the way, is rendered a harlot, she,[52] surely, would not at all induce him [to such a marriage]![53] Rather, said Mar b. R. Ashi, the practical difference between them[54] is the case of a confirmed sotah[55] .

MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE, MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.[56] THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, WAS PREGNANT FROM A LEVITE, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A LEVITE; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP] TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TITHE.[57] THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST, WAS PREGNANT FROM A PRIEST, OR WAS AWAITING THE DECISION OF A LEVIR WHO WAS A PRIEST; AND, SIMILARLY, THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [WHO STOOD IN SUCH RELATIONSHIP TO A LEVITE, MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

GEMARA. And granted that she[58] is [no more than] an ordinary woman,[59] is not any ordinary woman permitted to eat tithe?[60] R. Nahman replied in the name of Samuel: This ruling represents the view of R. Meir[61] who stated: The first tithe is forbidden to common people.[62] For it was taught:

---

(1) The woman is already penalized by a marriage which taints both herself and her husband and which is naturally followed by an unhappy family life. In such circumstances the woman would either not consent to marriage or would be anxious to have such a union severed at the earliest possible moment. The penalty was, therefore, imposed upon the husband.

(2) In order that she might, in consequence, be deterred from contracting such a marriage or, if contracted, be anxious to have it severed.

(3) Lit., ‘those’, the marriage of a widow to a High Priest and that of a divorcee or haluzah to a common priest.

(4) Lit., ‘words’.

(5) Hence there was no need to deprive the woman of her kethubah. Cf. supra n. 1.

(6) Marriages with relatives of the second grade of kinship.

(7) Cf. supra n. 1.

(8) Why in the former case the man is to pay the kethubah while in the latter the woman loses her kethubah.

(9) Lit., ‘(in) this he leads her’. מרגילה denom. of רגל ‘foot’ (cf. Jast.). Colds. (a.l.) renders ‘befleckt er sie’.

(10) The woman is reluctant to contract a marriage which taints her and her children.

(11) As the marriage subjects neither the woman nor her children to any disability, it is assumed that she, as a woman, is more anxious than the man to marry.

(12) Lit., ‘there is (one) who said’.

(13) Lit., ‘he said’.

(14) V. supra notes 8 and 9.

(15) V. supra note 10.

(16) Who had previously explained that the reason why the woman was deprived of her kethubah was because prohibitions of the scribes require reinforcement.

(17) Cf. Kid. 78a.

(18) If Rabbinical prohibitions require reinforcement the haluzah should not have been entitled to her kethubah. (Cf. supra p. 576, n. 2).

(19) [(a) According to Rashi: from eating terumah; (b) MS. M. reads: ‘he disqualifies her seed by rabbinic law’. Cf. also Me'iri].

(24) Of the bastard or the nethinah.
(25) And the woman is, therefore, entitled to her kethubah.
(26) Into the marriage.
(27) She, being in any case forbidden to marry an Israelite, has nothing to lose by her marriage which, under certain conditions, may even be advantageous to her, since according to R. Tarfon (cf. Kid. 69a, supra 78a), it may enable her descendants to become proper Israelites. The woman, therefore, loses her kethubah.
(28) Disagreeing with the view of R. Tarfon. (Cf. supra n. 11).

(35) The remarriage of one's divorcee.
(36) It is pentateuchally forbidden to marry such a woman. (V. Deut. XXIV, 4). Cf. supra p. 57, n. 9.
(37) Into the marriage.
(38) Since the prohibition was addressed to the man; and neither the woman nor her children are subject to any disability in consequence of such a marriage.
(39) V. supra 49a.
(40) The divorced woman who has been married to another man and whose remarriage with her first husband is forbidden by a negative precept.
(41) She would not be anxious to contract a union the issue from which would be bastards.
(42) Rabbi and R. Simeon b. Eleazar.
(43) A woman who has lost her virginity. v. Glos.
(44) Such a union is forbidden under the positive precept. A virgin . . . shall he take (Lev. XXI, 14), and not by a negative one. A negative precept derived from a positive has only the force of a positive. The offspring therefore, would be no bastard even according to R. Akiba.

(53) Which would render her a harlot and her children bastards.
(54) Rabbi and R. Eleazar b. Simeon.
(55) Who is Pentateuchally forbidden to her husband though their offspring is not deemed to be a bastard. As she herself is in any case forbidden to marry a priest she has nothing to lose by cohabiting with her husband, and she would consequently persuade him to live with her again. Hence the ordinance that in such a case she loses the rights to her kethubah.
(56) As explained supra 67b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86a

Terumah to the priest and the first tithe to the Levite;[1] so R. Meir. R. Eleazar b. Azariah permits it to the priest,[2] ‘Permits it’![3] Does this then imply that some authority forbids it?[4] Read, therefore, ‘He may give it to the priest also’. What is R. Meir's reason? R. Aha son of Rabbah replied on the authority of a traditional statement:[5] For the tithe of the children of Israel, which they set apart as terumah unto the Lord,[6] as terumah is forbidden to common people so is the first tithe forbidden to common people. May it be assumed that[7] as in the case of terumah the penalties of death and of a fifth[8] are incurred, so are the penalties of death and of a fifth incurred in the case of tithe? — Scripture stated, And die therein if they profane it[9] . . . then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it;[10] ‘therein’,[11] but not in the tithe; ‘Into it’[12] but not unto tithe. And the Rabbis?[13] — As terumah is a cause of tebel[14] so is the first tithe a cause of tebel;[15] and this is in agreement with what was taught: R. Jose said, It might have been presumed that guilt is incurred only for tebel from which nothing whatsoever[16] had been set apart; whence is it deduced [that guilt is also incurred when] terumah gedolah[17] had been set apart but not the first tithe,[18] first tithe but not the second tithe[19] or even if the poor man's tithe[20] [only had not been set apart]? Scripture stated, Thou mayest not eat within thy gates[21] and further on it was stated, That they may eat within thy gates, and be satisfied;[22] as ‘Thy gates’ which was stated below[22] refers to the poor man's tithe,[23] so ‘Thy gates’ which was stated here[21] refers to the poor man's tithe, and [concerning it] the All Merciful has said, Thou mayest not.[24] And if the deduction had been made from that text[25] only[26] it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept[27] but not [the penalty of] death; hence we were taught [the earlier text[28] also].[29]

Another reading: That the first tithe is a cause of tebel[30] may surely be deduced from the text cited by R. Jose![31] — If [deduction had been made] from that text[25] only[32] it might have been assumed [to imply the penalty] of a negative precept[27] but not the penalty of death; hence we were taught [the earlier text[28] also].[29]

How did you explain it?[33] In accordance with the view of R. Meir! Explain, then, the final clause: THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST . . . TO A LEVITE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE; what [bearing has the question of] non-priestly stock in this case?[34] — R. Shesheth replied: The meaning of[35] the expression,[36] SHE MAY NOT EAT is that she may not give permission to one to set apart[37] the tithe.[38] Does this[39] then imply that a married woman may give such permission? — Yes; and so it was taught: And ye may eat it in every place, ye and your household[40] teaches that a married daughter of an Israelite[41] may give permission for terumah[42] to be set apart.[43] You say: Permission for terumah[43] to be set apart; perhaps it is not so, but to eat it?[44] It can be replied: If she[45] may eat terumah which is subject to greater restrictions, how much more may she[46] eat tithe which is subject to lesser restrictions.[47] The text[48] must consequently[49] have taught that a married daughter of an Israelite may give permission for terumah[42] to be set apart.[43]

Mar the son of Rabana[50] stated: This[51] teaches that she is not given a share in the tithe in the threshing- floors.[52] This is a satisfactory explanation according to him who holds that this[53] is due to considerations of privacy governing the sexes;[54] according to him, however, who holds that this[53] is due to [possible abuse by] a divorced woman,[55] may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite[56] eat tithe?[57] — And according to your argument, may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a priest eat terumah![58] But [the fact is that the ordinance[59] is] a preventive measure against [abuse by] a divorced woman who was the daughter of an Israelite.[60] If so,[61] what was the point in mentioning BETROTHED? [The same rule should be applied] even to one who was married! — As in the first clause BETROTHED was taught,[62] BETROTHED was also taught in the final clause.[63]

Our Rabbis taught: Terumah gedolah[64] belongs to the priest, and the first tithe belongs to the Levite; so R. Akiba. R. Eleazar b. Azariah said:

---

(1) As the terumah must be given to the priest and may be eaten by priests only and not by common peopled so must the first tithe also be given to Levites and be eaten by Levites only and not by common people (v. Rashi).

(2) Keth. 26a.

(3) The eating of tithe by a priest.

(4) Which is absurd. A priest, surely, is not included among the ‘common’ people to whom tithe should be forbidden!

(5) Attributed to R. Meir himself.

(6) Num. XVIII, 24; terumah (E.V. gift) and tithe having been mentioned in juxtaposition.

(7) Lit., ‘if’.

(8) Cf. Lev. XXII. 14.

(9) Ibid. 9.

(10) Ibid. 14.

(11) Shall the penalty of death be incurred.

(12) Shall a fifth be added.

(13) How do they explain the comparison between the terumah and tithe to which Scripture points?

(14) טבל v. Glos. The penalty for eating tebel is death.

(15) V. supra n. 18, though for the eating of the tithe itself no death penalty is incurred.

(16) Neither the priestly, nor the levitical dues.

(17) V. Glos.

(18) Which is not so sacred as terumah, being permitted to Levites.

(19) Which even common people are permitted to eat. Cf. Deut. XIV, 22-27.

(20) Which is not even sacred, it being regarded as mere alms.

(21) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(22) Ibid. XXVI, 12, speaking of the tithe of the poor man.

(23) The text speaking of the third year, (ibid.). The third and the sixth year of the Septennial cycle are the years in which the poor man's, instead of the second tithe is given to all who are in need of it.

(24) Eat, (ibid. XII, 17), before it is set apart from the produce.

(25) Deut. XII, 17, speaking of tithe.

(26) Lit., ‘and if from there’.

(27) For the eating of the tithe, since the prohibition only was stated, but no death penalty was mentioned.

(28) Num. XVIII, 24.

(29) From which a comparison is made between the tithe and terumah. Cf. supra p. 580. n. 10.

(30) V. Glos.

(31) In the Baraitha just discussed. What need, then, was there for the comparison deduced from Num. XVIII, 24?

(32) Lit., ‘if from that’.

(33) The reference to tithe in the case of THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS BETROTHED TO A LEVITE, and THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE... TO AN ISRAELITE.

(34) Lit., ‘what strangeness is there here’; neither the daughter of a priest nor the daughters of a Levite are ‘strangers’ or ‘common’ women to whom tithe is forbidden.

(35) Lit., ‘what’.

(36) Lit., ‘that was taught’.

(37) From the produce of her betrothed, or of the levir whose decision she is awaiting.

(38) And the terumah of this tithe (cf. Num. XVIII, 26) so that she might be enabled to eat of the tithe. The reason for the prohibition is not because the tithe is forbidden to her, but because she is not entitled to appoint an agent for the setting apart of terumah without the owner's knowledge.

(39) Since BETROTHED was mentioned.
(40) Num. XVIII, 31. The husband (ye) was compared to his wife (household; בית term for ‘wife’).
(41) I.e., one married to a Levite.
(42) From her husband's produce.
(43) Cf. supra note 5.
(44) The tithe.
(45) The wife of a priest, because she is entitled to the same rights as her husband.
(46) The wife of a Levite who also, like the wife of the priest, is entitled to her husband's rights.
(47) As this law is so obvious there was no need to have a Scriptural text from which to deduce it.
(48) V. supra n. 7.
(49) Lit., ‘but’. Since it is available for a comparison between husband and wife.
(50) Or ‘Rabina’ (v. Rashi).
(51) The final clause in our Mishnah, THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE TO A PRIEST and THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST TO A LEVITE.
(52) If she comes unaccompanied by her husband. The first clause will, however, refer to eating and is in accordance with R. Meir's view.
(53) The prohibition to give a share in the terumah or tithe to a woman when she comes alone to the threshing-floor.
(54) יחוד v. Glos. s.v. yihud and cf. infra 100a.
(55) Who might continue to collect tithe at the threshing- floors even after her divorce from her husband when she returns to her former status of an ordinary woman and forbidden to share in the priestly dues and, according to R. Meir, also in the levitical tithe.
(56) Another reading, ‘May not the daughter of a priest eat terumah? — And according to your argument may not a divorced woman who is the daughter of a Levite eat tithe?’ Cur. edd. enclose the reading of our text in parenthesis.
(57) Of course she may. Why, then, should she be refused a share in the tithe even in the absence of her husband!
(58) She undoubtedly may. Why then is the wife of a priest refused a share in terumah in the absence of her husband (cf. infra 100a) irrespective of whether she is the daughter of a priest or of an Israelite?
(59) V. p. 582, n. 20.
(60) Such a preventive measure is, of course, applicable to the daughter of a Levite in respect of tithe in the same way as to the daughter of a priest in respect of terumah.
(61) That the prohibition is merely a preventive measure.
(62) In the first clauses the expression BETROTHED was essential, since the object of the Mishnah was to state that betrothal alone does not confer upon the daughter of an Israelite the right of eating terumah and tithe, and upon the daughter of a Levite the right to terumah, if the former was betrothed to a priest or a Levite and the latter to a priest; and that even betrothal, and not only marriage, deprives the daughter of a priest and the daughter of a Levite of the right of eating terumah and tithe respectively if the man was in the former case an Israelite or a Levite and in the latter case an Israelite.
(63) Where the reference is to the woman's eligibility to call for a share in the tithe; though in this case the woman, whether betrothed or married, is subject to the same restriction.
(64) V. Glos.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 86b

To the priest.[1] ‘To the priest’, but not to the Levite![2] — Read: To the priest also.

What is R. Akiba's reason? — Because it is written, Moreover thou shalt speak unto the Levites, and say unto them;[3] Scripture thus refers specifically to the Levites. And the other?[4] — His view follows that of R. Joshua b. Levi. For R. Joshua b. Levi stated: In twenty-four passages were the priests described as Levites, and the following is one of them: But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok.[5] And R. Akiba? You cannot say so[6] here; for it is written, And ye may eat it in every place,[7] [it is to be given to him only] who ‘may eat it in every place’; a priest , however, is excluded since he may not eat it in a graveyard.[8] And the other? — [The meaning[9] is] wherever he wishes: Neither is it required [to eat it within the] wall[10] nor is a man subject to flogging for eating it while his body is levitically unclean.

There was a certain garden from which R. Eleazar b. Azariah[11] used to receive the first tithe. R. Akiba went and transferred its gate so that it faced a graveyard.[12] ‘Akiba with his bag’,[13] the other remarked, ‘and I have to live’!

It was stated: Why were the Levites penalized [by being deprived of the] tithe?[14] — R. Jonathan and Sabia [are in dispute on the matter]. One holds: Because they did not go up[15] in the days of Ezra;[16] and the other holds: In order that the priests might depend upon it[17] during the days of their uncleanness.[18]

According to him who holds [that the Levites were deprived of the tithe] because ‘they did not go up’, one can well understand why they were penalized. According to him, however, who gave as the reason, ‘In order that the priests may depend upon it during the days of their uncleanness’, were the Levites penalized for the sake of the priests! Rather, all agree[19] that the penalization was due to their not going up in the days of Ezra; they differ, however, on the following point: One is of the opinion that their forfeit belonged to the poor, while the other is of the opinion that priests, during the days of their uncleanness, are also regarded as poor.

Why, then,[20] did R. Akiba[21] transfer the gate so that it faced a graveyard?[22] — It was this that he[23] said to him:[24] If you come [to claim it] as a forfeit, you are entitled to it; but if you come [to demand it] as your share, you have no [claim upon it].

Whence is it deduced that they[25] did not go up in the days of Ezra? — It is written, And I gathered them together to the river that runneth to Ahava; and there we encamped three days,’ and I viewed the people and the priests, and found there none of the sons of Levi.[26]

R. Hisda stated: At first, officers were appointed from the Levites only, for it is said, And the officers of the Levites before you;[27] but now, officers are appointed from the Israelites only, for it is said, ‘And officers over you shall come from the majority’.[28] MISHNAH. THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE WHO WAS MARRIED TO A PRIEST MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HE DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY][29] MARRIED TO A LEVITE, SHE MAY EAT OF THE TITHE.[30] IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY CONTINUE TO EAT OF THE TITHE. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAS A SON BY HIM, SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED, SHE MAY AGAIN EAT OF THE TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED, SHE MAY EAT NEITHER TERUMAH NOR TITHE.

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH.[1] IF HE DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A LEVITE SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TITHE. IF SHE WAS [SUBSEQUENTLY] MARRIED TO A PRIEST SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF THE LATTER DIED AND SHE HAD A SON BY HIM SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE PRIEST DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY NOT EAT TITHE. IF HER SON BY THE ISRAELITE DIED SHE RETURNS TO THE HOUSE OF HER FATHER; AND IT IS CONCERNING SUCH A WOMAN THAT IT WAS SAID, AND IS RETURNED UNTO HER FATHER'S HOUSE, AS IN HER YOUTH, SHE MAY EAT OF HER FATHER'S BREAD.[2]

GEMARA. IF HER SON BY THE LEVITE DIED SHE MAY AGAIN EAT TERUMAH, because she is again entitled to eat it by virtue of her son;[3] whence is this[4] derived? — R. Abba replied in the name of Rab: [From the use of the expression,] But a daughter[5] [instead of] 'a daughter'.[6] In accordance with whose view?[7] Is it in accordance with that of R. Akiba who bases expositions on Wawin![8] — It may be said [to be in agreement] even [with the view of the] Rabbis, since the entire expression But a daughter[5] is superfluous.[9]

Our Rabbis taught: When she[10] returns,[11] she returns only to [the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder.[12] Said R. Hisda in the name of Rabina b. Shila, ‘What Scriptural text proves this?[13] — She shall not eat of the terumah of the holy things,[14] she must not eat of that which is set apart[15] from the holy things’.[16] R. Nahman replied[17] in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: Of [her father's] bread,[5] but not all [her father's] bread;[18] this excludes the breast and the shoulder.[12] Rami b. Hama demurred: Might it not be suggested that this[19] excludes the invalidation of vows![20] Raba replied: A Tanna of the school of R. Ishmael has long ago settled this difficulty. For a Tanna of the School of R. Ishmael taught: What need was there for Scripture to state, But the vow of a widow, or of her that is divorced . . . shall stand against her?[21] Is she not free from the authority of her father and also from that of her husband![22] The fact is that where the father had entrusted [his daughter] to the representatives of the husband, or where the representatives of the father had entrusted her to the representatives of the husband, and on the way[23] she became a widow or was divorced, [it would not have been known] whether she was to be described as of[24] the house of her father[25] or as of the house of her husband;[26] hence the need for the text[27] to tell you that as soon as she had left her father's authority, even if only for a short while, he may no more invalidate her vows.[28]

R. Safra replied:[29] She may eat of her father's bread,[30] only bread but no flesh.[31] R. Papa replied:[29] She may eat of her father's bread,[30] only the bread which is the property of her father;[32] excluding however, the breast and the shoulder which [priests] obtain from the table of the Most High.[33]

Raba, however, replied:[29] And the breast of the waving and the thigh of heaving shall ye eat . . . thou, and thy daughters with thee,[34] only when they are with thee.[35]

R. Adda b. Ahabah stated that a Tanna taught: When she[36] returns to her father's house, she returns [only to the privilege of eating] terumah, but does not return to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulders. [If she[37] returns, however,] by virtue of her son,[38] she returns also to [the privilege of eating] the breast and the shoulder.[39] R. Mordecai went and recited this traditional statement in the presence of R. Ashi, when the latter said to him, ‘Whence [has this case][40] been included?[41] From "But a daughter".[42] Should she, then, be more important than the other!’[43] — There,[43] the excluding texts were written;[44] but here[40] no excluding texts were written.

THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST WHO WAS MARRIED TO AN ISRAELITE etc. Our Rabbis taught: And is returned unto her father's house,[42] excludes one who is awaiting the decision of the levir;[45] as in her youth,[42] excludes a pregnant woman.[46] But could not this [law,[47] however, be arrived at by] logical argument: If where a child by a first husband is not regarded as the child by the second husband, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage,[48] the embryo is nevertheless regarded as a born child,[49] how much more should the embryo be regarded as a born child where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second, in respect of depriving a woman of her right to terumah![50] No; this is no argument.[51] If an embryo was regarded as a born child in respect of the levirate marriage, where the dead were given the same status as the living,[52] should an embryo be regarded as a born child in respect of terumah, where the dead were not given the same status as the living?[53] Consequently Scripture expressly stated, As in her youth,[54] to exclude a pregnant woman.

And it was necessary for Scripture to write, As[55] in her youth, to exclude the pregnant woman; and also[56] And have no child,[54] to[57] exclude one who has a born child. For had the All Merciful written only And have no child,[54] it might have been assumed [that only a woman who has a born child is forbidden to eat terumah, because] at first[58] there was one body and now there are two bodies,[59] but that a pregnant woman, who formed at first[58] one body and is now also one body only, may eat, [hence the second text[60] was] required. And had the All Merciful written of the pregnant woman only it might have been assumed [that only she is forbidden to eat terumah] because at first[58] her body

(22) And since none of them could in consequence annul her vows, it is obvious that such vows stand against her. What need, then, was there for the text of Num. XXX, 10?
(23) To her husband's home.
(24) Lit., 'how I read about her'.
(25) Since she has not reached the house of her husband and has consequently not yet passed entirely out of her father's authority. Hence her father would still have the power of invalidating her vows.
(26) And her vows, like those of any other widow, could not be invalidated by her father.

(35) I.e., before their marriage to non-priests, may the breast and the shoulder be eaten by them.
(36) A priest's daughter.
(37) V. p. 588, n. 16; or the daughter of an Israelite. (V. next note).
(38) If she was married, for instance, to an Israelite and after his death resumed her right to eat terumah by virtue of a son whom she previously had by a priest.
(39) Since the exclusion of the right to the breast and the shoulder was mentioned in the former case only.
(40) That of the woman who derives her right to terumah from her son.

(41) Among those entitled to eat terumah.
(42) V. Lev. XXII, 13.
(43) The daughter who derives her right to terumah from her father.
(44) V. supra n. 3.
(45) Who is not eligible to eat terumah, because she is not completely returned to her father's house, being still bound to the levir.
(46) Who, being with child, does not return as in her youth.
(47) That a pregnant woman, like one who has a born child, does not regain her right to eat terumah.
(48) A woman whose husband died without issue is not exempt from the levirate marriage, though she may have a son by a former husband.
(49) A pregnant woman is not subject to the levirate marriage.
(50) A priest's daughter whose Israelite husband died without issue is forbidden to eat terumah, just as if she had had a son by him, if she had a son by any former Israelite husband of hers. Now, since the law could be arrived at by inference a minori ad majus, the Scriptural text stating the same law is, surely, superfluous!
(51) Lit., ‘what (reasoning) for me’!
(52) A child whose death occurred after the death of his father exempts his mother from the levirate marriage as if he were still alive.
(53) Only a live child deprives his mother, the daughter of a priest who married an Israelite, from her right to eat terumah after the death of her husband. As soon as the child dies his mother regains her lost right.

was empty and now it is full, but not [a woman whose child was already born],[1] whose body was at first empty and is now also empty, [hence was the first text[2] also] required.[3]

(Mnemonic.[4] He said to him: Let us not make[5] and make[6] in death; let us make and not make in the child of the levir and terumah.)[7]

Said Rab Judah of Diskarta[8] to Raba: The dead should not be given[9] the same status as the living, in respect of the levirate marriage, by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of disqualifying the woman from the eating of terumah,[10] the dead were not given the same status as the living,[11] how much less should the dead be given the same status as the living[12] where the child of the first husband is not regarded as the son of the second, in respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage![13] It was expressly stated, Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace.[14]

Then let the dead be given[15] the same status as the living in respect of terumah by inference a minori ad majus: If where a child by the first husband is not regarded as the child of the second In respect of exempting the woman from the levirate marriage,[13] the dead were given the same status as the living,[16] how much more so should the dead be given the same status as the living[17] where a child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second, in respect of disqualifying the woman from terumah![18] It was expressly stated, And [she] have no child[19] and she, surely, has none.[20]

Let the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second husband in respect of the levirate marriage by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were not given the same status as the living, in respect of terumah[21] the child of the first husband is regarded as the son of the second,[22] how much more should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second[23] where the dead were given the status of the living in respect of the levirate marriage![21] — It was expressly stated, And [he] have no child,[24] and this man, surely, has none.

Then let the child of the first husband not be regarded as the child of the second husband, in respect of terumah, by inference a minori ad majus: If where the dead were given the same status as the living, in respect of exempting her from the levirate marriage, the child of the first husband was not regarded as the child of the second,[22] how much less should the child of the first husband be regarded as the child of the second, where the dead were not regarded as the living in respect of eating terumah![21] — It was specifically stated, And [she] have none,[25] but she surely has [one].

CHAPTER X

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND HAD GONE TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA AND ON BEING TOLD,[26] ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, MARRIED, MUST, IF HER HUSBAND SUBSEQUENTLY RETURNED, LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER, AND SHE ALSO REQUIRES[27] A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM THE ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE[28] OR WORN CLOTHES[29] EITHER AGAINST THE FIRST HUSBAND OR AGAINST THE SECOND. IF SHE HAS TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER, SHE MUST RETURN IT. THE CHILD BEGOTTEN BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR BY THE OTHER IS A BASTARD;[30] NEITHER OF THEM[31] MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER;[32] NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND[33] OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS;[34] AND NEITHER HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS.[35] IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST; IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE, FROM THE EATING OF TITHE; AND IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH. NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH, AND IF [THE HUSBANDS] DIE, THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH REMAINS A CHARGE UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND. R. ELEAZAR SAID: THE FIRST HUSBAND IS ENTITLED TO WHATEVER SHE MAY FIND, OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, AND ALSO HAS THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS. R. SIMEON SAID: HER COHABITATION OR HALIZAH WITH THE BROTHER OF THE FIRST HUSBAND EXEMPTS HER RIVAL,[36] AND A CHILD BEGOTTEN BY HIM[37] IS NOT A BASTARD. IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION[38] SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM.[37] IF[39] SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN,[40] SHE MUST LEAVE,[41] BUT IS EXEMPT FROM AN OFFERING.[42] IF SHE MARRIED, HOWEVER, WITHOUT THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN, SHE MUST LEAVE[41] AND IS ALSO LIABLE TO AN OFFERING. THE AUTHORITY OF THE BETH DIN IS THUS MORE EFFECTIVE IN THAT IT EXEMPTS HER FROM THE OFFERING. IF THE BETH DIN RULED[43] THAT SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE WENT AND DISGRACED HERSELF[44] SHE[45] MUST BRING AN OFFERING, BECAUSE THE BETH DIN PERMITTED HER ONLY TO MARRY.[46]

GEMARA. Since in the final clause it was stated, IF SHE MARRIES WITHOUT PERMISSION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, [which means obviously], without the authorization of the Beth din but [in reliance on the evidence] of witnesses, the first clause, it is to be inferred, [speaks of a woman who married] with the permission of the Beth din and on the evidence of a single witness.[47] Thus it clearly follows that one witness is trusted. Furthermore, we learned: The practice was adopted of allowing a marriage on the evidence of one witness reporting[48] another single witness, and of a woman reporting another woman, and of a woman reporting a bondman or a bondwoman;[49] from which it is obvious that one witness is trusted. Furthermore we learned: [The man to whom] one witness said, 'You have eaten[50] suet',[51] and who replied, 'I have not eaten', is exempt.[52] Now the reason [for his exemption is] because he said, 'l have not eaten'; had he, however, remained silent [the witness] would have been trusted.[53] From this it is clearly evident that one witness is trusted in accordance with Pentateuchal law;[54] whence is this[55] deduced? From what was taught: If his sin... be known to him,[56] but not when others have made it known to him. As it might have been assumed that even where he does not contradict the evidence he is exempt, it was expressly stated, If. . . be known to him,[57] in any manner.[58] Now, how is this statement to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to a case] where two witnesses appeared, and he does not contradict them, what need then was there for a Scriptural text![59] Must it not then refer to the case of[60] one witness, and yet [we see that] when the accused does not contradict him he is trusted.[61] From this, then, it maybe inferred that one witness is to be trusted.[54] But whence is it inferred that [the reason[62] is] because he is trusted? Is it not possible that it is due to the fact that the other had remained silent, silence being regarded as an admission! You can have proof that this is so,[63] since in the final clause it was stated: [A man to whom] two witnesses said, 'You have eaten[64] suet,[65] and who replied. 'I have not eaten',is exempt; but R. Meir declares him guilty. Said R. Meir: This[66] may be inferred a minori ad majus. If two witnesses may bring upon a man the severe penalty of death, should they not be able to bring upon him the minor penalty of a sacrifice! The others replied: What if he desired to say, 'I have acted presumptuously'![67] Now, in the first clause,[68]

(64) Unwittingly.
(65) חלב forbidden fat.
(66) That the evidence of the two witnesses is accepted despite the denial of the accused.
(67) For a presumptuous sin no sin-offering is brought. In such a case the evidence of the witnesses would be of no value. They can only testify to one's action but not to one's motive or state of mind. Since the accused could annul the evidence by such a plea he is also believed when he simply contradicts the evidence.
(68) Where the accusation comes from one witness.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 88a

on what grounds do the Rabbis declare the man liable?[1] If it be suggested: Because he[2] is believed; surely [here it may be objected], even in the case of two witnesses, who in all other cases are trusted though the accused contradicts them, the Rabbis have exempted him![3] The reason[4] must consequently be[5] because the accused remained silent, and silence is regarded as admission![6]

[The fact], however, [is that this[7] is arrived at] by[8] a logical inference, this case being analogous to that of a piece of fat[9] concerning which there is doubt as to whether it was of the forbidden,[10] or of the permitted kind; if a single witness came and declared, ‘l am certain that it was permitted fat’, he is trusted.[11] Are [the two cases] similar? There[12] the prohibition[13] was not established; here[14] the prohibition of a married woman is established,[15] and no question of sexual relationship [may be decided on the evidence of] less than two witnesses! This[16] is rather analogous[17] to the case of a piece that was definitely forbidden fat;[18] if a single witness came and declared, ‘I am certain that it was permitted fat,’ he is not believed.[19] But are these cases, similar? In that case,[20] should even a hundred witnesses come they would not be believed; in this case,[16] however, since should two witnesses come they would be trusted, one witness also should be trusted! This[16] is rather analogous to the cases of tebel,[21] and consecrated and konam[21] objects.[22]

Whose tebel[21] is here to be understood? If his own,[23] [he would naturally be trusted] since it is in his power to make it fit for use;[24] if, however, it is that of another person, [the question may still be urged], what view is here adopted: If it is maintained that a man who sets apart priestly dues for his neighbours’ produce out of his own does not require the owner s consent [it is quite obvious why the witness is here trusted] since it is in his power to make it fit for use;[24] and if it is maintained that the owner's consent is required and that the witness declares, ‘I know that he has made it fit for use’, whence is this very law[25] derived? As regards consecrated objects also, if it was a consecration of the value of an object [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is in his power to redeem it;[26] but if an object has been consecrated,[27] [the objection may still be raised]: If it were his own[23] [he would naturally be trusted] since it is within his right to ask for the disallowance of his vow;[28] if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, ‘I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow’, whence is this very law[29] derived? With reference to konam[30] objects also, if it is maintained that the law of trespass[31] is applicable to konam objects and that the sanctity of their value[32] descends upon them [it is obvious why one witness is trusted] since it is within his power to redeem them;[33] and if it is maintained that the law of trespass[31] is not applicable to konam objects[34] and that it is only a mere prohibition with which he is saddled[35] [the question may be urged]: If any such object was his own [it is natural that he should be trusted] since it is within his power to ask for the disallowance of his vow;[36] if, however, it belonged to another man, and the witness declared, ‘I know that its owner has asked for the disallowance of his vow, whence is this very law[37] derived?

R. Zera replied:[38] Owing to the rigidity of the disabilities[39] that were later[40] imposed upon her the law was relaxed in her favour at the beginning.[41] Let there be, however, neither rigid disabilities nor a relaxation of the law! — In order [to avoid] perpetual desertion[42] the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.[43]

MUST . . . LEAVE THE ONE AS WELL AS THE OTHER etc. Rab stated: This was taught only in respect [of a woman] who married on the evidence of a single witness, but if she married on the strength of the evidence of two witnesses, she need not leave.[44] In the West[45] they laughed at him. ‘Her husband’ [they remarked] comes, and there he stands, and you say: She need not leave!’ — This[46] [it may be replied] was required only in the case when the man[47] was not known.[48] If he[49] is unknown, why is she to leave [her second husband] even where she only married on the evidence of a single witness? This is required only in the case where two witnesses came and stated, ‘We were with him[49] from the moment he left until now, but you it is who are unable to recognize him’;[50] as it is written, And Joseph knew his brethren but they knew him not,[51] on which R. Hisda remarked: This teaches that he went forth without any marks[52] of a beard and now he appeared with a full[52] beard. But, after all, there are two[53] against two (18) Which someone has eaten.

(19) The question, therefore, remains whence is it inferred that the evidence of one witness is admissible.

(20) Where the forbidden nature of the fat is established.

(21) V. Glos.

(22) Where the evidence of a single witness is accepted though the prohibitions were established. From such a case that of the woman in our Mishnah may reasonably be inferred.

(23) That of the witness.

(24) He can at any moment set apart the priestly dues and thus render the produce fit for everybody's consumption Such an argument is, of course, inapplicable to the case in our Mishnah.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 88b

and he who cohabits with her[1] is liable to bring an asham talui![2] R. Shesheth replied:[3] When she was married, for instance, to one of her witnesses.[4] But she herself is liable to an asham talui![5] — Where[3] she states, ‘I am certain’,[6] If so, what need was there to state [such an obvious ruling], when even R. Menahem son of R. Jose[7] maintained his view only where the witnesses[8] came first and the woman married afterwards, but not[9] where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards! For it was taught: If two witnesses state that he[10] was dead and two state that he was not dead, or if two state that the woman was divorced and two state that she was not divorced, the woman must not marry again, but if she married she need not leave;[11] R. Menahem, son of R. Jose, however, ruled that she must leave.[10] Said R. Menahem son of R. Jose, ‘When do I rule that she must leave? Only when witnesses came first and she married afterwards, but where she married first and the witnesses came afterwards, she need not leave!’[12] — Rab also spoke of the case where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, [his object being] to exclude the ruling of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Another reading: The reason there[13] is because she married first and the witnesses came afterwards,[14] but where witnesses came first and the woman married afterwards, she must leave. In accordance with whose [view is this ruling]? — In accordance with that of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.

Raba raised an objection: Whence is it deduced that if [a priest] refused[15] he is to be compelled?[16] It was expressly stated, And thou shalt sanctify him,[17] even against his will. Now, how is this[18] to be understood?[19] If it be suggested [that it is a case] where she was not married to one of her witnesses[20] and she does not plead ‘I am certain’,[21] is there any need to state that he is to be compelled?[22] Consequently it must refer to a case[23] where she was married to one of her witnesses[24] and she pleads, ‘I am certain’; I and yet it was stated that he was to be compelled;[25] from which it clearly follows that she is to be taken away from him![26] — A priestly prohibition is different.[27] If you prefer I might say,[28] ‘What is the meaning of "he is to be compelled"? He is to be compelled by means of witnesses’.[29] And if you prefer I might say:[28] [It is a case] where witnesses came first and she married afterwards, and this represents the view of R. Menahem son of R. Jose.[30] R. Ashi replied. What is meant by the expression, ‘She need not leave’ which Rab used? She is not to depart from her first state of permissibility.[31] But surely Rab has said this once! For we learned, IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION SHE MAY RETURN TO HIM, and Rab Huna stated in the name of Rab: This is the established law![32] — One was stated as an inference from, the other.[33]

Samuel said: This[34] was taught only in the case where she does not contradict him,[35] but where she contradicts him she need not leave.

What [are the circumstances] spoken of? If it be suggested that there are two witnesses[36] , of what avail is her denial?[37] [It must then deal with the case] of one witness, and the reason[38] is because she contradicts him;[39] had she, however, remained silent, she would have been obliged to leave. But, surely, ‘Ulla stated that ‘wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness[40] he is regarded as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man[41] against that of two men has no validity!’[42] — Here it is a case of evidence by ineligible witnesses,[43] and [Samuel's statement is] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness[40] the majority of opinions is to be followed,[44] and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man’.[45]

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first,[46] even a hundred women[47] are regarded as one witness;[48] here, however, we are dealing with a case where a woman witness came in the first instance;[49] and the statement of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah allows credence to one witness, the majority of opinions is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against that of one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man, but that of two women against that of one man is regarded only as that of a half and a half.[50]

SHE ALSO REQUIRES A LETTER OF DIVORCE FROM ONE AS WELL AS FROM THE OTHER. It is quite intelligible that she should require a divorce from the first husband; but why also from the second [when their union was a] mere act of adultery?[51] — R. Huna replied: This[52] is a preventive measure against the possibility of assuming that the first had divorced her and the second had [lawfully] married her, and that consequently[53] a married woman[54] may leave her husband without a letter of divorce. If so[55] , in the latter clause also, where it was stated, ‘If she was told "your husband is dead", and she was betrothed, and afterwards her husband came, she is permitted to return to him’,[56] might it not be assumed there also that the first husband had divorced her and the other had [lawfully] betrothed her and that consequently a betrothed woman may be released without a letter of divorce! — As a matter of fact she does require a letter of divorce.[57] If so,[58] [it might there also be assumed that] the first had again married his divorced wife after she had been betrothed![59] — [This statement is in] accordance with R. Jose b. Kiper who stated [that remarrying one's divorced wife] after a marriage[60] is forbidden but after a betrothal[60] is permitted.[61] Since, however, it was stated in the final clause, ‘Although

(2) V. Glos. Such an offering is brought for the commission of a doubtful sin. How, then, could Rab maintain that she may continue to live with her second husband?

(3) Rab's ruling is applicable.

(4) Who well knows that her first husband is dead.

(5) Since as far as she is concerned her first husband's death is still a matter of doubt.

(6) That the man who claims to be her first husband is a stranger. An asham talui is brought only in cases where a person is himself in doubt as to the propriety of an act he has committed; v. Keth. Sonc. ed., p. 122 notes.

(7) Who in a similar case maintained (v. infra) that the woman must leave her second husband.

(8) Who testified that the first husband was alive.

(9) Lit., ‘he did not say’.

(10) The woman's first husband.

(11) Her second husband

(12) V. Keth. 22b. What need, then, was there for Rab's ruling?

(13) Why Rab allowed the woman to remain with her second husband though two witnesses stated that her first husband was still alive.

(14) As in the case in our Mishnah in connection with which Rab's statement was made.

(24) Who was a priest.
(25) To separate from her if witnesses subsequently came and declared that the first husband was still alive at the time this second marriage with the priest took place.
(26) How then could Rab rule that in the case of contradictory evidence between two pairs of witnesses the second union is not to be severed if it took place prior to the appearance of the second pair.
(27) A priest is subject to greater restrictions which do not apply to others.
(28) In reply to Raba's objection.
(29) Before marriage with the priest is allowed, the court makes every effort to ascertain whether witnesses are available who could contradict the evidence of the first witnesses and thus prevent the marriage. If, however, no such witnesses are available and the marriage has taken place, the union need not be severed though such witnesses subsequently appeared.
(30) With which Rab is in agreement.
(31) She may return to her first husband, because in her second marriage she is a victim of circumstances,It having been contracted on misleading evidence.

(36) Who testify to the veracity of the statement of the man who claims to be the first husband.
(37) Lit., ‘when she contradicts him, what is?; her word would obviously not be accepted against the word of two witnesses.
(38) Why the woman may continue to live with her second husband.
(39) The evidence that her first husband was alive.
(40) In certain cases of marriage and divorce, testifying, for instance, that a husband was dead.
(41) Who now states that the first husband was not dead.
(42) The previous evidence of the one witness being consequently valid, why should the woman have to leave even when she does not contradict the latter evidence?
(43) Relatives, women or slaves, for instance, two of whom testify that the first husband is alive.
(44) Since one witness is trusted, the accepted law of valid evidence is superseded in such cases and the evidence of any ineligible witnesses (cf. supra n. 8) is equally admissible.
(45) Infra 117b, Sot. 31b. When, therefore, the wife does not contradict the evidence, these otherwise ineligible witnesses are trusted. Where, however, she contradicts them, her evidence is added to that of the one witness who had originally testified that her husband was dead, and the evidence of the second pair of witnesses, being thus contradicted by two, is disregarded. Cf. Maimonides cited by Wilna Gaon, glosses.
(46) And testified that the first husband was dead.
(47) I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married, testified that her first husband was alive.
(48) And their evidence, being opposed to that of the first witness, is disregarded, as is the case with all evidence of a single witness, which is opposed to that of a previous witness. The woman need not, therefore, leave her second husband even if she does not contradict the second set of witnesses.
(49) V. supra p. 602, n. 11, and two women subsequently testified that the first husband was alive. If the wife keeps silent, there remains a majority of two against one; if she contradicts the two the majority disappears.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 89a

the latter[1] gave her a letter of divorce he has not thereby disqualified her from marrying a priest’,[2] it may be inferred that she requires no divorce;[3] for should she require a divorce, why does he not disqualify her from marrying a priest![4] — Rather,[5] in the final clause it will be assumed[6] that the betrothal was an erroneous one.[7] In the first clause also [let it be said that] it would be assumed that the marriage was an erroneous one![8] The Rabbis have penalized her.[9] Then let them penalize her in the final clause also! — In the first clause where she committed a forbidden act[10] they penalized her; in the final clause where she did not commit a forbidden act, the Rabbis did not penalize her.

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO HER] KETHUBAH, [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis have provided a kethubah for a woman? In order that it may not be easy for the husband[11] to divorce her![12] But in this case let it be easy for him, to divorce her.[13]

SHE HAS NO [CLAIM TO] . . . USUFRUCT, MAINTENANCE OR EVEN WORN CLOTHES, [because] the conditions[14] entered in the kethubah[15] are subject to the same laws as the kethubah[16] itself. IF SHE HAD TAKEN ANYTHING FROM THE ONE OR FROM THE OTHER,[SHE MUST RETURN IT]. Is this not obvious! — As it might haved been assumed that since she has already seized it, it is not to be taken from her, hence we were taught [that SHE MUST RETURN IT]. THE CHILD . . . .IS A BASTARD. Elsewhere we learned: Terumah[17] from levitically unclean produce may not be set apart for that which is levitically clean[18] . If, however, such terumah has been set apart it is valid if the act was done in error, but if it was done wilfully it is null and void[19] . Now what is meant by ‘it is null and void’? — R. Hisda replied: The act is absolutely null and void, even that griva[20] [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel.[21] R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia replied: It is null and void in respect of making the remainder[22] fit for use, but [that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.[23] R. Hisda does not give the same explanation as R. Nathan son of R. Oshaia, for, should it be said [that the portion set apart] is lawful terumah, it might sometimes happen that one would wilfully neglect to set apart the terumah [from the remainder].[24]

But why should this be different from, [the following case concerning] which we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah a cucumber which was found to be bitter, or a melon which turned out to be decayed[25] [the fruit becomes] terumah; but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart![26] Do you raise an objection from a case where one has acted unwittingly[27] against a case where one has acted wilfully?[27] Where one has acted unwittingly,[28] no forbidden act has been committed; when, however, one has acted wilfully,[29] a forbidden act has been committed.

A contradiction, however, was pointed out between two acts committed unwittingly: Here[30] it is stated, ‘It is lawful terumah if the act was done unwittingly’,[31] while there sit was stated, ‘Terumah,’ but [from the remainder] terumah must again be set apart’! — There,[32] it is an erroneous act amounting almost[33] to a wilful one, since he should have tasted it .[34]

A contradiction was also pointed out between two cases of wilful action: Here[35] it is stated, ‘but if it was done wilfully, it is null and void’, while elsewhere we learned: If a man has set apart as terumah [the produce] of an unperforated plant-pot[36] for [the produce of] a perforated pot,[37] [the former becomes] terumah but [from the latter] terumah must again be separated![38] — In [the case of produce grown in] two different vessels[39] a man would obey;[40] in [that of] one vessel[41] he would not obey.[42]

Now according to R. Nathan, son of R. Oshaia, who explained that ‘the act is null and void in respect of making the remainder fit for use but [that that which has been set apart] becomes terumah.[43] [

(37) Which is subject to terumah. A plant in a perforated pot is deemed to be growing from the ground since it derives its nourishment through the holes of the pot from the ground itself.
(38) Dem. V, 10; Kid. 46a, Men. 70a. Why is the terumah in this case valid, while in the other it becomes tebel again?
(39) As in the last cited Mishnah where the produce designated as terumah grew in one kind of pot while the other produce grew in another kind of pot.
(40) To give terumah again, though the portion he has set apart is also allowed to remain terumah.
(41) Where the clean and the unclean grew in the same kind of pot or soil.
(42) To give terumah again, were the portion he has set aside allowed to retain the name of terumah. He would argue that, in view of the validity of his act, no further terumah need he given to the priest, whom he would consequently present with unclean terumah. Hence it was ordained that his act is void and that the quantity he has set aside is not to be regarded as terumah.
(43) And the priest may use it for the purposes for which it is fit, such, for instance, as burning.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 89b

, why is this case different from [the following] where we learned [that if a man has set apart as terumah the produce] of a perforated plant-pot[1] for that of an unperforated one,[2] the terumah is valid, but[3] may not be eaten[4] before terumah and tithe from other produce[5] has been set aside for it![6] — Here[7] it is different, since Pentateuchally the terumah is valid, in accordance with the view of R. Elai; for R. Elai stated: Whence is it inferred that if one separates terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid? It is written, And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, seeing that ye have set apart from it the best thereof.[8] [Now, this implies that if you do not set apart from the best but of the worst you shall bear sin]; if, [however, the inferior quality] does not become consecrated, why [should there be any] bearing of sin?[9] Hence it may be inferred[10] that if one sets apart terumah from an inferior quality for a superior quality, his terumah is valid.[11]

Said Rabbah to R. Hisda: According to you who maintain that ‘the act is absolutely null and void’ so that ‘even that griva [which has been designated as terumah] returns to its former state of tebel’, the reason being[12] that this is a preventive measure against the possibility ‘that one might wilfully neglect to set apart [the terumah from the remainder]’; is there anywhere [I may ask] a law that terumah which is Pentateuchally valid should, owing to the possibility that one might wilfully neglect his duty, be turned into[13] unconsecrated produce?[14] Could, then, a Beth din lay down a condition that would cause a law of the Torah to be uprooted! — The other replied: And do you not yourself agree with such a ruling? Have we not learned, THE CHILD BY THE ONE HUSBAND OR THE OTHER IS A BASTARD. Now, it is reasonable [that the child] by the second [should be deemed] a bastard,[15] but why [should the child] by the first [be a bastard]? She is, surely, his wife[16] and [the child is consequently] a proper Israelite whom [by regarding him as a bastard] we permit to marry a bastard![17] The first retorted: Thus said Samuel, ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. And so said Rabin, when he came,[18] in the name of R. Johanan. ‘He is forbidden to marry a bastard’. Why, then,[19] is he called a bastard? — In respect of forbidding him to marry the daughter of an Israelite.[20]

R. Hisda sent to Rabbah through R. Aha son of R. Huna [the following enquiry]: Cannot the Beth din lay down a condition which would cause the abrogation of a law of the Torah? Surely it was taught: ‘At what period of her age[21] is a husband entitled to be the heir of his wife [if she dies while still] a minor?[22] Beth Shammai stated: When she attains to womanhood;[23] and Beth Hillel said: When she enters into the bridal chamber.[24] R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place. Then he is entitled to be her heir, he may defile himself for her,[25] and she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights’. (Beth Shammai said, ‘When she attains to womanhood’,[26] even though she has not entered the bridal chamber![27] — Read, ‘When she attains to womanhood and enters the bridal chamber', and it is this that Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel: In respect of your statement, 'When she enters the bridal chamber', it is only when she has attained womanhood that the bridal chamber is effective, but otherwise the bridal chamber alone is of no avail. 'R. Eliezer said: When connubial intercourse has taken place'. But, surely, R. Eliezer said that the act of a minor has no legal force![28] — Read, 'After she has grown up and connubial intercourse has taken place'.) At all events it was here stated, 'He[29] is entitled to be her heir'; but, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father[30] who should here be her legal heir, and yet it is the husband who is heir in accordance with a Rabbinical ordinance![31] — Hefker[32] by Beth din is legal hefker.[33] for R. Isaac stated: Whence is it deduced that hefker by Beth din is legal hefker? It is said, Whosoever came not within three days, according to the counsel of the princes and the elders, all his substance should be forfeited, and himself separated from the congregation of the captivity.[34] R. Eleazar stated [that the deduction[35] is made] from here: These are the inheritances, which Eleazar the priest. and Joshua the son of Nun, and the heads of the fathers' houses of the tribes of the children of Israel, distributed for inheritance.[36] Now, what relation is there between Heads and Fathers? But [this has the purpose] of telling you that as fathers may distribute as an inheritance to their children whatever they wish, so may the heads distribute as an inheritance to the people whatever they wish.

'He may defile himself for her'. But, surely, by Pentateuchal law it is her father who may here defile himself for her, and yet it is the husband who by a Rabbinical law was allowed to defile himself for her![37] — [This was allowed] because she is a meth mizwah.[38] Is she, however, a meth mizwah?[38] Surely, it was taught. 'Who may he regarded as a meth mizwah? He who has no [relatives] to bury him'. [If, however, he has relatives upon whom] he [could] call and they[39] would answer him, he is not regarded as a meth mizwah![40] — Here also, since they are not her heirs, they would not answer even if she were to call upon them.

(15) Since, owing to the fact that the first husband was still alive, the marriage was unlawful.

(16) The marriage with the second having had no validity at all.

(17) Who is forbidden to an Israelite. As this, however, is permitted it follows that even a law of the Torah may be superseded by an ordinance of the Rabbis.

(18) From Palestine to Babylon.

(19) Since he is accordingly regarded as a proper Israelite.

(20) Such a restriction is no abrogation of a law of the Torah but a reinforcement of it.

(21) Lit., 'from when'.

(22) I.e., at what age may it be definitely assumed that the minor is no longer likely to make a declaration of refusal (v. Glos. s.v. mi'un) and may, consequently. be regarded as one's proper wife.

(23) Lit., ‘when she stands in her height’, the age of puberty.

(24) Huppah (v. Glos.), which is the preliminary to matrimonial cohabitation.

(25) If she died, though he is a priest. V. Lev. XXI, 1f.

(26) The husband may defile himself by her corpse and is also entitled to be her heir.

(27) When she is not yet regarded as his lawful wife (cf. supra 29b) and. according to law, he is entitled to be her heir. This consequently proves that the Beth din does possess the power to abrogate Pentateuchal laws!

(28) Infra 107b, 108a, Keth. 101b.

(29) The husband.

(30) (That is his legal heir (Rashi). Since the reference here is to a fatherless girl who was given in marriage by her mother or brothers. Such a marriage is not valid by Pentateuchal law which vests the right of giving a minor girl in marriage only in the father].

(31) How then could it be maintained that Beth din has no authority to abrogate Pentateuchal laws?

(32) הפקר a declaration that the property of a certain person is ownerless. V. Glos.

(33) The Rabbis have consequently full authority to transfer the property of the minor from her father's heirs to her husband, and such transfer cannot be regarded as an abrogation of the Pentateuchal law. The reading היה ‘was’ for the usual הוה ‘is’ may be a censorial alteration. Cf. Golds. a.l.

(37) How then could it be maintained that Beth din has no authority to abrogate Pentateuchal laws?

(38) Lit., ‘dead of the commandment’, a corpse in which no one is interested and the burial of which is obligatory upon any person who discovers it.

(39) Lit., ‘and others’.

(40) ‘Er. 17b, Naz. 43b. As there are available the heirs of her father upon whom she could call, why is she regarded as a meth mizwah?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 90a

‘And she may eat terumah by virtue of his rights’![1] — Only Rabbinical terumah.[2]

Come and hear: If a man ate[3] levitically unclean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce.[4] If he paid unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid[5] if it was paid in error,[6] and invalid if paid wilfully.[7] The Sages. however, said: Whether in one case or in the other[8] his compensation is valid, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce.[9] And when, in considering this ruling, the objection was raised, ‘Why should not his compensation be valid if he paid it wilfully? A blessing should come upon him! For he has eaten such of the priest's produce[10] as is not fit for him in the days of his uncleanness[11] and paid him compensation in something[12] that is fit for him in the days of his uncleanness’,[13] Raba, others say, Kadi, replied: [Some words are] missing from the text, the correct reading being the following: ‘If a man ate levitically unclean terumah he may pay compensation In any produce;[14] if he ate levitically clean terumah, he must pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce; if, however, he made compensation in unconsecrated produce that was levitically unclean, his compensation, said Symmachus in the name of R. Meir, is valid if it was made in error,[15] and his compensation is invalid if it was made wilfully. But the Sages said: His compensation is valid whether he has acted in error or wilfully, but he must again pay compensation in clean unconsecrated produce’. Now here, surely. the compensation is Pentateuchally valid,[16] for were a priest to betroth a wife[17] with it her betrothal would be valid, and yet the Rabbis[18] ruled that ‘his compensation is invalid’,[19] and thus[20] a married woman[21] is permitted to [marry any one in] the world![22] — This was meant by the expression,[23] ‘his compensation is invalid’ which R. Meir used: That he must pay compensation again in clean unconsecrated produce.[24] If so, then Symmachus[25] holds the same view as the Rabbis! — R. Aha son of R. Ika replied: The difference between them is on the question whether one who has acted unwittingly is to be penalized as a preventive measure against one acting wilfully.[26]

Come and hear: If [sacrificial] blood became levitically unclean and was then sprinkled [upon the altar], it is accepted[27] if [the sprinkling was performed] unwittingly, but it is not accepted [if it was performed] wilfully.[28] Now, according to Pentateuchal law, it is here undoubtedly accepted, for it was taught. ‘In respect of what [errors] does the High Priest's front-plate[29] procure acceptance?[30] In respect of the sacrificial blood, flesh or fat that became unclean whether [this was brought about] by one acting in error or wilfully, under compulsion or willingly, and whether [this occurred with the sacrifice] of an individual or with [that of the] congregation’,[31] and yet the Rabbis ruled that ‘it is not accepted’[32] so that an unconsecrated beast is brought[33] into the Temple court![34] — R. Jose b. Hanina replied: The expression, ‘it is not accepted’ was used[35] in respect of permitting the flesh to be eaten;[36] the owner, however, obtains atonement through it.[37]

After all, however, the law of eating the flesh [of the sacrifice] would he uprooted, whereas it is written in the Scriptures. And they shall eat those things wherewith atonement was made[38] which teaches that the priests eat [the sacrificial meat] and the owner obtains thereby atonement! — The other replied: With an abstention from the performance of an act[39] it is different.[40]

(16) Since unconsecrated foodstuffs, though levitically unclean, may be consecrated (cf. supra 89b).

(17) Giving it to her as the token of betrothal (cf. Kid. 2a).

(18) I.e., R. Meir.

(19) If it was made wilfully.

(20) By ruling that the compensation is invalid and, in consequence, is not the property of the priest.

(21) Pentateuchally she should assume this status.

(22) As the compensation is Rabbinically invalid (v. supra n. 11) the betrothal also would be Rabbinically invalid. V. supra p. 609, n. 5.

(23) Lit., ‘what’.

(25) Who reported R. Meir.

(26) According to the Rabbis, an unwitting sin is made punishable in order to prevent thereby a wilful one; hence their ruling that whether the payment of the compensation mentioned was made unwittingly or wilfully a second payment of compensation must be made. According to R. Meir, however, the inadvertent sinner is not to suffer for the sake of the wilful one; hence his ruling that a second payment of compensation is due only in the case of a wilful action.

(40) From the case of turning consecrated terumah into unconsecrated produce. The former (v. supra n. 1) involving no action may well be within the jurisdiction of the Rabbis, but not the latter which involves an act uprooting a Pentateuchal law.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 90b

He,[1] [on hearing the last reply] said to him:[2] It was my intention to raise objections against your view[3] from [the Rabbinical laws which relate to] the uncircumcised,[4] sprinkling,[5] the knife [of circumcision],[6] the linen cloak with zizith,[7] the lambs of Pentecost,[8] the shofar[9] and the lulab;[10] now, however, that you taught us that abstention from the performance of an act[11] is not regarded as an abrogation [of the law, I have nothing to say since] all these are also cases of abstention.[12]

Come and hear: Unto him ye shall hearken,[13] even if he tells you. 'Transgress any of all the commandments of the Torah' as in the case, for instance, of Elijah on Mount Carmel,[14] obey him in every respect in accordance with the needs of the hour![15] — There it is different,[16] for it is written, 'Unto him shall ye hearken'. Then let [Rabbinic law] be deduced from it! — The safeguarding[17] of a cause is different.[18]

Come and hear: If he[19] annulled [his letter of divorce][20] it is annulled: so Rabbi. R. Simeon b. Gamaliel, however, said: He may neither annul it nor add a single condition to it,[21] since, otherwise,[22] of what avail is the authority[23] of the Beth din.[24] Now, though here, the letter of divorce may be annulled[25] in accordance with Pentateuchal law, we allow a married woman,[26] owing to the power[27] of Beth din,[24] to marry anyone in the world![28] — Anyone who betroths [a woman] does so in implicit compliance with the ordinances[29] of the Rabbis,[30] and the Rabbis have [in this case][31] cancelled the [original] betrothal.[32]

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This[33] is a quite satisfactory explanation where betrothal was effected by means of money;[34] what, however. can be said [in a case where betrothal was effected] by cohabitation! — The Rabbis[35] have assigned[36] to such a cohabitation the character of mere prostitution.[37]

Come and hear: R. Eleazar b. Jacob stated, 'I heard that even without any Pentateuchal [authority for their rulings]. Beth din may administer flogging and [death] penalties; not, however, for the purpose of transgressing the words of the Torah but in order to make a fence for the Torah. And it once happened that a man rode on horseback on the Sabbath in the days of the Greeks,[38] and he was brought before Beth din and was stoned; not because he deserved this penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it. And another incident occurred with a man who had intercourse with[39] his wife under a fig tree, and he was brought before Beth din and flogged; not because he deserved such a penalty, but because the exigencies of the hour demanded it![40] To safeguard a cause is different.[41]

NEITHER OF THEM MAY DEFILE HIMSELF FOR HER. Whence is this derived? — From what is written in Scripture. Except for his kin that is near unto him,[42] and a Master stated that 'his kin' means his wife;[43] while it was also written, The husband shall not defile himself, among his people, to prof- ane himself;[44] [implying that] there is a husband, then, who may, and there is a husband who may not defile himself; how, then [are these contradictory laws to be reconciled]? He may defile himself for his lawful wife but he may not defile himself for his unlawful wife .[45]

NEITHER OF THEM HAS A CLAIM UPON ANYTHING SHE MAY FIND etc. [because] what is the reason why the Rabbis ruled that a wife's finds belong to her husband? In order that he may bear no hatred against her; but, here, let him bear against her ever so much hatred![46]

OR MAKE WITH HER HANDS, [because] for what reason did the Rabbis rule that the work of her hands belonged to her husband? Because she receives from him her maintenance;[47] but here, since she receives no maintenance, her handiwork does not belong to him.

OR TO THE RIGHT OF INVALIDATING HER VOWS, [since] what is the reason why the All Merciful said that a husband may annul [his wife's vows]? In order that she may not become repulsive; here, however, let her become ever so repulsive![48]

IF SHE WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE, SHE BECOMES DISQUALIFIED FROM MARRYING A PRIEST etc.

(4) Proselyte, whose circumcision is performed on the Passover Eve and who, by Rabbinic law, is forbidden to participate in the Paschal lamb, though Pentateuchally it is his duty to celebrate the Passover as an Israelite. Cf. Pes. 92a.

(5) On an unclean person, on the Sabbath day, is Rabbinically forbidden (cf. Pes. 66a) though Pentateuchally permitted. Should the Sabbath on which such sprinkling is due happen to be a Passover Eve, the person affected would, owing to the Rabbinical prohibition, remain unclean on that day and would, in consequence, be deprived of participation in the Paschal lamb, which is a Pentateuchal precept.

(6) The carrying of which on the Sabbath is Rabbinically forbidden even along roofs, an act which is Pentateuchally permitted (cf. Shab, 130b). By observing this Rabbinical law it is sometimes necessary to postpone circumcision which is a Pentateuchal commandment.

(7) V. Glos. Pentateuchally it is permitted to insert woollen fringes (v. Num. XV, 38) in a linen garment, despite the prohibition in Deut. XXII, 11 against wearing wool and linen together. Owing, however, to a Rabbinic prohibition, fringes of wool in a linen garment are forbidden, and this prohibition sometimes results in the abrogation of the Pentateuchal commandment of zizith. Cf. Men. 40a.

(8) V. Num. XXVIII, 26ff. If Pentecost fell on a Sabbath day, and these lambs were not offered for the purpose for which they were designated, the sacrificial blood may not, in accordance with a Rabbinical prohibition, be sprinkled upon the altar, though such sprinkling is Pentateuchally permitted. Thus, the Pentateuchal law of the sprinkling of the sacrificial blood, and other laws which are dependent on its performance, are suspended by a Rabbinical ordinance. Cf. Bezah 20b.

(9) The ram's horn used on the New Year festival (cf. Lev. XXIII. 24). If New Year's Day falls on a Sabbath, the Pentateuchal law of Shofar is abrogated by the Rabbis for fear it might be carried from one Sabbatical domain into another. Cf. R.H. 32a.

(10) The branches of palm- trees (Lev. XXIII, 40) which are taken during the Feast of Tabernacles. This Pentateuchal law is abrogated on the Sabbath day, for the same reason as in the case of the Shofar. (Cf. p. 613, n. 1 t).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 91a

Is not this obvious![1] — [The statement] IF THE DAUGHTER OF A LEVITE [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TITHE was required.[2] Does, however, the daughter of a Levite become disqualified by prostitution from the eating of tithe? Surely, it was taught: If the daughter of a Levite was taken into captivity[3] or was subjected to an act of prostitution,[4] she may nevertheless be given tithe and she may eat it![5] — R. Shesheth replied: This[6] is a punitive measure.[7]

IF THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST, [she becomes disqualified] FROM THE EATING OF TERUMAH, even Rabbinical terumah.

NEITHER THE HEIRS OF THE ONE HUSBAND NOR THE HEIRS OF THE OTHER ARE ENTITLED TO INHERIT HER KETHUBAH etc. How does the question of kethubah arise here?[8] R. Papa replied: The kethubah of the male children.[9] [Is not this also] obvious![10] — It might have been assumed that the Rabbis had penalized only her, since she had committed the forbidden act, but not her children, hence we were informed [that they also lose the kethubah].

THE BROTHER OF THE ONE AND THE BROTHER OF THE OTHER MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH, BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. The brother of the first husband submits to halizah in accordance with the Pentateuchal law,[11] and may not contract the levirate marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law;[12] the brother of the second, however, submits to halizah in accordance with Rabbinical law,[13] and may not contract the levirate marriage either in accordance with Pentateuchal, or in accordance with Rabbinical law.[14]

R. JOSE SAID: HER KETHUBAH [REMAINS A CHARGE] UPON THE ESTATE OF HER FIRST HUSBAND etc. Said R. Huna: The latter agree with the former,[15] but the former do not agree with the latter: R. Simeon agrees with R. Eleazar;[16] since he[17] does not penalize [the woman[18] in the case of] cohabitation which constitutes the main prohibition. how much less [would he do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands.which are only monetary matters. R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with R. Simeon; [since it is only in respect of] what the woman finds and what she makes with her hands, which are monetary matters, that he does not penalize her, but in respect of cohabitation which is a religious prohibition he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Jose; [since they] do not penalize [the woman in respect of] those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,[19] how much less [would they do so in respect of] the kethubah the purpose of which is[20] [for the woman] to take it and depart.[21] R. Jose, on the other hand, does not agree with them; [since it is only in respect of] the kethubah [the purpose of which is for the woman] to take it and depart,[21] that he does not penalize her, but in respect of those matters which are applicable while she continues to live with her husband,[19] he does penalize her.

R. Johanan stated: The former agree with the latter, but the latter do not agree with the former: R. Jose agrees with R. Eleazar; since he does not penalize [the woman in respect of] the kethubah which has to be taken from the husband and given to the wife,[22] how much less [would be do so in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from her and given to him.[23] R. Eleazar, however, does not agree with him; [since it is only in respect of] what she finds and what she makes with her hands which have to be taken from the woman and given to the husband,[23] that he does not penalize her, but in respect of the kethubah which has to be taken from him and given to her,[22] he does penalize her. And both of them agree with R. Simeon; since they do not penalize her in respect of matters which [are applicable] while [her first husband] is alive, how much less [would they do so in respect of] cohabitation which takes place after his death. R. Simeon, however, does not agree with them; [since it is only in respect of] cohabitation which [takes place] after [her husband's] death, that he does not penalize her, but [in respect of] those matters which [are applicable] while [he is] alive, he does penalize her.

IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AN AUTHORIZATION etc. Said R. Huna in the name of Rab: This is the accepted law.[24] R. Nahman said to him: Why should you indulge in circumlocution![25] If you hold the same view as R. Simeon, say. ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon’ for, indeed, your traditional statement runs on the same lines as that of R. Simeon! And should you reply. ‘If I were to say "the halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon", it might be assumed to apply even to his first statement’,[26] then say. ‘The halachah is in agreement with R. Simeon in his latter statement’![27] — This is a difficulty.

R. Shesheth said: It occurs to me[28] that Rab made this reported statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off.[29] [His statement] ‘This is the accepted law’ implies that[30] [the Rabbis] differ;[31] but what could she do? She was but the victim of circumstances![32] Furthermore, it was taught: ‘None of the women in incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah, requires a letter of divorce from the man who married her,[33] except a married woman who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din’. Only [where she married again] ‘in accordance with a decision of a Beth din’[34] does she require a letter of divorce, but where [the marriage took place] in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses she requires no letter of divorce.[35] Now, whose view is here represented?[36] If it be suggested [that it is the view of] R. Simeon, does she [it may be retorted] require a letter of divorce [even where her marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din? Surely it was taught: R. Simeon stated, ‘If the Beth din acted[37] on their own judgment[34] [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman;[38] [if, however, they acted],[30] in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error’.[39] In both cases, however,[40] no letter of divorce is thus[41] required.[42] Consequently it must represent the view of the Rabbis![43] The fact is [that it[44] represents the view of] R. Simeon, and you may interpret it as follows. R. Simeon stated: If the Beth din acted[45] on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as intentional [intercourse[46] between] a man and an [unmarried] woman and [the latter][47] consequently requires a letter of divorce; [If, however, they acted],[45] in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses [the marriage is regarded] as wanton [intercourse between] a man and an [unmarried] woman[48] and [the latter consequently] requires no letter of divorce.

R. Ashi replied: The statement[49] was mainly concerned with the question of the prohibition,[50] and is to be understood as follows:[51] If the Beth din acted[52] on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter is consequently] forbidden to her [first] husband; [if, however, they acted][49] in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error, and [the latter is consequently] not forbidden to her [first] husband.

(19) Lit., 'when she sits under him', when there is reason to apprehend that she would never be divorced in consequence.

(20) Lit. , 'stands'.

(21) Thus actually beginning the process of separation and final divorce.

(22) Lit., 'which from his to hers'.

(23) Lit., 'which from hers to his'.

(24) Cf. supra 88b.

(25) גנבא גנובי חמה לך (rt. גמב, in Pael 'to go round about'). 'O thou cunning man, what is the use of thy going round about?' (Jast.).

(26) That of cohabitation with the brother of the first husband where her second marriage was contracted on the evidence of one witness only.

(27) IF SHE MARRIED WITHOUT AUTHORIZATION.

(28) Lit., 'I would say'.

(29) Lit., 'dozing and lying down'.

(30) In the final clause, where the woman married on the evidence of two witnesses.

(31) Maintaining that the woman is to be penalized.

(32) מיאנם אנסה from rt. אנם 'to be compelled'. What better proof could she have had than the testimony of two qualified witnesses.

(33) Lit., 'from him'.

(34) I.e., where the evidence as to her first husband's death has been given by one witness only.

(35) Since she was but an unfortunate victim of circumstances.

(36) Lit., 'who is it'.

(37) Permitted the remarriage of a woman whose husband's death has been reported.

(38) And the woman becomes thereby forbidden to her first husband if he returns.

(39) And the return of the woman to her first husband is consequently permitted.

(40) Whether the marriage was on the decision of Beth din or on the evidence of two witnesses.

(41) Since the comparison was made with acts of presumption and error while divorce was not mentioned at all.

(42) The first Baraitha cited, which required a divorce in a case where the woman married in accordance with a decision of the Beth din, cannot therefore represent the view of R. Simeon.

(43) Which proves that they also admit that no divorce is necessary where the marriage was contracted in reliance on two witnesses. Who is it, then, that differs from R. Simeon that it should have been necessary for Rab to declare the halachah to be in agreement with his view?

(44) The first Baraitha under discussion. V. p. 620. n. 13.

(45) V. supra p. 620, n. 8.

(46) For the purpose of betrothal. Cf. Kid. 2a.

(47) Since her marriage was legal.

(48) Which constitutes no legal union.

(49) V. supra note 15.

(50) Lit., 'he taught in respect of prohibition'.

(51) Lit., 'and thus be said'.

(52) V. supra p. 620, n. 8.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 91b

Rabina replied: The statement was mainly dealing with the question of sacrifice,[1] and is to be understood as follows.[2] If the Beth din acted on their own judgment, [the marriage is regarded] as a wilful [act of adultery between] a man and a [married] woman, and [the latter] does not bring a sacrifice;[3] if, however, they acted] in accordance with the evidence of [two] witnesses, [the marriage is regarded] as [intercourse between] a man and a woman that was due to error and [the latter] has to bring a sacrifice.[4]

If you prefer. however, I might say that the first [Baraitha][5] represents [the view of] the Rabbis, and you may explain it as follows: 'Except a married woman'[6] and one 'who married again in accordance with a decision of a Beth din'.[7]

'Ulla raised an objection: Do we accept the plea[8] 'what could she have done'?[9] Surely we learned: [If a letter of divorce] was dated[10] according to[11] an era that was inappropriate,[12] according to[11] the Median era, or according to[11] the Greek era, according to [the era of] the building of the Temple, or the destruction of the Temple, or if he[13] was in the East and wrote, 'In the West', [or he was] in the West and wrote, 'In the East', she[14] must leave her first and her second husband,[15] and all the disabilities[16] [enumerated,[17] are applicable] to her.[18] But why?[19] Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'![20] — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.[21]

R. Shimi b. Ashi said, Come and hear: If a levir married his sister-in-law[22] and her rival went and married [another man][23] and then the former[24] was found to be incapable of procreation,[25] [the latter][26] must leave the one and the other[27] and all the disabilities[16] [mentioned[28] apply] to her.[29] But why?[30] Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'![31] — She should have waited.

Said Abaye: Come and hear: If the rivals [of] any of the forbidden relatives concerning whom it has been said[32] that they exempt their rivals went and married, and any such forbidden relatives[33] were found to be incapable of procreation,[34] [every rival] must leave the one and the other,[35] and all the disabilities[36] [mentioned[37] apply] to her.[38] But why?[39] Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'! — She should have waited.

Said Raba. Come and hear: If a scribe wrote a letter of divorce for the husband and a quittance[40] for the wife, and then made a mistake and handed the letter of divorce to the wife and the quittance to the husband, and they[41] gave them to one another,[42] and after a time[43] the letter of divorce was discovered[44] in the possession of the husband and the quittance in the possession of the wife, [the latter][45] must leave the one as well as the other,[46] and all the disabilities[36] [mentioned[47] apply] to her.[38] But why?[48] Let It be argued. 'What could she have done'! — She could have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.[49]

Said R. Ashi, Come and hear: If he[50] changed[51] his name or her name, the name of his town or the name of her town, she must depart from the one and from the other,[52] and all the disabilities[36] [mentioned[37] apply] to her.[38] But why?[48] Let it be argued. 'What could she have done'! — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.[53]

Said Rabina, Come and hear: If a man married a woman[54] on [the strength of] a bald[55] letter of divorce she must depart from the one and from the other,[56] etc.! — She should have arranged for the letter of divorce to be read.[57]

R. Papa desired to decide a case on [the principle of] 'What could she have done',[58] Said R. Huna Son of R. Joshua to R. Papa: But surely all those[59] Baraithoth were taught?[60] The other answered him: Were they not explained?[61] 'Shall we then',[62] the former retorted, 'rely on explanations'![63]

R. Ashi said: No regard need be paid[64] to a rumour.[65] What kind of rumour [is here meant]? If it be suggested [that it means] a rumour after marriage.[66] Surely [it may be objected] R. Ashi has said this once; for R. Ashi stated:

(1) Cf. supra n. 6, mutatis mutandis.
(2) So Bah. Cf. supra n. 7. Cur. edd. omit, ‘and is . . . follows’.
(3) Since her wilful act was performed in reliance on the ruling of Beth din. V. Hor. 2b.
(4) As for any other similar sin committed in error.
(5) V. supra note 15.
(6) Who married again in accordance with the evidence of two witnesses.
(7) On the evidence of one witness. According to this interpretation, a marriage on the evidence of two witnesses is not excluded (as was originally suggested supra 91a) and it also requires a letter of divorce.
(8) Lit ‘do we say’.
(9) R. Shesheth's objection, supra 91a.
(10) Lit., ‘he wrote’.
(11) Lit., ‘for the name’.
(12) For the place in which, or the time when the document was written.
(13) The scribe (Rashi). It is assumed that the witnesses are from the same place as the scribe. (Cf. Tosaf s.v. היה a.l.)
(14) The woman who married again after receiving such a defective document from her husband.
(15) Lit ‘from this and from this’.
(16) Lit., ‘these ways’.
(17) Supra 87b and in the Mishnah cited from Gittin (v. infra n. 13), such as the loss of kethubah etc.
(18) Cf. Git., Sonc. ed., p. 282, q. v. notes.
(19) Should the woman be penalized.
(20) She honestly believed the document to be valid.
(21) By an expert who would have detected the irregularities and warned her in good time.
(22) The widow of his brother who died without issue.
(23) Which she is permitted to do, since the levirate marriage of one widow exempts all her rivals from both halizah and the levirate marriage.
(24) Lit ‘this’, the widow who married the levir.
(25) And consequently unable to exempt her rival (cf. supra 12a).
(26) The rival mentioned.
(27) Lit., ‘from this and from this’. She may neither live with the husband she married nor with the levir.

(37) Supra 87b and in the Mishnah cited from Gittin (cf. Git. 79b) such as the loss of kethubah etc.
(38) Git. 80a.
(39) Should the woman he penalized.
(40) Which the wife gives to the husband on the receipt of her kethubah.
(41) Without examining the documents.
(42) Lit., ‘this to this and this to this’; both of them believing that the husband gave to his wife the letter of divorce, and that the wife gave to her husband the quittance.
(43) When the woman had married another man.
(44) Lit., ‘goes out’.
(45) Since her divorce was invalid, the document having been given to her not by her husband as the law requires but by the scribe.
(46) Her second and her first husband.

(47) V. supra note 7.

(48) Should she be subject to the disabilities.

(49) When she would immediately have discovered the scribe's error.

(50) The husband.

(51) In the letter of divorce which he gave to his wife.

(52) Lit., ‘from this and from this’: from her first, and from her second husband.

(53) And the change of name would have been discovered at once.

(54) Lit., ‘he married her’.

(55) קרח i.e., a ‘folded document’ (cf. B.B. 160a) on one of whose folds a signature is wanting. A valid deed of such a character must bear the signature of a witness on each fold and must he signed by no less than three witnesses. V. Git., Sonc. ed., p. 391.

(56) V. supra p. 623, n. 22.

(57) And the defect would have been discovered forthwith.

(58) It was his intention to allow a woman, whose second marriage was contracted on the evidence of two witnesses who had testified that her first husband was dead, to go back to him when he returned.

(59) Above mentioned.

(60) And in none was the principle of ‘what could she have done’ acted upon.

(61) Special reasons were given why the principle mentioned was not acted upon. In all other cases, however, it should be taken into consideration.

(62) Lit., ‘shall we rise’.

(63) Despite the explanations, the original objections may still be urged. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘and he desisted’. i.e., R. Papa abandoned his contemplated decision.

(64) If a woman was authorized by the Beth din to contract a second marriage.

(65) That her first husband was still alive.

(66) Of the woman with her second husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 92a

No regard need be paid to a rumour that originated after marriage![1] — It might have been assumed that since she was to appear before the Beth din to obtain the authorization[2] [for her marriage].[3] the rumour is regarded as one [that arose] before marriage[4] and she should in consequence he forbidden,[5] we were, therefore, taught [that even in such circumstances a rumour is disregarded].

IF SHE MARRIED WITH THE AUTHORIZATION OF THE BETH DIN SHE MUST LEAVE etc. Ze'iri said: Our Mishnah cannot be authentic[6] owing to a Baraitha that was recited at the academy. For it was recited at the academy: If the Beth din ruled[7] that the sun had set,[8] and later it appeared, [such a decision] is no ruling[9] but a mere error.[10]

R. Nahman. however, stated: [Such an authorization][11] is [to be regarded as] a ruling.[12] Said R. Nahman: You can have proof[13] that it [is to be regarded as] a ruling. For throughout the Torah a single witness is never believed while in this case he is believed. But why? Obviously[14] because [such an authorization is regarded as] a ruling.[15] Raba said: You can have proof[13] that it[11] is [to be regarded as a mere] error.[16] For were Beth din to issue a ruling in a case of some forbidden fat or blood that it is permitted, and then find a [strong] reason for forbidding it, [their subsequent ruling], should they retract and rule again that it is permitted,[17] would be completely disregarded;[18] whereas here,[19] it should one witness present himself,[20] the woman would be permitted to marry again,[21] and should two witnesses [afterwards] appear[22] the woman would be forbidden to marry again,[23] but should another witness subsequently appear[24] the woman would again be permitted to marry. But why?[25] Obviously[26] because it[19] [is regarded as a mere] error.[27]

R. Eliezer also is of the opinion that it[19] is [to be regarded as a mere] error. For it was taught: R. Eliezer said: Let the law pierce through the mountain[28] and let her[29] bring a fat sin-offering.[30] Now, if it be granted that it[19] is [to be treated as] an error one can well see the reason why she is to bring an offering.[31] If, however, it be contended that it[19] is [to be regarded as] a ruling, why should she bring an offering![32] But is it not possible that R. Eliezer holds the opinion that an individual who committed a sin in reliance on a ruling of the Beth din is liable?[33] — If so, what [could have been meant by] ‘Let the law pierce through the mountain’![34]

IF THE BETH DIN DECIDED THAT SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN etc. What is meant by DISGRACED HERSELF? — R. Eliezer[35] replied: She played the harlot. R. Johanan replied: [If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest, [or if] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. He who stated,’She played the harlot’[36] would, even more so, [subject the woman to a sin-offering. if as] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest.[37] He, however, who stated, ‘[If being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest’ does not[38] [subject her to a sin-offering if] she played the harlot. What is the reason? — Because she might plead, ‘It is you who granted me the status of an unmarried woman’.[39]

It was taught in agreement with the opinion of R. Johanan: If Beth din directed that she may be married again. and she went and disgraced herself, so that, for instance, [being] a widow [she was married] to a High Priest.[or being] a divorcee or a haluzah [she was married] to a common priest. she is liable to bring an offering for every single act of cohabitation;[40] so R. Eleazar. But the Sages said: One offering for all. The Sages, however, agree with R. Eleazar that, If she was married to five men, she is liable to bring an offering for every one, since [here it is a case of] separate bodies.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND SON WENT TO COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA WAS TOLD,[41] ‘YOUR HUSBAND DIED AND YOUR SON DIED AFTERWARDS’,[42] AND SHE MARRIED AGAIN,[43] AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD,’ IT WAS OTHERWISE’.[44] SHE MUST DEPART;[45] AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER[46] IS A BASTARD.[47] IF

SHE WAS TOLD. ‘YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS’,[48] AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE’[49] SHE MUST DEPART;[50] AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER[46] IS A BASTARD.[47]

IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD, AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘HE WAS ALIVE[51] BUT IS NOW DEAD’, SHE MUST DEPART,[52] AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND][53] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT[54] IS NO BASTARD. IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD AND SHE WAS BETROTHED, AND AFTERWARDS HER HUSBAND APPEARED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM. ALTHOUGH THE OTHER[55] GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE HE HAS NOT THEREBY DISQUALIFIED HER FROM MARRYING A PRIEST. THIS R. ELEAZAR B. MATHIA DERIVED BY MEANS OF THE FOLLOWING EXPOSITION: NEITHER [SHALL THEY[56] TAKE] A WOMAN PUT AWAY FROM HER HUSBAND,[57] EXCLUDES ONE PUT AWAY[58] FROM A MAN WHO IS NOT HER HUSBAND.[59]

GEMARA. What is meant by BEFORE[60] and what is meant by AFTER?[61] If it be suggested that BEFORE means before the [second] report and that AFTER means after that report, it should have been stated: The child is a bastard![62] Because it was desired to state in the final clause, IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, AND SHE MARRIED, AND AFTERWARDS SHE WAS TOLD, ‘HE WAS ALIVE BUT IS NOW DEAD . . . ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE[63] [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT[64] IS NO BASTARD, the expressions BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD were used in the first clause also.

Our Rabbis taught: This[65] is the view of R. Akiba who stated: Betrothal with those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative commandment is invalid.[66] The Sages, however, said that [the child] of a sister-in-law[67] is no bastard.[68] Let it be said: The child of a union between those who are subject [on intercourse] to the penalties of a negative precept is no bastard![69] — This Tanna[70] is the following Tanna of the school of R. Akiba, who stated that [only a child] of a union that is subject to the penalties of a negative precept owing to consanguinity is a bastard, but one born from a union that is subject to the penalties of a mere negative precept[71] is no bastard.

Rab Judah stated

---

(1) If, for instance, after a priest had married, a rumour arose that before her marriage with him his wife was a divorcee or a harlot. Git. 81a, 88b, 89a.

(2) Lit., ‘and we permitted’.

(3) Before it had taken place.

(4) Her appearance before the court implying that, already at that time, the possibility that her husband was still alive was being considered.

(5) To her second husband, as if the rumour had been current before her marriage.

(6) Lit., ‘our Mishnah is not’.

(7) On a cloudy day which happened to be the Sabbath day.

(8) And permitted the people to commence their week-day labours which are forbidden on the Sabbath.

(9) Which exempts the individual who acted upon it from a sin- offering and affects the nature of the sin-offering which the congregation who acted upon it has to bring.

(10) Since the erroneous ruling of the Beth din was not due to an oversight on their part of a point of law but to a false assumption of a matter of fact. They assumed that the sun had set, while in fact, it had not. Similarly here, They assumed that the woman's husband was dead when as a matter of fact he was alive. Our Mishnah, therefore, which exempts the woman from a sin-offering cannot be authentic.

(11) The permission to the woman to marry again, spoken of in our Mishnah.

(12) Subject to the same laws as all erroneous rulings issued by a Beth din. Cf. supra 11. 6. and Hor. 2aff.

(13) Lit., ‘thou shalt know’.

(14) Lit., ‘not?’

(15) The woman did not act on the evidence of the witness which, as is now apparent, was due to an error, but on the ruling of the Beth din who accepted the evidence of this witness. Whatever their reason may have been it was their ruling that was the cause of the woman's marriage.

(16) [They assumed that every woman makes careful investigations before she marries (v. supra 25a) and it has been found that this was not the case].

(17) [Rashi: For a reason not as strong as that which prompted them to prohibit It. Me'iri: For the very same reason which made them permit it at the very first].

(18) Lit., ‘we do not look to them’. Once it has been found that their first ruling was erroneous it cannot again be adopted.

(19) v. supra p. 625, n.8.

(20) Testifying that the woman's husband was dead.

(21) Lit., ‘we permit’.

(22) Declaring that the husband was still alive.

(23) Lit., ‘we forbid’.

(24) Stating that the husband has died since.

(25) If the first authorization is to be regarded as a ruling it should not again be adopted (cf. supra n. 2), once it has been proved (by the testimony of the two witnesses) that it was erroneous.

(26) Lit., ‘not’?

(27) It is assumed that though the first witness misled the court the last is speaking the truth.

(28) l.e., one should delve deeper into the subject (cf. Rashi a.l.) ‘Justice under all circumstances’ (Jast.).

(29) The woman who married by permission of the court on the evidence of one witness.

(30) Cf. Sanh. 6b. Though, if viewed superficially, it would appear that the woman, since she had acted on the decision of a court, is not liable to a sin-offering (cf. Hor. 2a). careful consideration of the case would reveal that she is liable, since the decision was based on the error of the witness and not on a legal oversight of the court. Cf. supra p. 625, n. 7.

(31) Cf. supra note14, second section.

(32) Cf. loc. cit. first section.

(33) To a sin-offering.

(34) Cf. supra note 12 (first interpretation) and supra note 14.

(35) Marg. note, ‘Eleazar’.

(36) That even in such a case a sin-offering must be brought.

(37) Since it is obvious that the court's permission did not extend to a marriage which is in any case forbidden to the woman, even if her husband is dead.

(38) Lit. , ‘but not’.

(39) And since she acted on a ruling of a court, she is not liable to a sin-offering.

(40) This is further explained in Ker. 15a.

(41) Lit., ‘and they came and said to her’.

(42) As the son was alive when his father died the widow is not subject to the levirate marriage or halizah.

(43) A stranger.

(44) Lit., ‘the matter was reversed’, the son died first, so that when his father died afterwards the widow was subject to halizah or levirate marriage.

(45) From her second husband, since he married her before she had performed the required halizah.

(46) The second report. Lit ‘and the first and last child’.

(47) Being the issue of a union forbidden by a negative precept. V. Gemara infra.

(48) V. p. 627. n. 10.

(49) V. supra p. 627, n. 8.

(50) From the levir, to whom, (her husband having had issue from her at the time he died) she is forbidden as ‘his brother's wife’.

(51) At the time she married her second husband.

(52) From her second husband who married her while, as a married woman, she was forbidden to him.
(53) Lit., ‘and the first child’.
(54) Lit., ‘and the last’.
(55) Lit., ‘the last, the man who betrothed her.
(56) Priests.
(57) Lev. XXI, 7-
(58) Lit., ‘and not’.
(59) The divorce being unnecessary it has no effect on the status of the woman.
(60) In the first clauses of our Mishnah.
(61) Lit., ‘what is first and what is last’.
(62) Since the child's legitimacy is not determined by the date of the report but by the facts.
(63) Lit., ‘the first’.
(64) Lit., ‘and the last’.
(65) The statement in the first clause of our Mishnah that the child is a bastard.
(66) V. supra 10b. And no divorce is consequently required.
(67) Who married a stranger before she had performed halizah with the levir.
(68) Tosef. XI. Since such marriage is forbidden by a negative precept only, and is not subject to kareth.
(69) This more general statement would have also included the particular case of the sister-inlaw mentioned.
(70) Referred to in the Baraitha cited as ‘the Sages’.
(71) The marriage, for instance, of the sister-in-law to a stranger. The general statement (v. supra note 7) was consequently inadmissible.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 92b

in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that betrothal with a sister-in-law[1] is of no validity?[2] — From the Scriptural text,[3] The wife of the dead shall not be married[4] outside unto one who is not of his kin,[5] there shall be no validity in the betrothal[6] of her by a stranger.[7] Samuel, however, stated: Owing to our [intellectual] poverty[8] it is necessary [that she be given] a letter of divorce; Samuel having been in doubt as to whether the expression,[9] The wife of the dead shall not be,[10] served the purpose of[11] a negative precept[12] or rather indicated[11] that betrothal with such a woman is invalid.

R. Mari b. Rachel said to R. Ashi: Thus said Amemar, ‘The law is in agreement with Samuel’. Said R. Ashi: Now that Amemar has said that the law is in agreement with Samuel, her levir,[13] if he was a priest,[14] submits to her halizah and she is permitted to her second husband.[15] He[16] surely benefits[17] thereby.[18] and thus the sinner[19] is at an advantage![20] — Rather [this is the reading]: If her levir[21] was an Israelite, the other[22] gives her a letter of divorce and she is permitted to the levir.[23]

R. Giddal stated in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab: While betrothal with a sister-in-law[24] is invalid, marriage with her is valid.[25] If betrothal, however, is invalid, marriage also should be invalid! — Read: Both betrothal and marriage with her are invalid. And if you prefer I might say. What is meant by ‘marriage with her is valid’? — It constitutes an act of[26] harlotry[27] in accordance with the ruling of R. Hamnuna.For R. Hamnuna stated: A woman who, while awaiting the decision of the levir, played the harlot, is forbidden to marry the levir. And if you prefer I might say: [The reading is]. in fact, as has been originally stated, that betrothal with her is invalid but marriage with her is valid,[28] since her case might be mistaken for that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea.[29]

R. Jannai said: A vote was taken at the college and it was decided that betrothal with a sister-in-law[30] has no validity. Said R. Johanan to him: O Master, is not this [law contained in] a[31] Mishnah? For we have learnt: If a man said to a woman, ‘Be thou[32] betrothed unto me after I shall have become a proselyte’. ‘after thou shalt have been a proselyte’. ‘after I shall have been emancipated’. ‘after thou shalt have been emancipated’. ‘after thy husband shall have died’ , ‘after thy sister shall have died' or 'after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah', the betrothal is invalid![33] — The other replied: Had I not lifted up the sherd, would you have found the pearl beneath it?[34]

Resh Lakish said to him:[35] Had not a great man praised you. I would have told you that the Mishnah [you cited represents the view] of R. Akiba who maintains that betrothal with those who are subject to the penalties of a negative precept is invalid.[36]

If [this Mishnah, however, represents the view of] R. Akiba, betrothal [with the sister-in-law][37] should be valid where [the stranger] said to her, 'after thy brother-in-law shall have submitted to thy halizah', since R. Akiba has been heard to state that one may transfer possession of that which is not yet in existence;[38] for we learned:

(10) Deut. xxv. .5.

(11) Lit., 'that it came'.

(12) And, as is the case with other unions that are forbidden by negative precepts, the betrothal is valid.

(13) The brother-in-law of the widow, spoken of in the first case of our Mishnah, who married a stranger and from whom, according to Samuel, she requires a divorce.

(14) To whom the sister-in-jaw would thus be forbidden even after she had been divorced by the stranger. A priest is forbidden to marry a divorced woman. V. Lev. XXI, 7.

(15) Lit. , 'to him', the stranger whom she married.

(16) The second husband. v. supra n. 7.

(17) He is permitted to continue to live with his wife.

(18) By the halizah of the levir.

(19) Who contracted a union before instituting the necessary enquiries as to the circumstances of his wife's first husband's death.

(20) Lit., 'gains'.

(21) Cf. supra note 5.

(22) The second husband. Cf. supra note 7.

(23) Lit., 'to him'.

(24) Who, before she performed halizah with the levir had married a stranger.

(25) This validity, it is at present assumed, subjects the woman to the necessity of a letter of divorce.

(26) Lit., 'In'.

(27) By such a marriage she becomes forbidden to marry the levir as if she had played the harlot; but no letter of divorce is required.

(28) In the sense that she requires a letter of divorce. Cf. p. 630, n. 17. and the following note.

(29) And she married in accordance with the decision of a court on the evidence of one witness who testified that her first husband was dead. As the woman in this case requires a letter of divorce, it was ordained, as a preventive measure, that in the case spoken of in our Mishnah also a letter of divorce shall be required. the validity spoken of extending, however, to this requirement and no further. In the case of betrothal no preventive measure was enacted since in this case also no letter of divorce is required.

(30) V. p. 630, n. 16.

(31) Lit., ‘our’.

(32) Lit., ‘behold thou art’. Cf. P.B. p. 298.

(33) Kid. 62a, Keth. 58b. B.M. 16b. Betrothal cannot take effect at once owing to his stipulation and it cannot take place in the future because that which is not yet in existence may not be acquired. From this it follows that before the levir has submitted to halizah betrothal by a stranger is invalid, which is in effect the law reported by R. Jannai.

(34) I.e. , had not R. Jannai stated his ruling it might never have occurred to R. Johanan that the reason for the invalidity of the betrothal in the case of the sister-in- law was the law that betrothal with a sister-in-law by a stranger is never valid before the levir has submitted to halizah. He might have assumed the invalidity in this particular case also to be due to the fact that the man distinctly desired it to take place in the future, and no one can acquire that which is not yet in existence.

(35) R. Johanan.

(36) Marriage of a sister-in-law by a stranger before she has performed halizah with the levir is forbidden by such a negative precept. This Mishnah, therefore, provides no proof, like the statement of R. Jannai, that the Rabbis also admit invalidity in such a case.

(37) Lit ‘with’, or ‘in her’.

(38) Consequently. the betrothal here, though it was dependent on a future event which had not yet taken place. should also be valid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93a

[If a woman said to her husband]. ‘Konam,[1] I do aught for your mouth’,[2] he[3] need not annul [her vow].[4] R. Akiba, however, said: He[3] must annul it, since she might do more [work] than is due[5] to him![6] Surely in connection with this it was stated: R. Huna son of R. Joshua said, [This law[7] applies only] where she said, ‘My hands[8] shall be consecrated to Him who made them’, since her hands are in existence.[9]

This[10] differs [from the opinion] of R. Nahman b. Isaac. For R. Nahman b. Isaac stated: R. Huna [holds the same opinion] as Rab,[11] Rab as R. Jannai, R. Jannai as R. Hiyya. R. Hiyya as Rabbi,[12] Rabbi as R. Meir, R. Meir as R. Eliezer b. Jacob. and R. Eliezer b. Jacob as R. Akiba, who stated that a man may transfer possession of a thing that is not yet in existence.

What statement is it [that records the opinion of] R. Huna? It was stated: He who sold the fruit of a date-tree[13] to another may. said R. Huna, withdraw from the sale before they come into existence; but after they have come into existence he may no longer withdraw.[14] R. Nahman, however, stated: He may withdraw even after they have come Into existence.[15] Said R. Nahman: I admit, that if he[16] had already plucked and ate them, [compensation] is not to he extracted from him.[17]

As to Rab?[18] — [In that] which R. Huna stated in the name of Rab: If a man said to another, ‘let this field which I am about to buy be yours as from now the moment I buy it’, [the latter] acquires It.[19]

‘R. Jannai [is of the same opinion] as R. Hiyya’; for R. Jannai had a tenant[20] who used to bring him a basket of fruit every Sabbath Eve. Once as it was growing dark, and [the tenant] did not come, [R. Jannai] took[21] tithe[22] from the fruit which [he had] at home for [the redemption of] those.[23] When he subsequently came before R. Hiyya [the latter] said to him, ‘You have acted well; for it was taught : That thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always[24] refers to Sabbaths and festivals’.[25] Now, in ‘respect of what law?[26] If in respect of giving tithe[27] so that one may be allowed to eat,[28] was it necessary [it may be asked] for a Scriptural text to permit moving,[29] [the prohibition of which is only] Rabbinical![30]

(4) A wife's work belongs to her husband and she has, therefore, no right to dispose of it by vow or otherwise. Her vow is consequently null and void and requires on invalidation.
(5) A husband is entitled only to a certain amount of his wife's work (v. Keth. 64b). Any work in excess of that maximum is at the disposal of the wife who, in the opinion of R. Akiba, is entitled to forbid it to her husband by a vow, though that work has not yet been done.

(30) Scripture, surely. could not be referring to a prohibition which was not ordained before the Rabbinical period.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 93b

Consequently[1] [it must refer to] an instance like this one.[2] Said the first to him, ‘But in my dream[3] they read to me a Scriptural text on the "bruised reed";[4] did they not mean to tell me: Behold, thou trustest upon the staff of this bruised reed’?[5] ‘No’. [the other replied], ‘It is this that they meant: A bruised reed shall he not break, and the dimly burning wick shall he not quench’.[6]

Rabbi?[7] — Where it was taught: Thou shalt not deliver unto his master a bondman,[8] Rabbi explained that Scripture speaks here of a man who bought a slave on the condition that he would set him free.[9] How is this[10] to be understood?[11] R. Nahman b. Isaac replied: In the case where [the buyer] gave him[12] a written declaration, ‘Your person shall become yours as from now as soon as I have bought you’.[13]

R. Meir?[14] — Where it was taught:[15] If a man said to a woman, ‘Be thou betrothed to me after I shall have become a proselyte’. ‘after thou shalt have become a proselyte’. ‘after I shall have been emancipated’. ‘after thou shalt have been emancipated’. ‘after thy husband shall have died’, ‘after thy sister shall have died’, or ‘after thy brother-in- law shall have submitted to thy halizah’, the betrothal is invalid; but R. Meir said that her betrothal is valid.[16]

R. Eliezer b. Jacob?[14] — Where it was taught: More than this did R. Eliezer b. Jacob say: Even if a man said, ‘The plucked fruit of this bed shall be terumah for the attached fruit of that[17] other bed’, or ‘The attached fruit of this[17] bed [shall be terumah] for the plucked fruit of that other bed,[17] when it shall have grown[16] to a third [of its maturity] and been plucked’. his words are valid if the fruit has grown to[18] a third [of its maturity] and has been plucked.[19]

R. Akiba?[20] — Where we learned: [If a woman said to her husband]. ‘Konam,[21] if l do aught for your mouth’,[22] he[23] need not annul [her vow].[24] R. Akiba, however, said: He[23] must annul It, since she might do more [work] than is due[25] to him.[26]

An enquiry was addressed to R. Shesheth: What is [the law in respect of] one witness[27] in the case of a sister-in- law?[28] Is the reason why one witness [is sometimes believed elsewhere][29] because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed. and consequently here also [the witness] would tell no lie;[30] or is the reason why one witness [is believed elsewhere][31] because the woman herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here, since she may sometimes be in love with [her brother-in-law]. she might marry him without proper enquiry?[32] — R. Shesheth answered them: You have learned it, IF SHE WAS TOLD, ‘YOUR SON DIED AND YOUR HUSBAND DIED AFTERWARDS’, AND SHE CONTRACTED THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, ‘IT WAS OTHERWISE, SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.[33] Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that there were] two witnesses against two,[34] what reason do you see [it may be asked] for relying on the latter? Rely rather on the former! Furthermore. [how could the child be described as] BASTARD [when he is only] an uncertain bastard! And should you reply that he[35] was not exact in his expression. surely [it may be pointed out] since in the final clause he[35] stated, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD,[33] it may well be inferred that he was exact In his expressions, Consequently[36] it must be concluded [that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case[37] he would have been believed.[38]

Another reading: This question[39] does not arise, since even the woman herself is believed.[40] For we learned: A woman who stated, ‘My husband is dead’ may be married again.[41] and she may similarly contract levirate marriage [if she stated] ‘My husband is dead’.[42] The question arises only in respect of permitting a sister-in-law to marry a stranger.[43] Is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere sometimes believed][44] because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed, and consequently, here also [the witness] would tell no lie;[45] or is the reason why one witness [is elsewhere believed][44] because [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries, and consequently here she might marry without proper enquiry. since she might fiercely

hate her brother-inlaw?[1] — R. Shesheth answered them: You have learned it, IF A WOMAN.. WAS TOLD, YOUR HUSBAND DIED AND YOUR SON DIED AFTERWARDS', AND SHE MARRIED AGAIN, AND LATER SHE WAS TOLD, 'IT WAS OTHERWISE', SHE MUST DEPART; AND ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE OR AFTER IS A BASTARD.[2] Now, how is this to be understood? If it be suggested [that there were] two witnesses against two,[3] what reason do you see [it may be asked] for relying on the latter? Rely rather on the former! Furthermore, [how could the child be described as a] BASTARD, [when he is only] an uncertain bastard! And should you reply that he[4] was not exact in his expression. Surely [it may be pointed out] since in the final clause he[4] stated, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE [THE DEATH OF HER FIRST HUSBAND] IS A BASTARD, BUT ONE BORN AFTER IT IS NO BASTARD,[2] it may be inferred that he was exact in his expressions! Consequently[5] [it must be concluded that the first report was that of] one witness, and that the reason [why he is not believed is] because two witnesses came and contradicted his evidence, but had this not been the case[6] he would have been believed! [No]. In fact [it may be retorted, there may have been] two witnesses against two, and [this is the explanation]: As As R. Aha b. Manyumi stated, 'Where the witnesses have proved an alibi',[7] so here also [It is a case where the second pair of] witnesses have proved an alibi.[8]

Said R. Mordecai to R. Ashi, — others Say. R. Aha said to R. Ashi: Come and hear: A woman is not believed if she says. 'My brother-in-law is dead, and so I may marry again', or, 'My sister is dead, and so I may enter[9] her house'.[10] Only she is not believed but one witness is believed![11] According to your argument, however, [it may be retorted] read the final clause: A man is not believed when he says.'My brother is dead, and so I may contract the levirate marriage with his wife', or, 'My own wife is dead, and so I may marry her sister' —[10] Is it only he who is not believed, but one witness is believed? In the case of a woman[12] one can well understand that in order to prevent her perpetual desertion the Rabbis have relaxed the law in her favour.[13] What, however, can be said in the case of a man! [This statement][14] then [it must be explained] was required in accordance with the view of R. Akiba.[15] It might have been assumed that, since R. Akiba stated that the offspring of a union between those who are subject to the penalty of negative commandments is a bastard, she[16] may be presumed to be desirous of avoiding injury[17] and to institute, therefore, careful enquiries.[18] hence we were taught[19] [that she is not to be believed].[20] Raba said:[21] That one witness is believed in the case of a sister-in-law[22] [may be inferred] a minori ad majus: If you have permitted [a woman to marry again][23] in face of a prohibition involving kareth[24] how much more so in face of a mere prohibitory law.[25] Said one of the Rabbis to Raba: Her own case proves [the contrary]: In face of a prohibition involving kareth[24] you have permitted her [to marry again][26] while in face of a mere prohibitory law[25] you have not permitted her![27] The fact, however, is this:[28] Why is she not believed?[27] Because, as she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry a stranger without first instituting careful enquiries;[29] so also in the case of one witness, since she may sometimes hate the levir, she might marry [a stranger] without first instituting the necessary enquiries.[29]

THIS DID R. ELEAZAR B. MATHIA DERIVE BY MEANS OF THE FOLLOWING EXPOSITION etc. Said Rab Judah in the name of Rab:[30] R. Eleazar could have produced[31] a pearl and produced but a potsherd. What is meant by 'pearl'? — That which was taught: Neither [shall they take] a woman put away from her husband.[32] even if she was divorced from her husband alone[33] she[34] is disqualified from marrying a priest.[35] And it is this [that was meant by] the 'scent of the divorce'[36] which disqualifies a woman from marrying a priest. TO HIM;[1] AND HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE RELATIVES OF THE SECOND WOMAN,[2] AND THE SECOND WOMAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY HIS RELATIVES. IF THE FIRST DIED HE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE SECOND.

IF HE WAS TOLD, HOWEVER, THAT HIS WIFE WAS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER SISTER, AND THEN HE WAS TOLD THAT SHE WAS THEN[3] ALIVE BUT HAD SINCE DIED, ANY CHILD BORN BEFORE[4] [HIS FIRST WIFE'S DEATH] IS A BASTARD, BUT ANYONE BORN AFTER THAT[5] IS NO BASTARD.

R. JOSE STATED[6] WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES FOR OTHERS DISQUALIFIES FOR HIMSELF AND WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF.

GEMARA. Even though his wife and his brother-in-law[7] went to a country beyond the sea,[8] so that such marriage[9] had the effect of causing the prohibition of the wife of his brother-in-law to his brother-in-law, it is nevertheless the wife of his brother-in-law that is forbidden,[10] while his own wife is permitted.[11] and we do not say that, since the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden to his brother-in-law, his Own wife also should be forbidden to him.[12]

Are we to assume that our Mishnah does not represent the view of R. Akiba? For if [it be in agreement with] R. Akiba [his wife][13] would be the sister of his divorcee![14] For it was taught: None of the women In incestuous marriages forbidden in the Torah require a letter of divorce,[15] except a married woman[16] who remarried in accordance with the decision of the Beth din.[17] R. Akiba, however, adds[18] also a brother's wife[19] and a wife's sister.[20] Now, since R. Akiba ruled that she[21] requires a letter of divorce, [his first wife] becomes ipso facto forbidden to him because she is the sister of his divorcee![22]

Was not, however, the following statement made in connection with this[23] ruling: R. Giddal said in the name of R. Hiyya b. Joseph in the name of Rab, ‘How is one to understand this "brother's wife"?[24] Where a man's brother, for instance, betrothed a woman and went to a country beyond the sea, and he,[25] on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife;[26] since people might say[27] that the first[28] had attached a certain condition to the betrothal[29] and that the latter[25] had lawfully married her.[30] And how is one to understand a "wife's sister"?[24] Where a man, for instance, betrothed a woman and she went to a country beyond the sea, and he, on hearing that she died, married her sister;[26] since people might say[31] that he had attached a certain condition to the betrothal[32] of the first[33] and that he, therefore, legally married the other’.[34] In respect of marriage,[35] however, can it be said that one had attached a condition to marriage![36]

Said R. Ashi to R. Kahana: If [our Mishnah represents the view of] R. Akiba, one's mother-in-law[37] should also be mentioned,[38] since R. Akiba was heard to state: [The marriage of] a man's mother-in.law after the death [of his wife] is not punishable by burning![39] For it was taught: They shall be burnt with fire. both he and they,[40] he and one of them;[41] so R. Ishmael. R. Akiba said: He and both of them.[42] This presents no difficulty according to Abaye who explained that the difference between them[43] lies in the interpretation of the text,[40] R. Ishmael maintaining that the text mentioned only one[44] while R. Akiba maintains that the text spoke of two.[45] According to Raba, however, who explained that the difference between them[43] is [the case of marriage of] a man's mother-in-law after the death [of his wife].[46] his mother-in-law should also have been mentioned![47] — The other replied: Granted that Scripture has excluded her[48] from the penalty of burning. has Scripture. however, excluded her from the prohibition?[49]

Let her,[50] however, be forbidden [to her husband] through his cohabitation with her sister, her case being similar to that of a woman whose husband went to a country beyond the sea![51] — [The two cases are] not alike: His wife who, [if she had acted] presumptuously,[52] is forbidden to him by Pentateuchal law, has been forbidden to him, when [she acted] unwittingly, by a preventive measure of the Rabbis;

(7) The husband of his wife's sister.
(8) And on the evidence of one witness, who testified that both were dead, the man married his wife's sister; and subsequently both travellers returned.
(9) Of the man with his sister-in-law.
(10) To her husband.
(11) To him
(12) So that the same marriage which results in a prohibition of the one woman does not effect the permissibility of the other.
(13) Who comes back and who, according to our Mishnah, is permitted to return to him.
(14) With whom marital relationship is forbidden. The second wife, according to R. Akiba, as will tentatively be shown anon, must be divorced.
(15) If they were married, such an unlawful marriage being regarded as mere harlotry.
(16) Whose husband is reported, by one witness, to be dead.
(17) Who accepted the evidence; and later the husband returned. In such a case the women requires a divorce from her second husband also. V. infra 88b.
(18) To the women who require a letter of divorce.
(19) Whom a man married on the evidence that her husband (his brother) was dead, and her husband subsequently returned.
(20) Cf. the first case in our Mishnah.
(21) His wife's sister. V. supra n. 8.
(22) How, then, could it be said in our Mishnah that his first wife is PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM?

(24) In whose case a letter of divorce is required.
(25) The brother at home.
(26) In such a case a divorce was necessary.
(27) Should the brother return, and the brother at home not give his wife a letter of divorce.
(28) The brother who came back from a country beyond the sea.
(29) A condition which had not been fulfilled and had thus rendered the betrothal invalid.
(30) And so, in order that it be not suspected that a lawful marriage had been dissolved without a letter of divorce, It was enacted, as a preventive measure, that a letter of divorce was in such a case necessary.
(31) Should the woman return, and her sister not be given a letter of divorce.

(33) The woman who now returned.
(34) The sister who remained at home. Cf. supra p. 641, n. 18.
(35) The case spoken of in our Mishnah.
(36) [Surely no condition is attachable to marriage; and even on the view that marriage may be contracted conditionally, it is unusual for a person to invalidate a marriage because of the non-fulfilment of a condition attached to it (v. Tosaf. s.v. אלא)]. All would consequently know that the first marriage was a valid one and that the second was, therefore, invalid. No letter of divorce was, therefore, necessary even according to R. Akiba, whose view, contrary to the previous assumption, may well be represented in our Mishnah.
(37) Whom one married on receiving a report that his wife (her daughter) was dead.
(38) In our Mishnah.

(44) Forbidden woman (v. supra n. 10). the first having been lawfully married.
(45) Women that were both forbidden to the man; where, for instance, he married his mother-in-law and her mother. According to this explanation of Abaye the question of marrying a mother-inlaw after the death of one's lawful wife did not arise in the dispute, and R. Akiba's opinion on the subject cannot, therefore, be inferred from it.

(46) R. Ishmael maintaining that even when a man had married his mother-in-law after the death of his wife he is to be burned, while R. Akiba maintains that he is burned only if both women were alive.(Cf. Sanh. 76b).

(47) In our Mishnah; since, as has been shewn, according to Raba's explanation, marriage of a mother-in-law after the death of her daughter is, according to R. Akiba, permitted

(48) A mother-in-law that was married by her son-in- law.

(49) Evidently not. Her case, therefore, could not have been mentioned in our Mishnah.

(50) The first wife spoken of in our Mishnah, who IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.

(51) And she married a second husband. In both cases the women acted unwittingly. As in the latter case the woman is forbidden to her husband, so should the woman in the case in our Mishnah.

(52) In marrying a second husband.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 95a

with his wife's sister, however, presumptuous [marriage with whom does] not [cause his first wife to be] forbidden [to him] by Pentateuchal law, no preventive measure has been instituted by the Rabbis in her case where [he acted] unwittingly.[1] Whence, however, is it deduced that she[2] is not forbidden?[3] — [From that] which was taught: With her;[4] only cohabitation[5] with her causes her to be prohibited;[3] cohabitation[6] with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited. [This, Scriptural text was required] since [otherwise] It might have been argued [as follows]: If where a man cohabited with [a woman forbidden by] a lighter prohibition.[7] [the person][8] who caused the prohibition [itself][9] is forbidden [to her],[10] how much more should [the person][11] who caused the prohibition become forbidden in the case of cohabiting with [one[12] forbidden by] a heavier prohibition.[13]

R. Judah stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed[14] that a man who cohabited with his mother-in-law renders his wife unfit [to live with him]; they only differ where a man cohabited with his wife's sister, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him.

R. Jose stated: Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel are agreed[14] that a man who cohabits with his wife's sister does not thereby render his wife unfit for him; they differ only where a man cohabited with his mother-in-law, in which case Beth Shammai maintain that thereby he causes [his wife] to be unfit for him, while Beth Hillel maintain that he does not thereby cause her to be unfit for him. [Both agree][15] for the following reason:[16] Originally all the women of the world were permitted to him,[17] and all the men of the world were permitted to her;[18] but when he betrothed her he imposed a prohibition upon her and she imposed a prohibition upon him; the prohibition, however, which he imposed upon her is greater than the prohibition which she imposes upon him, since he caused all the men of the world to be forbidden to her, while she caused her relatives only to be forbidden to him. This,[19] then, may be arrived at by an inference: If she, to whom he[20] caused[21] all the men in the world to be prohibited, is, if she cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to her,[22] not forbidden to the man[23] who was permitted to her,[24] how much more reason is there why he[23] to whom she[25] caused[26] the prohibition of her relatives only, should, if he cohabited unwittingly with one who was forbidden to him,[27] not be forbidden[28] to her[25] who was permitted to him. This argument is applicable to one who acted unwittingly. Whence is it deduced [that the same law[29] is applicable] to one who acted wilfully? It was expressly stated With her,[30] cohabitation[31] with her only causes her to be prohibited;[32] cohabitation[33] with her sister, however, does not cause her to be prohibited.[32]

Said R. Ammi in the name of Resh Lakish: What is R. Judah's reason?[34] — Because it is written, They shall be burnt with fire. both he and they;[35] is the whole household to be burned![36] If this, then, is not a case for burning[36] regard the text as indicating a prohibition.[37]

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The law is not in agreement with R. Judah.[37]

A man once committed incest with his mother-in-law, and Rab Judah summoned him and ordered him to receive a flogging. ‘Had Samuel not stated’, he said to him, ‘that the law was not in agreement with R. Judah. I would have forbidden [your wife] to you for all time’.

What was meant by a ‘lighter prohibition’?[38] — R. Hisda replied: Remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man —[39] When that man[40] cohabited with her, he caused her to be prohibited to the other,[41] and when the other[41] cohabited with her[42] he caused her to be prohibited to the former.[43] [But, it may be argued,] remarrying one's divorced wife after her marriage to another man is different[44] since her body[45] was defiled and she is[46] prohibited for all time![47] — Rather, said Resh Lakish, [it means] a yebamah.[48]

A yebamah with whom?[49] If it be suggested: With a stranger,[50] [the ruling] being in accordance with R. Hamnuna who ruled[51] that a woman awaiting the decision of the levir who played the harlot is forbidden to the levir,[52] [it may be objected that] a yebamah is different,[44] since her body was defiled and she is prohibited to the majority of men.[53] If, however, [it be suggested that it refers[54] to] a yebamah in relation to [her deceased husband's] brothers: Where one [brother, for instance] addressed to her a ma'amar he caused her to be prohibited to the other,[55] and when the other cohabited with her he caused her to be prohibited to the former.[56] [But in this case] what point is there, [it may be retorted, in stating][57] that the second cohabited with her,[58] [when the same law is applicable] also even where he[59] only addressed to her a ma'amar![60] — This is no difficulty; [a ma'amar could not be postulated], in accordance with R. Gamaliel who ruled: There is no validity in a ma'amar that was addressed after a previous ma'amar.[61] But [still the objection is that the same law is applicable] even if he[59] gave her a letter of divorce and even if he submitted to her halizah! — Rather, said R. Johanan, [it means] a sotah.[62]

A sotah, with whom?[63] If it be suggested: With her husband who, if he cohabited with her,[64] caused her to be prohibited to her seducer,[65] what point is there, [it may be objected, in stating] that he cohabited with her? Even if he[66] only gave her a letter of divorce and even if he only said, ‘I am not allowing her to drink’,[67] [the same law is applicable]![68] [If it be suggested] however: The sotah with the seducer;[69] is this[70] [it may be objected] a ‘lighter prohibition’? It is surely a grave prohibition, since she is a married woman!

(1) As is the case in our Mishnah.

(2) A wife whose husband has had connubial intercourse with her sister.

(3) To her husband, in accordance with Pentateuchal law.

(4) And a man lie with her, Num. V, 13.

(5) Of a stranger.

(6) Of her husband.

(7) This, as will be explained infra, refers to a married woman, intercourse with whom is regarded as a comparatively lighter prohibition than that of a wife's sister (v. p. 644, n. 5), since it may at any time be raised by means of a letter of divorce severing the relationship between the husband and the wife.

(8) The husband.

(9) The husband causes the prohibition of his wife to all men. It is owing to his marriage with her that she is forbidden to marry any other man.

(10) One must not retain a faithless wife.

(11) I.e., the wife who caused the prohibition of her sister to her husband.

(12) His wife's sister.

(13) Since his wife causes her sister to be forbidden to him during the whole of her lifetime. Hence It was necessary to have a Scriptural text to shew that the law is not so.

(14) Lit., ‘did not dispute’.

(15) That cohabitation with his wife's sister does not render his wife unfit to live with him.

(16) Lit., ‘because’.
(17) The husband, before he married his wife.
(18) The wife, before she married her husband.

(31) Of a stranger.
(32) To her husband.
(33) Of her husband.
(34) For maintaining that both Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel agree that a man's cohabitation with his mother-in-law causes his wife to be prohibited to him.
(35) Lev. XX, 14. Cf. supra p. 642, n. 9.
(36) His first wife, surely, who was lawfully married, should not suffer because her husband bad subsequently contracted an unlawful marriage!

(39) Which is a ‘lighter prohibition’. being only a prohibitory law which involves no kareth. V. infra p. 646, n. I.
(40) Her second husband.
(41) Her first husband.
(42) After her second husband had divorced her.
(43) V. supra p. 645, n. 18, the prohibition being due to the prohibitory law in Deut. XXIV, 4. Thus the second husband ‘who caused the prohibition of his wife is thereby himself forbidden to her’.
(44) From a marriage with one's wife's sister.
(45) That of the divorced woman.
(46) Cur. edd., insert, ‘and she is prohibited to the majority’ which (cf. Rashi a.l.) is to be deleted.
(47) To both husbands. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden only during the lifetime of one's wife but permitted after her death, while furthermore the marriage of a wife's sister does not cause the defilement of the wife's body. The latter case cannot, therefore, be compared to the former. What, then, was meant by the ‘lighter prohibition’?
(48) Marriage with her by a stranger is regarded as a ‘lighter prohibition’.
(49) I.e., with whom did she cohabit that her act should have the result that he ‘who caused the prohibition is thereby himself forbidden to her’?
(50) The prohibition to marry whom, before she had performed the halizah, is only a prohibitory law involving no kareth.
(51) Supra 81a, 92b, Cit. 80b, Sot. 18b.
(52) Thus the levir ‘who caused the prohibition’ of his sister-in-law to others is ‘himself forbidden to her’ by the cohabitation of the stranger.
(53) I.e., to everybody except the levir or levirs. A wife's sister, however, is forbidden to him (her sister's husband) alone, and his wife's body is not defiled by his marriage with her sister. The two cases, therefore, cannot be compared.
(54) Cf. supra note 6.
(55) Brother, this being regarded as a ‘lighter prohibition’, since it is due to a Rabbinic measure only.
(56) Cf. supra note so, mutatis mutandis.
(57) Supra.
(58) I.e., that be prohibits her to the first only because he cohabited with her.

(62) V. Glos. Cohabitation with a sotah is regarded as the ‘lighter prohibition’.
(63) V. supra p. 646, n. 7.
(64) After she had been warned by him against intimacy with a stranger, and after she had met that stranger privately, when all connubial intercourse between the woman and her husband is forbidden.
(65) Even after his own death or after he had divorced her. Thus, the seducer ‘who caused the prohibition’ of the woman to her husband becomes ‘himself forbidden’ to her for all time.
(66) Her husband.
(67) The water of bitterness (cf. Num. V, 18). V. supra n. 6.
(68) She becomes forbidden to the seducer for all time. Cf. supra n’ 7.
(69) By his cohabitation the woman becomes prohibited to her husband who was the cause of her prohibition to others.
(70) Cohabitation with a married woman.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 95b

— Rather, said Raba, it means a married woman. Similarly when Rabin came[1] he stated in the name of R. Johanan: A married woman. But why should this[2] be described as ‘a lighter prohibition’? — Because [her husband] who causes her to be prohibited [to other men] does not cause her to be so prohibited during the whole of his lifetime.[3]

It[4] was taught likewise: Abba Hanan stated in the name of R. Eleazar: [It means] a married man. [And the argument runs thus:] If where a man cohabits with [a woman forbidden by] a lighter prohibition,[5] in which case he[6] who caused the prohibition of her does not cause her to be prohibited during the whole of his lifetime,[7] [it is nevertheless ruled] that the very person who causes the prohibition becomes prohibited,[8] then, in a case of cohabiting with [one forbidden] by a graver prohibition,[9] where the person, who causes the prohibition of her,[10] prohibits her during the whole of her lifetime,[11] how much more should we rule that the very person who causes the prohibition should become prohibited;[12] hence it was expressly stated, With her,[13] only cohabition[14] with her[15] causes her to be prohibited[16] but cohabitation[17] with her sister does not cause her[18] to be prohibited.[16]

R. JOSE STATED: WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES etc. What does R. Jose mean?[19] If it be suggested that while the first Tanna implied that ‘Where a man's wife and his brother-in-law[20] went to a country beyond the sea,[21] the wife of his brother- in-law is forbidden,[22] though his own wife is permitted’,[23] R. Jose said to him, ‘As his own wife is permitted[23] so is the wife of his brother-in-law also permitted’;[22] if so, [it may be objected, why the expression] WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF[24] where it should have been. ‘Whosoever does not disqualify[25] for himself, does not disqualify for others’![26]

If, however, [it be suggested that R. Jose implied]. ‘As the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden,[27] so is his wife also forbidden’,[28] [the expression,] WHOSOEVER DISQUALIFIES would be satisfactorily explained; what, however, would be the purport of WHOSOEVER DOES NOT DISQUALIFY?[24] — R. Ammi replied: [He[29] refers] to an earlier clause:[30] ‘If she married with the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave, but is exempt from an offering. If she married, however, without the authorization of the Beth din, she must leave and is also liable to an offering, the authorization of the Beth din is thus more effective in that it exempts her from the offering.[31] Concerning this, the first Tanna stated [that his wife may return to him][32] ‘irrespective of whether [the marriage[33] took place] on the evidence of two witnesses,[34] where the wife of his brother-in-law is permitted,[35] or whether [it took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din,[36] where the wife of his brother-in- law is forbidden',[35] and [to this] R. Jose replied. '[If the marriage took place] in accordance with a decision of the Beth din,[36] where he DISQUALIFIES FOR OTHERS[37] he DISQUALIFIES FOR HIMSELF;[38] [if, however, it took place] on the basis of the evidence of two witnesses,[34] where he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR OTHERS[39] he DOES NOT DISQUALIFY FOR HIMSELF.[40]

R. Isaac Nappaha replied: [R. Jose may], in fact, refer to the latter clause,[41] one[42] [of his rulings applying] where [the persons who] had gone [were] the man's wife[43] and his brother-in-law. and the other [applying] where his betrothed and brother-in-law had gone. The first Tanna having ruled that 'irrespective of whether it was his wife and his brother-in-law or whether it was his betrothed and his brother-in-law, the wife of his brother-in-law is forbidden[44] while his wife is permitted,'[45] R. Jose said to him, 'In the case of his wife and brother-in-law where no one would assume that he had attached some condition to his marriage[46] and where consequently he does not cause [his sister-in-law] to be prohibited to the other,[47] he does not cause [his first wife] to be prohibited to him either; in the case of his betrothed and his brother-in-law, however, where someone might assume that he had attached some condition to his betrothal[48] and where, in consequence, he causes [his sister- in-law] to be prohibited to the other,[49] he causes [his first wife] also to be prohibited to him.

Rab Judah Stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Jose.

R. Joseph demurred: Could Samuel have said this?[50] Surely it was stated: A yebamah,[51] Rab said, has the status of a married woman; and Samuel said: She has not the status of a married woman. And R. Huna said: Where, for instance, a man's brother betrothed a woman[52] and then went to a country beyond the sea, and he,[53] on hearing that his brother was dead, married his wife. [It is in such a case] that Rab ruled that 'she has the status of a married woman' and is consequently forbidden to the brother-inlaw;[54] and Samuel ruled that 'she has not the status of a married woman' and is, therefore, permitted to him![55] Said Abaye to him:[56] Whence [do you infer] that when Samuel stated that 'the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose', he was referring to R. Isaac Nappaha's interpretation? Is it not possible that he was referring to that of R. Ammi![57] And even if he refers to that of R. Isaac Nappaha, whence the proof that [he referred to the ruling] 'DISQUALIFIED'?[58]

(1) From Palestine to Babylon.

(2) Illicit intercourse with a married woman.

(3) As soon as be divorces her she is free again. A prohibition of this nature, which may terminate at any time, is regarded as 'lighter' than the prohibition of a man's wife's sister, which remains in force throughout the whole of the lifetime of his wife.

(4) The lighter prohibition referred to.

(5) A married woman. The prohibition is considered light for the reason that follows.

(6) The husband.

(7) The prohibition of a married woman terminates with divorce by her husband.

(8) The woman becomes forbidden to her own husband through illicit intercourse.

(9) His wife's sister.

(10) I.e., the wife who causes her sister to be prohibited to her husband.

(20) His wife's sister's husband.

(21) And they both returned after be had married his wife's sister on the strength of the evidence of one witness who testified that they were both dead.

(22) To her husband, his brother-in-law.

(23) To him.

(24) Cases about which R. Jose, according to this suggestion, did not speak.

(25) His own wife.

(26) His wife's sister to her husband. These last mentioned cases being those of which R. Jose presumably spoke.

(27) To her husband, his brother-in- law.

(28) To him.

(29) R. Jose.

(30) In a previous Mishnah.

(31) V. supra 87b.

(32) V. our Mishnah, first clause.

(33) Of the husband (whose wife had gone away) with his wife's sister (whose husband also bad gone away).

(34) Who testified that both his wife and brother-in-law were dead.

(35) To her husband, if be returned.

(36) On the evidence of one witness. V. supra n. 11.

(37) He causes his wife's sister to be forbidden to return to her husband owing to his illicit marriage with her.

(38) His first wife is forbidden to him also.

(39) His wife's sister being in this case permitted to her husband.

(40) And his first wife may return to him.

(41) I.e., our Mishnah which speaks of a marriage permitted on the evidence of one witness.

(42) Lit., ‘that’. Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘that, where he married the wife of his brother-in-law; and that, where he married the betrothed of his brother-in-law.’

(43) This is the reading of Rashi (a.l. s.v. ח״ג). Cur. edd., transpose ‘wife’ and ‘betrothed’.

(44) To her husband, if be returned.

(45) To him.

(46) With his first wife; since no condition is admissible in a marriage contract. (V., however, supra p. 642, n. 5).

(47) Her husband, his brother-in-law. His own first marriage being known to be valid it should be obvious to all that his subsequent marriage with his sister-in-law was invalid. Were it even assumed that his brother-in-law had divorced her, the invalidity of his marriage with his sister-in-law would not thereby be affected since even after her divorce she still remains forbidden to him as his wife's sister. This being the case no one will suspect his brother-in-law when his wife returns to him of having remarried his divorcee. Hence R. Jose's ruling that she is not forbidden to her husband.

(48) Which, on non-fulfilment, had rendered the betrothal invalid and thus enabled him lawfully to contract his subsequent marriage; his presumed sister-in-law being to him (owing to the invalidity of her sister's betrothal) no more than a mere stranger.

(49) Her former husband. Were she permitted to return to him it might be assumed that he had divorced her prior to her marriage with her brother-in-law and that the latter had now divorced her; and so it would be concluded that (contrary to Deut. XXIV, 4) a man married again the woman he had once divorced though she had in the meantime been married to another man.

(50) Lit., ‘thus’, that the halachah is in agreement with the full statement of R. Jose, including the part relating to the marriage with the sister of one's betrothed, it being necessary in case of betrothal to provide against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid and that consequently a man's divorcee had been married again by him. Cf. p. 650, nn. 8 and 9.

(51) This is explained anon.

(52) Had he married her there would have been no question that she may return to him. Cf. supra p. 650, n. 7.

(53) The brother at home.

(54) I.e., to the man who first betrothed her and then left her and now returned, and who, owing to his brother's marriage with her, has become her brother-in-law. Were she to be permitted to return to him it might be assumed that his original betrothal was invalid owing to some disqualifying condition, that his brother's marriage was, therefore, valid, and that be now married his brother's wife.

(55) Because, in the opinion of Samuel, no provision need be made against the erroneous assumption that the betrothal was invalid (cf. supra n. 5). How, then, could it be said that Samuel adopted the complete statement of R. Jose.
(56) R. Joseph.
(57) So that the question of the assumption of a disqualifying condition in a betrothal would not at all arise.
(58) The case of one's betrothed and brother-in-law.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96a

Is it not possible [that he referred] to the ruling ‘DOES NOT DISQUALIFY’![1] Or else [it might be argued], whence is it proved that R. Huna's explanation[2] is tenable? Is it not possible that R. Huna's explanation is altogether untenable and that they[3] differ on the ruling of R. Hamnuna who stated that ‘A woman awaiting the decision of the levir, who played the harlot, is forbidden to her levir’;[4] Rab maintaining that she ‘has the status of a married woman’ and is consequently prohibited[5] by reason of her immoral act,[6] while Samuel maintains that ‘she has not the status of a married woman’ and does not therefore, become prohibited[5] by reason of her immoral act? Or else [it might be replied] that they[3] differ on the question whether betrothal of a sister-in-law[7] is valid, Rab maintaining that she ‘has the status of a married woman’ and betrothal[7] with her is, in consequence, invalid, while Samuel maintains that ‘she has not the status of a married woman’ and betrothal[7] with her is, therefore, valid. But on this question[8] they[3] had already disputed once![9] — The one was stated as an inference from the other.[10]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS TOLD ‘YOUR WIFE IS DEAD AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER; [AND WHEN HE WAS TOLD] ‘SHE[11] ALSO IS DEAD’, HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER;[12] SHE[13] TOO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER PATERNAL SISTER;[14] ‘SHE[15] ALSO IS DEAD, AND HE MARRIED HER MATERNAL SISTER;[16] AND LATER IT WAS FOUND THAT THEY WERE ALL ALIVE, HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE FIRST,[17] THIRD[18] AND FIFTH,[19] WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS;[20] BUT HE IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND OR THE FOURTH,[21] AND COHABITATION[22] WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL. IF, HOWEVER, HE[23] COHABITED WITH THE SECOND AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST,[24] HE IS PERMITTED TO LIVE WITH THE SECOND[25] AND FOURTH,[26] WHO ALSO EXEMPT THEIR RIVALS;[27] BUT HE[23] IS FORBIDDEN TO LIVE[28] WITH THE THIRD AND WITH THE FIFTH, AND COHABITATION[22] WITH ONE OF THESE DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS[29] [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS, AND HIS BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM, BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THE BROTHERS RENDER HER UNFIT BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER?[29] A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW RENDERS HER UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE] WITH HIS BROTHERS; THE BROTHERS, HOWEVER, RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM WHETHER THEY COHABITED WITH HER, ADDRESSED TO HER A MA'AMAR, GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE OR SUBMITTED TO HER HALIZAH.

GEMARA. Did not all those [marriages[30] take place] after the death of the first wife![31] — R. Shesheth replied: [By this[32] was meant]. AFTER THE ASCERTAINED[33] DEATH OF THE FIRST WIFE.

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. Does a boy of the age of nine years and one day cause unfitness[34] [only where his act took place] at the outset,[35] but if at the end[36] he causes no unfitness? Surely R. Zebid son of R. Oshaia learnt: If [a brother][37] addressed a ma'amar to his sister-in-law, his brother of the age of nine years and one day, cohabiting with her afterwards, causes her to be unfit [for marriage with him]![38] — It may be replied: Cohabitation causes unfitness[32] even [if it took place] at the end,[36] while a ma'amar causes unfitness [only if it was addressed] at the outset,[35] but if at the end,[36] it causes no unfitness. But does cohabitation[39] cause unfitness even [if it took place] at the end? Surely it was taught: BUT WHILE HE RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, THEY [RENDER HER UNFIT] BOTH FROM THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-INLAW etc![40] — Something, indeed, is here missing, and this is the proper reading: ‘A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY RENDERS [HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] UNFIT [FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS, if his action took place] AT THE OUTSET, but they RENDER HER UNFIT FOR HIM BOTH AT THE OUTSET AND AT THE END. This is applicable only in the case of a ma'amar, but cohabitation[41] causes unfitness even [if it took place] at the end. IN WHAT MANNER? A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY WHO COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW[42] RENDERS HER UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIS BROTHERS.

His his ma'amar, however, any validity[43] at all?[44] Surely it was taught: A boy of the age of nine years and one day renders [his sister-in-law] unfit for his brothers[45] by one kind of act only, while the brothers render her unfit for him by four kinds of acts. He renders her unfit for the brothers by cohabitation,[46] while the brothers render her unfit for him by cohabitation, by a ma'amar, by a letter of divorce and by halizah![47] — Cohabitation, which causes unfitness both from the outset and at the end, presented to him a definite law,[48] [the law of the] ma'amar, however, which causes unfitness front the outset only but not at the end, could not be regarded by him as definite.[49]

So it was also stated: Rab Judah said in the name of Samuel: He[50] has [the power to give] a letter of divorce.[51] And so said R. Tahlifa b. Abimi: He[50] has [the power to address] a ma'amar.[51]

It was taught likewise: He[50] has [the right to give] a letter of divorce[51] and he has [the right to address] a ma'amar;[51] so R. Meir.

Could R. Meir, however, hold the view [that such a boy] has [the power to give] a letter of divorce?[51] Surely it was taught: Cohabitation with a boy of the age of nine years [and one day] was given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult; and R. Meir said: The halizah of a boy of the age of nine years was given the same validity as that of a letter of divorce by an adult.[52] Now, if that were so,[53] it should have been stated, ‘As that of his own letter of divorce’! — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: He[54] has [the right],[55] but [his divorce is of a] lesser validity.[56] For according to R. Gamaliel who ruled that there is no [validity in a] letter of divorce after another letter of divorce, his ruling is applicable only [in the case of a divorce] by an adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce] by an adult after that of a minor is effective,[57] while according to the Rabbis who ruled that a letter of divorce given after another letter of divorce is valid, the ruling applies only to [a divorce] by adult after that of an adult, or one by a minor after that of a minor, but [a divorce by] a minor after [that of] an adult is not effective.[57]

(1) The case of one's wife and brother-in-law-; Samuel indicating that in this case, and in this case alone, the halachah is in agreement with R. Jose that the sister-in-law is permitted to her first husband contrary to the view of the first Tanna who forbids her.

(2) Supra 95b.

(3) Rab and Samuel.

(4) Cit. 80b, Sot 18b, supra 95a.

(5) To the levir.

(6) As a married woman is prohibited to her husband if she has committed such an act.

(7) To a stranger before she had performed halizah.

(8) The validity of betrothal of a sister- in-law. V. supra n. 7.

(9) Supra 92b. Why should they dispute the same point twice.
(10) By disciples. Rab and Samuel, however disputed the point only once.
(11) His second wife.
(12) Who was thus a perfect stranger to the first wife.
(13) His third wife.
(14) A perfect stranger to the second.
(15) The fourth.
(16) A stranger to the third.
(17) Since his marriage with her was valid.
(18) Who was a complete stranger to him when he married her (V. supra p. 652. n. 12). His previous marriage with her maternal sister (his second wife) had no validity because the latter was a sister of his first wife and was forbidden to him as ‘his wife's sister’.
(19) Marriage with whom was valid since the marriage with her sister (the fourth) was invalid. Cf. supra n. 2, mutatis mutandis.
(20) If the man died without issue and one of his surviving brothers contracted the levirate marriage with or submitted to halizah from one of these widows.
(21) The validity of his marriage wife the first and third causes the second and the fourth to be prohibited to him as his wives’ respective sisters. Cf. supra note 2.
(22) By one of the levirs. Cf. supra note 4.
(23) The husband.
(24) I.e., it was proved that the first report of her death was true (Rashi).
(25) The death of the first wife has removed from the second the prohibition of wife's sister (since a wife's sister is prohibited only during the lifetime of the wife) marriage with whom becomes valid.
(26) The marriage with the second having become valid (v. supra n. 9), that with the third (being now the man's wife's sister) becomes invalid and, consequently, the marriage with the fourth who is now a perfect stranger becomes valid.
(27) V. supra note 4.
(28) Cf. previous notes, mutatis mutandis.
(29) This will be explained in the Gemara infra.
(30) That were enumerated in the first clause of our Mishnah.
(31) Why then was ‘AFTER THE DEATH OF THE FIRST’ mentioned only in the second clause in the case where HE COHABITED WITH THE SECOND?
(32) V. supra n. 2.
(33) In the other cases death was only reported.
(34) Of his sister-in-law for his brothers.
(35) Before any of the adult brothers bad addressed a ma'amar to the widow.
(36) After an elder brother had addressed to her a ma'amar.
(37) Of a deceased husband who died without issue.
(38) Which shows that a boy of this age may cause unfitness even ‘at the end’.
(39) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
(40) Emphasis on COHABITED. Since the illustration is limited to an act of cohabitation only the general statement that the boy RENDERS HER UNFIT FROM THE OUTSET ONLY, on which the illustration apparently hangs must also be limited to cohabitation.
(41) On the part of the boy of the age of nine years and one day.
(42) Even at the end, i.e., after his brothers had addressed to her a ma'amar.
(43) Lit., ‘has he a ma'amar’?
(44) Cur. edd. insert ‘for the brothers’, which, with MS.M. and Pesaro ed. 1509, should be omitted. V. infra n. 5.
(45) The last three words are wanting in cur. edd., but are rightly included in the Pesaro ed. V. supra n. 4.
(46) And by no other act.
(47) How then could it be said that the boy's ma'amar has any validity at all.
(48) פסיקא rt. פסק ‘to cut’, ‘to decide’, i.e., the law relating to cohabitation is definite and absolute. The act is always valid. Hence he mentioned it.
(49) And being undesirous of entering into details of the law he preferred to omit it.

(50) A boy of the age of nine years and one day.
(51) His act is effective and causes his sister-in- law to be unfit for marriage to his brothers.
(52) Cf. Nid. 45a, supra 68a.
(53) That according to R. Meir the letter of divorce of a boy of the age of nine years and one day is valid.
(54) A boy the age of nine years and one day.
(55) To give a letter of divorce. V. supra p. 655. n. 11.
(56) Lit., 'and small'. Hence no comparison could be made between his halizah which is as valid as that of a divorce by on adult, and his own divorce which is not so valid.
(57) Since the divorce of the minor is of lesser validity.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 96b

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW[1] AND THEN HIS BROTHER WHO WAS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HER, [THE LATTER] RENDERS HER UNFIT[2] FOR [THE FORMER].[3] R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER HER UNFIT.[4]

IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW[5] AND AFTERWARDS HE COHABITED WITH HER RIVAL, HE HAS RENDERED [THEREBY THE FIRST AS WELL AS THE SECOND] UNFIT FOR MARRIAGE WITH HIMSELF.[6] R. SIMEON SAID: HE DOES NOT RENDER [THEM] UNFIT.[7]

GEMARA. It was taught: R. Simeon said to the Sages, 'If the first cohabitation[8] was a valid act,[9] the second cohabitation[10] cannot have any validity;[11] if, the first cohabitation, however, has no validity,[12] the second cohabitation also should have no validity'.[13]

Our Mishnah[14] cannot represent the view of Ben 'Azzai; for it was taught: Ben 'Azzai stated, 'A ma'amar is valid after another ma'amar where it concerns two levirs[15] and one sister-in-law,[16] but no ma'amar is valid after a ma'amar where it concerns two sisters-inlaw and one levir.'[17]

MISHNAH. IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW[18] AND THEN DIED, SHE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[19] IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED, SHE IS EXEMPT [FROM BOTH].[20]

IF A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY COHABITED WITH HIS SISTER-IN-LAW, AND AFTER HE HAD COME OF AGE HE MARRIED ANOTHER WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED, IF HE HAD NOT [CARNALLY] KNOWN THE FIRST WOMAN AFTER HE HAD BECOME OF AGE, THE FIRST ONE MUST PERFORM HALIZAH BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,[21] WHILE THE SECOND[22] MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. R. SIMEON SAID: [THE SURVIVING LEVIR] MAY CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE WITH WHICHEVER OF THEM HE MAY DESIRE[23] AND SUBMITS TO HALIZAH FROM THE OTHER.[24] [THE SAME LAW APPLIES] WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS AND ONE DAY, OR WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF TWENTY YEARS BUT HAD NOT PRODUCED TWO PUBIC HAIRS.[25] GEMARA. Raba stated: With reference to the statement of the Rabbis that in the case of the levirate bond originating from two levirs [the sister-in-law] must perform halizah only but may not contract levirate marriage, it must not be assumed that this is applicable only where there is a rival, because [in that case] a preventive measure was necessary on account of the rival;[26] for here[27] there is no rival and yet [the sister-in-law] must perform halizah only but may not contract the levirate marriage.[28]

IF HE HAD MARRIED [ANY OTHER] WOMAN AND SUBSEQUENTLY DIED etc. Here[27] we learned what the Rabbis taught: If an imbecile or a minor married and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage.[29]

A BOY OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. AND AFTER HE HAD COME OF AGE etc. Let the cohabitation of the boy of nine[27] be given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult,[30] and so let the rival [here][27] be debarred from the levirate marriage![31] — Now said Rab: The cohabitation of a boy of nine was not given the same validity as that of a ma'amar by an adult. Samuel, however, said: It was certainly given the same validity:[32] and so said R. Johanan: It certainly was given the same validity. Then[33] let the same validity be given here also![34] — This [question is a matter of dispute between] Tannaim. That Tanna [whose ruling is contained in the chapter] of the ‘Four Brothers’[35] enacted a preventive measure on account of the rival;[36] and though he stated the law in respect of an adult the same law is applicable to a minor, the reason why he mentioned the adult being only because he was engaged on the question of[37] the adult. The Tanna here[38] however, is of the opinion that they[39] were given the same validity,[40] and he enacted no preventive measure on account of the rival; and though he spoke of the minor the same law applies to an adult, the reason why he spoke of the minor being only because he was dealing with the minor.[37]

R. Eleazar came and reported this statement at the schoolhouse but did not report it in the name of R. Johanan. When R. Johanan heard this he was annoyed.[41] Thereupon R. Ammi and R. Assi came in and said to him: Did it not happen at the Synagogue of Tiberias that R. Eleazar and R. Jose disputed [so hotly] concerning a door bolt which had a knob[42] at one end[43] that they tore a Scroll of the Law in their excitement. ‘They tore?[44] Could this be imagined! Say rather ‘That a Scroll of the Law was torn[45] in their excitement’. R. Jose b. Kisma who was then present exclaimed, ‘I shall be surprised if this Synagogue[46] is not turned into a house of idolatry’, and so it happened. [On hearing this] he was annoyed all the more. ‘Comradeship too’ he exclaimed.[47]

Thereupon R. Jacob b. Idi came in and said to him: ‘As the Lord commanded Moses his servant, so did Moses command Joshua, and so did Joshua; he left nothing undone of all that the Lord commanded Moses;[48] did Joshua, then, concerning every word which he said, tell them, "Thus did Moses tell me"? But, the fact is that Joshua was sitting and delivering his discourse without mentioning names, and all knew that it was the Torah of Moses. So did your disciple R. Eleazar sit and deliver his discourse without mentioning names and all knew that it was yours’. ‘Why’, he[49] chided them,[50] are you not capable of conciliating like the son of Idi our friend?’

Why was R. Johanan so annoyed? — [For the following reason]. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: What is the meaning of the Scriptural text, I will dwell in Thy tent for ever?[51] Is it possible for a man to dwell in two worlds! But [in fact it is this that] David said to the Holy One, blessed be He, ‘Lord of the Universe, May it be Thy will

---

(1) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(2) For the levirate marriage.

(3) Because, as in the case of a ma'amar after a ma'amar, the act of either levir is valid and, as no two levirs may marry the same sister-in-law, the latter must divorce her; and a sister-in-law divorced by one of the levirs may never again be married by any of them.

(4) His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.

(5) The widow of his brother who died without issue.

(6) Since levirate marriage may be contracted with one sister-in- law only. The first cohabitation constituting an imperfect kinyan, the second is effective to the extent of necessitating a divorce, and with a sister-in-law that was divorced by a levir, none of the levirs may subsequently contract levirate marriage. Cf. supra p. 656, n. 9.

(7) His reason is given in the Gemara, infra.

(8) Of the first young levir.

(9) Constituting a kinyan of the sister-in-law.

(10) That of the second young levir.

(11) Since there is no validity in an act of cohabitation that follows an act of cohabitation (v. supra 50a), the second act is regarded as irregular intercourse with a stranger; and since it was committed unwittingly, the woman remains permitted to the first levir.

(12) Owing to the levir's tender age.

(13) V. supra n. 8 and cf. supra 51b.

(14) Which regards the cohabitation of a young levir as having the same validity as a ma'amar (cf. supra p. 656, n. 9), and yet rules that an act of cohabitation after another act of cohabitation is legally effective whether in the case of two levirs and one sister- in-law (first case) or two sisters-in-law and one levir (second case).

(15) The one as well as the other having addressed to the widow one ma'amar only.

(16) Because each levir (v. supra 51a) has equally the power to address such a ma'amar.

(17) The second ma'amar having no validity owing to the first ma'amar which had completely effected the kinyan of the first sister-in-law; and no levir is permitted to contract levirate marriage with more than one of the widows of his deceased childless brother.

(18) The widow of his brother who died childless.

(19) The act of the minor, while it is valid enough to subject his sister- in-law to the levirate bond of his surviving brothers, does not sever the first levirate bond which is due to her union with the first deceased brother. Being now subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, she is deprived (cf. supra 31b) of her right to the levirate marriage, and must perform halizah only.

(20) Levirate marriage and halizah. The betrothal of a minor having no validity, the woman is not regarded as his wife in respect of the levirate. It is only in the case of a sister-in-law (v. supra n. 2) that his cohabitation is valid enough to subject the woman to the levirate bond.

(21) Because, as the minor did not cohabit with her since he became of age, she remained subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs (cf. supra note 2).

(22) Being the deceased's lawful wife.

(23) R. Simeon does not admit the ineligibility for levirate marriage of a sister-in- law who is subject to the levirate bond originating from two levirs, V. supra 31b.

(24) Since they cannot be regarded as rivals, the marriage of the one does not exempt the other, Both, however, may not be taken in levirate marriage, as a preventive measure against erroneous comparisons with two sisters-in-law who were lawfully married.

(25) The marks of maturity. So long as these have not appeared he retains the legal status of a minor.

(26) V. supra 31b and cf. supra p. 658, n. 7 end.

(27) In our Mishnah.

(28) Cf. supra p. 658, n. 2.

(29) Supra 69b, infra 112b. A minor and an imbecile have the same legal status, and our Mishnah, speaking of the minor confirms this ruling.

(30) Which (as stated supra 31b) debars the rival of the widow to whom the [ma'amar had been addressed, from the levirate marriage, though the rival's marriage with the deceased was in every respect a lawful union.

(31) Why then was it stated that THE SECOND MAY EITHER PERFORM HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE?

(32) Lit., ‘they made and they made’.

(33) According to Samuel and R. Johanan.

(34) Lit., ‘and let them make’. Cf. supra n. 6.

(35) The chapter which contains the Mishnah referred to is named after the first two words with which it begins. V. supra 260.

(36) Cf. supra 31b.

(37) Lit., ‘stood’.

(38) In our Mishnah.

(39) The cohabitation of a minor and the ma'amar of an adult.

(40) Lit., ‘they made’.

(41) Perhaps because R. Eleazar did not act in accordance with Aboth VI, 6, ‘Whosoever reports a thing in the name of him who said it brings deliverance into the world’. V., however, the Gemara's explanation infra.
(42) Or, ‘a fastening contrivance’ (Jast.).
(43) R. Eleazar forbids its use on the Sabbath because it cannot be regarded as a ‘vessel’ and is consequently forbidden to be moved from its place; while R. Jose maintains that the knob at its end, whereby the bolt may occasionally be used as a pestle for crushing foodstuffs, imports to it the character of a vessel and it may. therefore. be used and moved on the Sabbath. V. ‘Er. 101b.

(45) The Niph'al. accidentally.
(46) Which permitted strife among its scholars.
(47) They compared his resentment against his disciple R. Eleazar to a dispute between colleagues, as if he and his disciple were school companions. ‘The fellows (my pupils) too, are quoted against me?’ (Jast.)

that a traditional statement may be reported in my name in this world’; for R. Johanan[1] stated in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: The lips of a [deceased] scholar, in whose name a traditional statement is reported in this world, move gently in the grave. Said R. Isaac b. Ze'ira, or it might be said, Simeon the Nazirite: What is the Scriptural proof of this? And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine that glideth down smoothly for my beloved, moving gently the lips of those who are asleep,[2] like a heated mass of grapes. As a heated mass of grapes, as soon as a man places his finger upon it, exudes[3] immediately so with the scholars as soon as a traditional statement is made in their name in this world, their lips move gently[4] in the grave.

WHETHER HE IS OF THE AGE OF NINE YEARS etc. A contradiction was pointed out: If at the age of twenty he[5] did not produce two [pubic] hairs,[6] they[7] must bring evidence that he is twenty years of age, and he [is then confirmed as a] saris;[8] he may neither submit to halizah nor may he perform the levirate marriage. If a woman[9] at the age of twenty did not produce two [pubic] hairs, they[10] must bring evidence that she is twenty years of age, and she [is then confirmed as a] woman who is incapable of procreation; she may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage![11] — Surely in connection with this Mishnah it was stated: R. Samuel b. Isaac said in the name of Rab that this[12] applies only to the case where [other] symptoms[13] of a saris also appeared on him.[14]

Said Raba: This[15] may also be arrived at by deduction. For it was taught, ‘And he [is confirmed as a] saris’,[16] from which this[15] may well be deduced.

And where no symptoms of a saris developed, how long [is one regarded as a minor]?[17] — It was taught at the school of R. Hiyya: Until he has passed middle age.[18]

Whenever people came [with such a case][19] before Raba,[20] he used to tell them, if [the youth was] emaciated, ‘Let him first be fattened’; and if he was stout, he used to tell them, ‘Let him first be made to lose weight’; for these symptoms disappear[21] sometimes as a result of emaciation and sometimes they disappear[21] as a result of stoutness.

CHAPTER XI

MISHNAH. A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY [THE NEAR RELATIVE] OF A WOMAN [WHOM HE HAS] OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED.[22] HE, HOWEVER, WHO OUTRAGED OR

SEDUCED [A RELATIVE] OF HIS MARRIED WIFE, IS GUILTY.[23] A MAN MAY MARRY THE WOMAN WHOM HIS FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED OR THE WOMAN WHOM HIS SON HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED. R. JUDAH FORBIDS [MARRIAGE] WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAS OUTRAGED OR SEDUCED.

GEMARA. Here[24] we learn what the Rabbis taught: ‘A man who has outraged a woman[25] is permitted to marry her daughter; if, however, he married the woman, he is forbidden to marry her daughter’. A contradiction, however, may be pointed out: A man who is suspected of intercourse with a woman is forbidden to marry her mother, her daughter and her sister![26] — This [prohibition[27] is only] Rabbinical.[28]

Would it be stated, however, where a Rabbinical prohibition exists, that A MAN IS PERMITTED TO MARRY even from the outset! — Our Mishnah refers only to [a marriage] after [the suspected woman's] death.[29]

Whence is this ruling deduced? — From what the Rabbis taught: In the case of all those [illicit relationships][30] Scripture used the expression of ‘lying’,[31] but here[32] it made use of the expression of ‘taking’,[33] in order to tell you [that only when intercourse with a woman was in] the manner of ‘taking’[34] did the Torah forbid [marriage with her relatives].[35]

Said R. Papa to Abaye: If that is so,[36] then in respect of one's sister, concerning whom it is written, And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter;[37] is [intercourse] here also forbidden only [if it is in] the manner of ‘taking’,[34] but permitted [if it is in] the manner of ‘lying’![38] — The other replied: The word ‘taking’ is used in the Torah without being defined, [so that a text] to which ‘taking’ is applicable,[39] [signifies] ‘taking’[40] while one to which only ‘lying’ is applicable,[41] [signifies] ‘lying’.[42]

Raba stated: [That a man who] outraged a woman is permitted to marry her daughter, [is deduced] from here: It is written, The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, thou shalt not uncover;[43] from which it follows[44] that the daughter of her[45] son and the daughter of her[45] daughter may be uncovered; but it is also written in Scripture, Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter; thou shalt not take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter![46] How then [are these to be reconciled]? The former[47] refers to cases of outrage and the latter to those of marriage. Might not [the application][48] be reversed? — In respect of forbidden relatives the expression kin[49] is written, and kinship exists only by means of marriage; but no kinship exists by means of outrage.

R. JUDAH FORBIDS MARRIAGE WITH THE WOMAN WHOM ONE'S FATHER HAD OUTRAGED etc. R. Giddal stated in the name of Rab: What is R. Judah's reason? Because it is written, A man shall not take his father's wife, and shall not uncover his father's skirt:[50] the skirt which his father saw[51] he shall not uncover. Whence, however, is it inferred that Scripture speaks of an outraged woman? — From the preceding section of the text where it is written, Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsels father fifty shekels of silver.[52] And the Rabbis?[53] — If one text had occurred in close proximity to the other your exposition would have been justified;[54] now, however, that it does not occur in close proximity, the text is required for [an exposition] like that of R. Anan. For R. Anan stated in the name of Samuel that the Scriptural text[50] speaks of a woman awaiting the levirate decision of his father; and the meaning of[55] his father's skirt[50] is: He[56] shall not uncover the skirt which is designated for his father.[57]

[This prohibition,[58] however], might be deduced from the fact that she is his aunt![59] — [The text[50] was necessary] to make him[60] guilty of the transgression of two negative commandments.[61] [The prohibition,[62] however] might be inferred from the fact [that the widow as a] sister-in-law[63] [is forbidden] to marry any stranger![64] — [The text[50] was necessary] to make him guilty of the transgression of three negative commandments.[65] And if you prefer I might say:[66] After [his father's] death.[67]

(12) The law that he is regarded as a saris,

(13) Described supra 80b.

(14) If, however, these additional symptoms of a saris did not appear, he is as stated in our Mishnah regarded as a minor so long as he has not produced two pubic hairs.

(15) That a boy is not regarded as a saris unless apart from the absence of pubic hairs, he has developed also other symptoms of a saris.

(16) Implying that he had already other symptoms of a saris.

(17) If two pubic hairs did not appear.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 97b

‘My[1] paternal, but not my maternal brother; and he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife’![2] — Rami b. Hama said: Such [a relationship is] not [legally possible] according to the ruling of R. Judah in our Mishnah.[3]

‘He[4] whom I carry on my shoulder is my brother and my son and I am his sister’? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his daughter’.[5]

‘Greetings[4] to you my son; I am the daughter of your sister’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his daughter's daughter.[6]

‘Ye[4] water-drawers,[7] we shall ask you[8] a riddle that defies solution: He whom I carry is my son and I am the daughter of his brother’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with the daughter of his son.[9]

‘Woe,[4] woe, for my brother who is my father; he is my husband and the son of my husband; he is the husband of my mother and I am the daughter of his wife; and he provides no food for his orphan brothers, the children of his daughter’? — This is possible when an idolater cohabited with his mother and begot from her a daughter; then he cohabited with that daughter; and then the grandfather[10] cohabited with her[11] and begot from her sons.[12]

‘I[13] and you are brother and sister,[14] I and your father are brother and sister, and I and your mother are sisters’? — This is possible where an idolater cohabited with his mother and from her begot two daughters, and then he cohabited with one of these and begot from her a son. When the sons's mother's sister[15] carries[16] him[17] she addresses him thus.[18]

‘I[13] and you are the children of sisters,[14] I and your father are the children of brothers, and I and your mother are the children of brothers’? — This indeed is possible also in the case of a lawful marriage; where, for instance, Reuben had two daughters, and Simeon[19] came and married one of them, and then came the son of Levi[19] and married the other.

The son of Simeon can thus[20] address the son of the son of Levi.[21]

MISHNAH. THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECOME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER[22] PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS.[23] BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS,[24] AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS. SO ALSO [IS THE LAW] WHERE THE SONS OF A BONDWOMAN WERE EMANCIPATED TOGETHER WITH HER.

GEMARA. When the sons of the bondwoman Yudan were emancipated. R. Aha b. Jacob permitted them to marry one another's wives.[25] Said Raba to him: But R. Shesheth forbade [such marriages]. The other replied: He forbade, but I allow.

[In respect of proselyte brothers] from the same father and not from the same mother, there is no difference of opinion[26] that this[27] is permitted;[28] [in respect of brothers] from the same mother and not from the same father, there is no difference of opinion[26] that this[27] is forbidden.[29] They differ only [in respect of proselytes whose brotherhood is] both paternal and maternal. He[30] who permits it[27] [does so because children are] ascribed to their father, since they are spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a man’.[31] R. Shesheth, however, [holds that they] are also spoken of as ‘the children of such and such a woman’.[29]

Another reading: R. Aha b. Jacob disputed [the illegality of marriage][27] even in respect of maternal brothers. And what is his reason? — Because a man who has become a proselyte is like a child newly born.[32]

We learned, THE SONS OF A FEMALE PROSELYTE WHO BECAME PROSELYTES TOGETHER WITH HER NEITHER PARTICIPATE IN HALIZAH NOR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE, is not the reason[33] because they are forbidden [to marry a brother's wife]![34] — No; it is because [the widow] is not subject to the law of halizah and levirate marriage.[35] She is permitted, however, to strangers.[36] and the brothers also are permitted[to marry her]. But, surely, it was stated EVEN! Now were you to admit that [the brothers] are forbidden.[37] one could well justify the expression of EVEN: EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS. AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS, [so that the two might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers,[38] they are nevertheless forbidden; if you maintain, however, that they are permitted,[39] what [can be the purport of] EVEN![40] — Even though the birth of both was in holiness, and people might mistake[41] them for Israelites,[42] [the widow] is nevertheless permitted [to marry a stranger].[43]

Others read: Logical reasoning also supports the view that they are permitted,[39] since the expression EVEN was used. For, if you grant that they are permitted[39] it is quite correct to say EVEN: Even though the birth of both was in holiness and people might mistake[41] them for Israelites.[42] they are nevertheless permitted;[43] if, however, you maintain that they are for bidden[44] what [can be the purport of] EVEN![45] — EVEN IF THE ONE WAS NOT CONCEIVED IN HOLINESS BUT WAS BORN IN HOLINESS, AND THE OTHER WAS BOTH CONCEIVED AND BORN IN HOLINESS [so that they might well be regarded] as [the sons of] two mothers,[46] they are nevertheless forbidden.

Come and hear: Twin brothers who were proselytes, and similarly if they were emancipated slaves,[47] may neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage, nor are they guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife.[48] If however, they were not conceived in holiness but were born in holiness, they neither participate in halizah nor contract levirate marriage[49] but are guilty [of a punishable offence][50] for [marrying] a brother's wife.[51] If they were both conceived and born in holiness, they are regarded as Israelites in all respects. At all events, it was stated that they are not ‘guilty [of a punishable offence] for [marrying] a brother's wife’; [from which it follows that] no punishable offence is incurred

(1) This and the following unlikely propositions are merely riddles on the possible complications of consanguinity.

(2) Such a riddle may be put by a daughter who was born as a result of outrage by his father where the son of the man by another wife has subsequently married her mother.

(3) Since, according to R. Judah, marriage is forbidden with a woman one's father had outraged.

(4) V. supra n. 4.

(5) And a son was born from the union. The mother of the child might put such a riddle.

(6) The son born from such a union, since he is the paternal brother of his mother's mother, might be addressed by his mother in the terms of this riddle.

(7) Lit., ‘drawers who draw the bucket’. Men engaged in the irrigation of fields (cf. Rashi and last.); scholars drawing from the fountains of wisdom (cf. Aruk. and Tosaf. s.v. דדלו.

(8) So Aruk. Cur. edd., ‘let it fall among you’.

(9) The son born from this union is the paternal brother of his mother's father.

(10) The idolater's father.

(11) The daughter.

(12) The daughter may describe the idolater as her maternal brother, her natural father and her actual husband. Owing to her cohabitation with his father (the grandfather) he is the son of her husband, while through his cohabitation with her mother he is her mother's husband and she is, of course, the daughter of his wife. The children resulting from the union between her and the grandfather are his (the idolater's) paternal brothers and, of course, the children of his daughter.

(27) Marriage of a brother's wife in the case of proselytes.
(28) It is well known that their father was no Israelite, and that it is for this reason that the marriage was permitted. No one would assume that they were the sons of the same father, since idolaters' wives were known to be faithless, and, consequently, no one would erroneously infer that proper Israelites may also marry their brother's wives.
(29) Their mother being known, they might he assumed to be lawful brothers and, should marriage of a brother's wife he permitted in their case, an erroneous conclusion (v. supra note 6) might he formed.

(41) Lit., ‘exchange’.
(42) And so permit a deceased brother's wife to marry a stranger without previous halizah.
(43) Because (cf. Rashi) it is known that the duty of levirate marriage and halizah is determined by paternal brotherhood which is inapplicable in the case of a father who was an idolater (cf. supra p. 668, n. 6.) [They, themselves, would however be forbidden to marry each other's widows where they were both born in holiness. It is only with reference to the first clause of our Mishnah that R. Aha stated supra that they were permitted (Rashi)].

but that a [Rabbinical] prohibition is ‘nevertheless involved![1] — The law, in fact, is that even a [Rabbinical] prohibition is not involved; only, because it was desired to state in the final clause, ‘but are guilty [of a punishable offence]’, it was stated in the first clause also, ‘they are not guilty [of a punishable offence]’.

Raba stated: With reference to the Rabbinical statement that [legally] an Egyptian has no father,[2] it must not be imagined that this is due to [the Egyptians'] excessive indulgence in carnal gratification, owing to which it is not known [who the father was], but that if this were known[3] it is to be taken into consideration;[4] but [the fact is] that even if this is known it is not taken into consideration. For, surely, in respect of twin brothers, who originated in one drop that divided itself into two, it was nevertheless stated in the final clause,[5] that they ‘neither participate in halizah nor perform levirate marriage’.[6] Thus it may be inferred that the All Merciful declared their children to be legally fatherless,[7] for [so indeed it is also] written, Whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.[8]

Come and hear what R. Jose related: It once happened with the proselyte Niphates[9] that he married the wife of his [deceased][10] maternal brother,[11] and when the case was submitted to the Sages their verdict was that the law of matrimony does not apply to a proselyte. But then, should a proselyte betroth a woman, would also the betrothal be invalid? — Say then rather: The prohibition of a brother's wife does not apply to a proselyte. Now does not [this refer to the case] where his brother[11] had married her while he was a proselyte![12] — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater.[13] But if [betrothal took place] while he was still an idolater, what [need is there] to state it?[14] — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte, hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Come and hear what Ben Yasyan[15] related: When I went to the coastal towns[16] I came across a certain proselyte who had married the wife of his maternal brother. ‘Who, my son’, I said to him, ‘permitted you [this marriage]?’ ‘Behold’, he replied. ‘the woman and her seven children;[17] on this bench sat R. Akiba when he made two statements: "A proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother", and he also stated, "And the word of the Lord came unto Jonah the second time, saying,[18] only a second time did the Shechinah speak to him; a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him."’[19] At any rate, it was stated here that ‘a proselyte may marry the wife of his maternal brother’. Does not [this refer to a case] where his brother married her while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater.[20] What [need then was there] to state [such an obvious law]? — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's betrothal] while he is still an idolater a preventive measure should be enacted lest [erroneous conclusions be drawn in the case] where he is a proselyte. hence we were taught [that no such measure was enacted].

Is he,[21] however, believed? Surely R. Abba stated in the name of R. Huna in the name of Rab: Wherever a scholar gives directions[22] on a point of law and such a point comes up for a practical decision, he is obeyed if he made the statement[23] before the event;[24] but if it was not so made, he is not obeyed![25] — If you wish I might say: The incident occurred after he made his statement. If you prefer, I might say: Because he stated, ‘Behold the woman and her seven children’.[26] And if you prefer I might say: Here it is different[27] because with it he related another incident.[28]

The Master said, ‘And the word of the Lord came to Jonah a second time, saying,[29] only a second time did the Shechinah speak unto him, a third time the Shechinah did not speak to him’. But surely it is written in Scripture, He restored the border of Israel from the entrance of Hamath unto the sea of the Arabah, according to the word of the Lord, which He spoke by the hand of His servant Jonah the son of Amittai, the prophet![30] — Rabina replied: He[31] referred to the affairs of Nineveh.

R. Nahman b. Isaac replied, It is this that was meant:[32] According to the word of the Lord . . . which He spoke by the hand of his servant, the prophet,[33] as his intention towards Nineveh was turned from evil to good, so was his intention towards Israel, in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, turned from evil to good.

Come and hear: A proselyte who was born in holiness[34] but was not conceived in holiness[35] has [legally] maternal consanguinity but no paternal consanguinity. For instance:[36] If he married his maternal sister,[37] he must divorce her;[38] if his paternal one, he may retain her.[39] His father's maternal sister he must divorce;[40] his paternal one he may retain. His mother's maternal sister he must divorce. As to her paternal sister, R. Meir said: He must divorce her,[1] and the Sages said: He may retain her;[2] R. Meir maintaining that any woman forbidden on account of maternal consanguinity must be divorced, but if on account of paternal consanguinity he may retain her. He is also permitted [to marry] his brother's wife,[3] and the wife of his father's brother. All other forbidden relatives are also permitted to him, including his father's wife. If [a proselyte][4] married a woman and her daughter[5] she may[6] retain[7] one, but must release the other.[8] In the first instance he may not marry[7] her.[9] If his wife died, he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-in-law.[10] At all events, it was here stated that he is ‘permitted [to marry] his brother's wife’; does not [this apply to a woman] whom his brother had married while he was a proselyte! — No; where he married her while he was still an idolater. What [need was there] to state it?[11] — It might have been assumed that [in the case of a brother's marriage] while he was still an idolater a preventive measure[12] should be enacted to preclude [the same thing being done] where he is already a proselyte, hence were we taught [that in such a case a brother's wife was permitted].

The Master stated, ‘If [a proselyte] married a woman and her daughter, he may retain one but must release the other; in the first instance he may not marry her’. Now, if he must even release her, is there any need [to speak of a prohibition to marry her] from the outset?[13] — It refers to a previous clause,[14] and the meaning is this: That [woman]. concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that he[15] may retain her,[16] may nevertheless not be married by him from the outset.

‘If his wife died he is permitted to marry his mother-in-law. Another opinion is that he is forbidden to marry his mother-inlaw’. One is in agreement with R. Ishmael and the other is in agreement with R. Akiba. He who forbade the marriage agrees with R. Ishmael who stated: A man's mother-in-law after [his wife's] death retains the former prohibitions;[17] and in respect of a proselyte a preventive measure was enacted.[18] He, however, who permits the marriage follows R. Akiba who stated that the prohibition [to marry] one's mother-in-law is weakened after [one's wife's] death;[19] and, consequently, no preventive measure has been enacted by the Rabbis in respect of a proselyte.

MISHNAH. IF THE [MALE] CHILDREN OF FIVE WOMEN WERE MIXED UP[20] AND, WHEN THESE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN GREW UP, THEY TOOK WIVES AND THEN DIED, FOUR[21] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OF THE WIDOWS][22] AND ONE[23] CONTRACTS WITH HER THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[24] [THEN] HE[25] AND THREE [BROTHERS][21] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OTHER OF THE WIDOWS]. AND ONE[26] CONTRACTS WITH HER[27] THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[28] THUS[29] EVERY ONE [OF THE WIDOWS] PERFORMS HALIZAH FOUR TIMES AND CONTRACTS THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE ONCE.

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place[30] first] and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one[31] might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.[32]

What [was the object of the statement], HE AND THREE [BROTHERS] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH FROM ONE [OTHER OF THE WIDOWS]?[33] — That it be not suggested that one brother only should contract levirate marriage with all of them. Rather let every brother contract levirate marriage with only one [of the widows], when it is possible his own [sister-in-law] might happen to fall to his lot.

Our Rabbis taught:[34] ‘If some of them[35] were brothers[36] and some were no brothers,[36] the brothers submit to halizah while those who are no brothers contract the levirate marriage.’ What does this exactly mean? — R. Safra replied. It is this that is meant: If some of them[35] were paternal brothers[36] and some were [also] maternal brothers,[37] the maternal brothers submit to halizah[38] and the paternal brothers may [also] contract levirate marriage.[39] ‘If some of them[40] were priests and some were non-priests, the priests submit to halizah[41] and those who are non-priests may [also] contract levirate marriage. If some of them[42] were priests and some maternal brothers, the former as well as the latter submit to halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.’[43]

(1) The reason is given presently.

(2) No preventive measure being necessary in such a case which is quite unlike that of a maternal sister.
(3) Cur. edd. insert ‘from his mother’ which is to be deleted with Bah a.l. The proselyte is, in fact, permitted to marry the wife of his paternal brother as well as the wife of his maternal brother if the latter was born before the conversion. A preventive measure (cf. supra p. 673, n. 13) was not instituted in the case of a relationship which is not due to consanguinity but is dependent on betrothal.
(4) Before his conversion. One born ‘in holiness’ is forbidden to marry a mother and her daughter.
(5) Who were also converted.
(6) After his conversion.
(7) Lit., ‘bring in’, sc. to his home.
(8) This is a preventive measure against marriage with an Israelitish mother and daughter.
(9) This sentence is explained infra.
(10) V. Sanh., Sonc. ed., p. 394. notes.
(11) The law being so obvious.
(12) Forbidding his wife to his brother.
(13) Why, then, was the superfluous clause, ‘In the first instance he may not marry her’, inserted.
(14) Lit., ‘there he stands’.
(15) The proselyte.
(16) E.g., his paternal sister.
(17) V. supra 94b, Sanh. 76b.
(18) To prevent such a marriage in the case of an Israelite.
(19) It is no longer punishable by the severe penalty of burning. v. supra 94b.
(20) And each woman had also another son who was not involved in the confusion.
(21) Of the five brothers who were not mixed up with these. V. supra note 6.
(22) Since everyone of them might be her brother-in-law.
(23) Of the five brothers (v. supra n. 7) i.e., the fifth who had not submitted to halizah.
(24) As four brothers have, by their halizah, severed their levirate bond with the widow mentioned, the fifth may marry her either as her brother-in-law (in case it was his brother who was her husband) or as a stranger (if her husband was a brother of one of the four who had now set her free).
(25) The brother who contracted the levirate marriage.
(26) Of the brothers (v. supra n. 7) who had submitted to halizah from the first widow.
(27) The second widow.
(28) For reasons similar to those explained supra n. 10.
(29) Lit., ‘it is found’. The same procedure being followed in respect of all the five widows.
(30) In our Mishnah, in respect of every widow.
(31) Should a brother happen to marry the widow who was not the wife of his deceased brother.
(32) Lit., ‘for he met a sister-in-law for the market’.
(33) The same brother who contracted the first levirate marriage is, surely, entitled to contract similar marriages with all the widows, as soon as the other four brothers had submitted to their halizah.
(34) So Bah. Cur. edd. omit.
(35) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
(36) Of those who were mixed up and are now dead.
(37) I.e., paternal brother to one and maternal brother to another.
(38) Thereby setting free the widows of their paternal brothers. They may not contract levirate marriage even after the widows had performed halizah with all the other brothers, since, should one of them happen to marry the widow of his maternal brother, he would thereby incur the penalty of kareth.
(39) With any of the widow's, after each of the other brothers had submitted to her halizah.
(40) of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
(41) The levirate marriage is forbidden to them because any one of them might happen to marry the widow who was not a sister-in-law to him but to one of the other brothers. and who, by the halizah with her brother-in-law, has become a haluzah whom a priest is forbidden to marry.
(42) Of the brothers who were not involved in the confusion.
(43) Tosef. Yeb. XII. Cf. supra p. 676. n. 9 (re maternal brothers) and supra n. 1 (re priests).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 99a

Our Rabbis taught: A man must sometimes submit to halizah from his mother[1] owing to an uncertainty; from his sister, owing to an uncertainty: and from his daughter, owing to an uncertainty'. For instance?[2] If his mother and another woman had two male children, and then gave birth to two male children[3] in a hiding place;[4] and a son[5] of the one mother[6] married the mother[7] of the other son while the son[8] of the other mother[6] married the mother of the first, and both[9] died without issue, the one[10] must submit to halizah from both women[11] and the other[10] must submit to halizah from both women.[11] Thus it follows that each submits to halizah from his mother owing to an uncertainty. 'From his sister. owing to an uncertainty'; for instance?[2] When his mother and another woman gave birth to two female children[12] In a hiding place,[13] and their brothers[14] who were not from the same mother[15] married them[16] and died without issue, he[17] must submit to halizah from both widows.[18] Thus it follows that a man submits to halizah from his sister owing to an uncertainty. 'From his daughter, owing to an uncertainty'; for instance?[19] When his wife and another woman gave birth to two female children[20] in a hiding place,[21] and their[22] [husbands'] brothers[23] married them[16] and died without issue, the one [father][24] submits to halizah from his daughter[25] owing to the uncertainty and the other [father][24] submits to halizah from his daughter[25] owing to the uncertainty.[26]

It was taught: R. Meir said, A husband and wife may sometimes produce five different castes.[27] How? If an Israelite bought a bondman and a bondwoman in the market, and these had two sons[28] one of whom became a proselyte, the result is that one is a proselyte and the other is an idolater.[29] If [subsequently] he made them[30] perform the prescribed immersion for the purpose of slavery and then they cohabited with one another [and bore a son], behold here we have a proselyte, an idolater and a slave.[31] If he subsequently emancipated the bondwoman[32] and the slave cohabited with her [and had another son], behold here[33] we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave and a bastard.[34] If he then emancipated both of them[30] and made them marry one another, behold here[35] we have a proselyte, an idolater, a slave, a bastard and an Israelite.[36] What does this teach us? — That when an idolater or a slave cohabits with an Israelitish woman their child is a bastard.[37]

Our Rabbis taught: Sometimes a man sells his father to enable his mother to collect her kethubah. How? If an Israelite bought in the market a bondman and a bondwoman who had a son,[38] and having emancipated the bondwoman he married her and bequeathed, in writing, all his estate to her son, the result is that this son[39] sells his father[40] in order to enable his mother[41] to collect her kethubah.[42] What does this teach us? — That all this [Baraitha[43] represents the views of] R. Meir. and that a slave [is regarded as] movable property, such property being mortgaged for a kethubah![44]

And if you prefer I might say. It is this that we were taught: A slave [is on the same footing as] real estate.[45]

MISHNAH. IF THE CHILD OF A WOMAN WAS INTERCHANGED WITH THE CHILD OF HER DAUGHTER-IN-LAW. AND WHEN THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN GREW UP THEY TOOK WIVES AND THEN DIED,[46] THE [OTHER] SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW[47] SUBMIT TO HALIZAH[48] BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[49] FOR [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] IT IS UNCERTAIN WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER[50] OF THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER.[51] THE [OTHER] SONS OF THE GRANDMOTHER[52] EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH[53] OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,[54] SINCE [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] THE ONLY DOUBT IS WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER[55] OR THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER'S SON.[55] IF THE UNTAINTED SONS[56] DIED,[57] THEN THE INTERCHANGED SONS SUBMIT [IN RESPECT OF THE WIDOWS] OF

THE SONS OF THE GRANDMOTHER TO HALIZAH BUT MUST NOT CONTRACT[54] THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. SINCE [IN THE CASE OF EACH WIDOW AND BROTHER] IT IS UNCERTAIN WHETHER SHE IS THE WIFE OF HIS BROTHER[55] OR THE WIFE OF HIS FATHER'S BROTHER;[58] [WHILE IN RESPECT OF THE WIDOWS] OF THE SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN- LAW ONE[59] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH[60] AND THE OTHER[59] [MAY ALSO] CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[61]

IF THE CHILD OF A PRIEST'S WIFE WAS INTERCHANGED WITH THE CHILD OF HER BONDWOMAN, BEHOLD BOTH MAY EAT TERUMAH[62] AND RECEIVE ONE SHARE AT THE THRESHINGFLOOR[63]

(61) For if the widow was his brother's wife he is obviously entitled to marry her, and if she was his brother's son's wife he may also marry her since her deceased husband's brother had already submitted to her halizah and had thereby set her free to marry even a stranger.
(62) A priest's slave also being allowed to eat terumah.
(63) This is explained infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 99b

THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD[1] NOR MAY THEY MARRY ANY WOMEN WHETHER THESE ARE ELIGIBLE [FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST][2] OR INELIGIBLE.[3] IF WHEN THEY[4] GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN EMANCIPATED ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY MARRY WOMEN WHO ARE ELIGIBLE FOR MARRIAGE WITH A PRIEST[5] AND THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR THE DEAD.[6] IF, HOWEVER, THEY DEFILED THEMSELVES, THE PENALTY OF FORTY STRIPES[7] IS NOT INFLICTED UPON THEM.[8] THEY MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,[9] BUT IF THEY DID EAT THEY NEED NOT PAY COMPENSATION EITHER FOR THE PRINCIPAL OR [THE ADDITIONAL] FIFTH.[10] THEY ARE NOT TO RECEIVE A SHARE[11] AT THE THRESHING-FLOOR, BUT THEY MAY SELL [THEIR OWN] TERUMAH[12] AND THE PROCEEDS ARE THEIRS.[13] THEY RECEIVE NO SHARE IN THE CONSECRATED THINGS OF THE TEMPLE,[14] AND NO CONSECRATED THINGS[15] ARE GIVEN TO THEM. BUT THEY ARE NOT DEPRIVED OF THEIR OWN.[13] THEY ARE EXEMPT FROM [GIVING TO ANY PRIEST] THE SHOULDER, THE CHEEKS AND THE MAW,[16] WHILE THE FIRSTLING OF EITHER OF THEM MUST REMAIN IN THE PASTURE[13] UNTIL IT CONTRACTS A BLEMISH.[17] THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO PRIESTS AND THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO ISRAELITES ARE BOTH IMPOSED UPON THEM.[18]

GEMARA. IF THE UNTAINTED SONS DIED etc.; are, then, the others,[19] because they were mixed up, tainted! — R. Papa replied: Read, ‘If those [whose parentage was] certain died’.

[IN RESPECT, HOWEVER, OF THE WIDOWS] OF THE SONS OF THE DAUGHTER-IN-LAW ONE SUBMITS TO HALIZAH etc. Only halizah [must take place first] and the levirate marriage afterwards. The levirate marriage, however, must not take place first; since thereby one might infringe the prohibition against a sister-in-law's marriage with a stranger.[20]

[IF THE CHILD OF] A PRIEST'S WIFE WAS INTERCHANGED etc. Obviously only ONE SHARE![21] — Read ‘ONE SHARE together’.[22] Here we learn [a thing] which is in agreement with him who ruled that no share of terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him.[23] For it was taught: No share in terumah is given to a slave unless his master is with him; so R. Judah. R. Jose, however, ruled: The slave[24] may claim, ‘If I am a priest, give me for my own sake; and if I am a priest's slave, give me for the sake of my master’. In the place of R. Judah,[men of doubtful status] were raised to the status of priesthood[25] [on the evidence that they received a share] of terumah.[26] In the place of R. Jose, however, no one was raised to the status of priesthood [on the evidence of having received a share] of terumah.[27]

It was taught: R. Eleazar b. Zadok said, ‘During the whole of my lifetime I have given evidence but once, and through my statement they raised a slave to the priesthood’. ‘They raised’? Is [such an error] conceivable! If through the beasts of the righteous the Holy One, blessed be He, does not cause an offence to be committed, how much less through the righteous themselves! — Rather, read. ‘They desired to raise a slave to the priesthood, through my statement’. He witnessed [the occurrence][28] in the place of R. Jose. but went and tendered his evidence in the place of R. Judah.[29]

Our Rabbis taught: Ten [classes of people] must not be given a share of terumah at the threshing-floors. They are the following: The deaf,[30] the imbecile, the minor, the tumtum,[31] the hermaphrodite the slave, the woman,[32] the uncircumcised,[33] the levitically unclean, and he who married a woman who is unsuitable for him.[34] In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception[35] of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him.[36] Now, one can well understand [the prohibition[37] in respect of] the deaf, the imbecile and the minor, since they lack intelligence;[38] [in respect of] the tumtum and the hermaphrodite also,[39]

(1) Since either of them might be assumed to be the priest (cf. Lev. XXI, 1).

(2) Since such women are forbidden to the slave.

(3) A bondswoman, for instance, who is forbidden to the priest.

(4) The son of the priest and the slave who were interchanged.

(5) Any freed man may marry such a woman.

(6) V. p. 680, n. 13.

(7) ‘Forty’ is a round number for the penalty of flogging which in fact consisted of thirty-nine stripes only.

(8) Because each of them can plead that he is not the priest.

(9) On account of the slave who, being now a freed man, is, like any Israelite, forbidden to eat terumah.

(10) Which an Israelite must pay (cf. Lev. XXII, 14). Each one of them can plead that he is the priest.

(11) In terumah. Cf supra n. 5’

(12) Of their own produce.

(13) No priest can claim it from either of them since each can reply that it is he who is the priest.

(14) Not even a share in the skins of the sacrifices.

(15) Firstlings, for instance, or herem (v. Glos.). Cf. Num. XVIII, 14f.

(16) Priestly gifts prescribed in Deut. XVIII, 3.

(17) When it is unfit for the altar, and may be eaten by its owner. The reason why an Israelite owner may not eat of the flesh of his firstling, even after it has contracted a blemish, is not because of its sanctity but because its consumption by a non-priest is regarded as robbing the priests. No such consideration arises in a case where the owner can claim that he himself is a priest. (Cf. supra note 9).

(18) MS.M. and cur. edd. infra 100a. The reading here is ‘upon him’.

(19) Lit., ‘those’.

(20) Lit., ‘because he met a sister-in-law for the market’.

(21) Since no more than one of them can lay claim to the priesthood. Why then was the obvious stated?

(22) Only when the two come together do they receive one share. One without the other receives nothing. The reason is given infra.

(23) As one of the two is obviously a slave neither of them can claim a share unless the other is with him.

(24) In circumstances like those spoken of in our Mishnah, where it is uncertain whether he is a slave or a priest.

(25) Lit., ‘genealogical (priestly) records’, enabling them to marry women of unblemished and priestly descent. V. Keth,, Sonc. ed., p. 233, n. 4.

(26) Hence no terumah must be given to a slave in the absence of his master.

(27) Tosef. Yeb. Xli, Keth. 28b.

(28) That a slave received a share of terumah.

(29) Cf. Keth., Sonc., ed., p. 156. notes.

(30) Deaf-mute.

(31) V. Glos.

(32) A priest's wife.

(33) A priest whose brothers died as a result of their circumcision, and who, owing to the fatal effect of such an operation on members of his family, is himself exempt from circumcision.

(34) I.e., one whom a priest is forbidden to marry.

(35) The uncircumcised priest is not excluded since his wives and slaves, though not he himself, are permitted to eat terumah.

(36) Tosef. Ter. X end.

(37) To give him a share of terumah at the threshing-floor.

(38) It would be a mark of disrespect were the sacred terumah to be entrusted to the care of persons who are mentally defective, or undeveloped, or in any other way below the normal standard of intellectual or physical fitness.

(39) One can understand the reason for the prohibition.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 100a

since either of them is a peculiar creature; the slave, too, because owing to the terumah[1] he might be raised to the priesthood;[2] the uncircumcised and the unclean also, owing to their repulsiveness; and the priest who married a woman unsuitable for him, as a penalty. But why should not a woman [be given a share of terumah]? — On this question R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua differ. One explains: Owing [to possible abuse by] a divorced woman;[3] and the other explains: Owing to [the necessity of avoiding] privacy between the sexes.[4] What is the practical difference between them? — The practical difference between them is the case of a threshing-floor that is near a town but is unfrequented by people,[5] or one that is distant [from a town] but frequented by people.[6]

‘In the case of all these, however, [terumah] may be sent to their houses, with the exception of the one who is levitically unclean and one who married a woman who is unsuitable for him’. [May terumah], then, be sent to the uncircumcised?[7] What is the reason! [Is it] because he is a victim of circumstances? The man who is levitically unclean is also a victim of circumstances![8] — The force of circumstances in the former case is great;[9] in the latter, the force is not so great.[10]

Our Rabbis taught: Neither to a slave nor to a woman may a share in terumah be given at the threshing-floors. In places, however, where a share is given. It is to be given to the woman first, and she is immediately dismissed. What can this mean?[11] — It is this that was meant: The[12] poor mans tithe which is distributed at home[13] is to be given to the woman first.[14] What is the reason? — That the degradation [of the woman may be avoided].[15]

Raba said: Formerly, when a man and a woman[16] came before me for a legal decision, I used to dispose of the man's lawsuit first, because I thought a man is subject to the fulfilment of all the commandments;[17] since, however, I heard this,[18] I dispose of a woman's lawsuit first. Why? In order [to save her from] degradation.[19]

IF WHEN THEY GREW UP, THE INTERCHANGED CHILDREN etc. [It states] THEY EMANCIPATED. [Implying] only[20] if they wished, but if they did not wish they need not [emancipate one another]! But why? Neither of them could marry either a bondwoman[21] or a free woman![22] Raba replied: Read: Pressure is brought to bear upon them so that they emancipate one another.

THE RESTRICTIONS . . . ARE IMPOSED UPON THEM. In what respect?[23] — R. Papa replied: In respect of their meal-offering. A handful[24] must be taken from it,[25] as of a meal-offering of an Israelite, but it may not be eaten,[26] as is the case with a meal-offering of the priests.[27] But how [is one to proceed]? The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are also offered up separately. But [surely] there is to be applied here the Scriptural deduction that any offering a portion of which had been put on the fire of the altar[28] is subject to the prohibition you shall not burn![29] — R. Judah son of R. Simeon b. Pazzi replied: They are burned as wood,[30] in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar. For it was taught: R. Eleazar said, For it sweet savour[31] you may not offer them;[32] you may offer them, however, as mere[30] wood.[33] This is satisfactory according to R. Eleazar, what, however, can be said according to the Rabbis?[34] — One proceeds in accordance with a ruling of R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon. For it was taught: R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon said: The handful is offered up separately and the remnants are scattered over the enclosure of the sacrificial ashes.[35] And even the Rabbis differ from R. Eleazar only in respect of a priestly sinner's meal-offering which is suitable for offering up;[36] but here,[37] even the Rabbis agree.[38]

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION[39] FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH [TO A SON], AND IT IS UNKNOWN WHETHER IT IS A NINE-MONTHS CHILD BY THE FIRST HUSBAND OR A SEVEN-MONTHS CHILD BY THE SECOND, IF SHE HAD OTHER SONS BY THE FIRST HUSBAND AND OTHER SONS BY THE SECOND, THESE MUST SUBMIT TO HALIZAH[40] BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT WITH HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[41] AND HE, IN RESPECT OF THEIR WIDOWS,[42] LIKEWISE, SUBMITS TO HALIZAH[43] BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[44]

(1) Which he receives.

(2) As was explained supra.

(3) Who might, after her divorce when she is no more permitted to eat terumah. continue to collect it.

(4) Yihud, v. Glos. Cf. supra 86a.

(5) No preventive measure against (a) abuse by a divorced woman is here necessary, since the proximity of the threshing-floor to the town enables its owner to keep in touch with social events in the town. The precautions, however, against (b) privacy, owing to the loneliness of the floor, cannot be neglected.

(6) Cf. supra note 1 mutatis mutandis; (b) has to, but (a) need not be disregarded.

(7) Since he is not included in the exceptions. Cf. supra p. 683, n. 8.

(8) If the latter was not excluded why then was the former?

(9) The uncircumcised cannot help the infirmity of the constitution of the members of his family. It is not through any fault of his that he must remain uncircumcised (v. supra p. 683, n. 6).

(10) By the exercise of due care uncleanness might be avoided.

(11) In the first sentence it was stated that a woman receives no share; and in the following it is tacitly assumed that in certain places she does receive a share!

(12) C;f. Bah. Cur. edd. read, ‘Where the poor man's tithe is distributed’.

(13) In town.
(14) Though privacy between the sexes need not be apprehended there.
(15) It is degrading for a woman to have to wait her turn in a crowd of men.
(16) With different law suits.
(17) While a woman is exempt from certain commandments. Hence it is the man that should receive precedence.
(18) The reason why a woman should be given her share of the poor man's tithe first.
(19) Cf. supra p. 684. n. 11.
(20) Lit., ‘yes’.
(21) Owing to the priest.
(22) Since one of them is a slave. How, then, could they ever fulfil the religious duty of propagation which is incumbent upon all?
(23) Lit., for what law’.
(24) V. Lev. II, 2.
(25) Since he might be the Israelite.
(26) As he might also be the priest.
(27) V. Lev. VI, 16.
(28) As was the case here where the handful was offered up.
(29) Lev. II. Once the prescribed portion of an offering had been duly offered up on the altar the remnants of that offering may no longer be burned in the altar. Cf. Zeb 77a. How then could the remnants of the meal-offering be offered up when a portion of the offering (the handful) is also offered up.
(30) Not as an offering.

(32) V. supra note 13.
(33) Yoma 47b, Sot. 23a, Zeb. 76b, Men. 106b.
(34) Who do not permit the offering of the remnants on the altar even as wood.
(35) בית הדשן Sot. 23a, Men. 74a. A place near the altar, where a certain portion of the ashes of the altar was deposited.
(36) In its entirety, as is the case with a priest's voluntary meal-offering.
(37) Where there is the possibility that it is not the offering of a priest at all.
(38) That the remnants are to be scattered in the enclosure of the ashes. V. Sot., Sonc ed., p. 116, notes.
(39) By her hushand's death or by divorce.
(40) From the widow of the son whose father is unknown, if he died childless.
(41) Since it is possible that they are only the maternal brothers of the deceased, whose widow is forbidden to them under the penalty of kareth.
(42) Lit., ‘to them’.
(43) From their widows, if they died without issue.
(44) Cf. supra n. 8 mutatis mutandis.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 100b

IF HE[1] HAD BROTHERS BY THE FIRST[2] AND ALSO BROTHERS BY THE SECOND,[2] BUT NOT BY THE SAME MOTHER, HE[1] MAY EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE,[3] BUT AS FOR THEM, ONE[4] SUBMITS TO HALIZAH[5] AND THE OTHER MAY [THEN] CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[6]

IF ONE OF [THE TWO HUSBANDS] WAS AN ISRAELITE AND THE OTHER A PRIEST, HE[7] MAY ONLY MARRY A WOMAN WHO IS ELIGIBLE TO MARRY A PRIEST.[8] HE[7] MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THE DEAD,[8] BUT IF HE DID DEFILE HIMSELF HE DOES NOT SUFFER THE PENALTY OF FORTY STRIPES.[9] HE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,[9] BUT IF HE DID EAT HE NEED NOT PAY COMPENSATION EITHER FOR THE PRINCIPAL OR [FOR THE ADDITIONAL] FIFTH.[10] HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE[11] AT THE THRESHING-FLOOR, BUT HE MAY SELL [HIS OWN] TERUMAH[12] AND THE PROCEEDS

ARE HIS.[13] HE RECEIVES NO SHARE IN THE CONSECRATED THINGS OF THE TEMPLE,[14] NO CONSECRATED THINGS ARE GIVEN TO HIM,[15] BUT HE IS NOT DEPRIVED OF HIS OWN.[13] HE IS EXEMPT FROM [GIVING TO ANY PRIEST] THE SHOULDER, THE CHEEKS AND THE MAW,[16] WHILE HIS FIRSTLING MUST REMAIN IN THE PASTURE[17] UNTIL IT CONTRACTS A BLEMISH.[18] THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO PRIESTS AND THE RESTRICTIONS RELATING TO ISRAELITES ARE IMPOSED UPON HIM.

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS, HE[7] MUST MOURN AS ONAN[19] FOR THEM[20] AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM[21] FOR HIM,[22] BUT HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM,[23] NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM.[23] HE MAY NOT INHERIT FROM THEM,[24] BUT THEY MAY INHERIT FROM HIM.[25] HE IS EXONERATED[26] IF HE STRIKES OR CURSES[27] THE ONE OR THE OTHER. HE GOES UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR[28] OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER,[29] BUT HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE [IN THE OFFERINGS].[30] IF, HOWEVER BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR,[28] HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.[31]

GEMARA. Only the halizah [must take place first][32] and the levirate marriage afterwards; the levirate marriage, however, must not take place first, since, thereby, one[33] might infringe the prohibition against the marriage of a sister-in-law with a stranger.[34]

Samuel said: If ten priests stood together and one of them separated [from the company] and cohabited [with a feme sole]. the child [that may result from the union][35] is a shethuki.[28] In what [respect is he] a shethuki? If it be suggested that he is silenced[36] [when he claims a share] of his father's estate, [is not this, it may be retorted] self-evident? Do we know who is his father! — Rather,[37] he is silenced [if he claims any] of the rights of priesthood.[38] What is the reason? — Scripture stated, And it shall be unto him, and to his seed after him,[39] it is, therefore, required that ‘his seed’ shall be traced to ‘him’,[40] but this is not the case here.[41]

R. Papa demurred: If that is so in the case of Abraham where it is written, To be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee,[42] what does the All Merciful exhort him thereby![43] — It is this that he said to him: Marry not an idolatress or a bondwoman so that your seed shall not be ascribed to her.[44]

An objection was raised: The first[45] is fit to be a High Priest.[46] But, surely, it is required that a priest's child shall be traced to his father,[47] which is not the case here![48] — [The requirement that] a priest's child shall be traced to his father[49] is a Rabbinical provision. while the Scriptural text is a mere prop;[50] and it is only in respect of prostitution that the Rabbis have made their preventive measure; in respect of marriage, however, no such measure was enacted by them. But did the Rabbis introduce such a preventive measure in the case of prostitution? Surely we learned: IF A WOMAN DID NOT WAIT THREE MONTHS AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND, AND MARRIED AGAIN AND GAVE BIRTH [TO A SON]; now, what is meant by AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND? If it be suggested: AFTER the death OF HER HUSBAND, read the final clause: HE MUST MOURN AS ONAN FOR THEM AND THEY MUST MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM; one can well understand [the circumstances in which] HE MOURNS AS ONAN FOR THEM, such mourning being possible [even in the case] of marriage with the second [husband, on the occasion of the] collecting of the bones of the first.[51] But how is it possible that they MOURN AS ONENIM FOR HIM, when the first husband is dead![52] If, however, [it be suggested that our Mishnah speaks] of a divorced woman, and that the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND is AFTER the divorce OF HER HUSBAND, then read the final clause: HE MAY NOT DEFILE HIMSELF FOR THEM, NOR MAY THEY DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM; now, one can understand that THEY MAY NOT DEFILE THEMSELVES FOR HIM as a restrictive measure, [since in respect of every one of them it may be assumed that] he is possibly not his son; but why MAY HE NOT DEFlle HIMSELF FOR THEM?

Granted that he must not defile himself for the second;[53] for the first, however, he should be allowed to defile himself in any case! For if he is his son, then he may justly defile himself for him; and if he is the son of the second[54] he may legitimately defile himself for him since he is a halal![55] Consequently [our Mishnah must refer to a case] of prostitution,[56] and the meaning of AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] HER HUSBAND must be, AFTER [SEPARATION FROM] THE MAN WHO IRREGULARLY COHABITED WITH HER;[57] and yet it was stated in the final clause, HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR OF THE ONE AS WELL AS OF THE OTHER. This, then, presents an objection against the ruling of Samuel![58] — R. Shemaia replied: [Our Mishnah refers] to a minor who made a declaration of refusal.[59] But is a minor[60] capable of propagation? Surely R. Bebai recited before R. Nahman: Three categories of women may use an absorbent in their marital intercourse:[61] A minor, an expectant mother, and a nursing wife. The minor,[62] because she[63] might become pregnant and, as a result, she might die. An expectant mother,[62] because she[63] might cause her foetus to degenerate into a sandal.[64] A nursing wife,[62] because she[63] might have to wean her child [prematurely][65] and this would result in his death. And what is the age of such a minor?[66] From the age of eleven years and one day until the age of twelve years and one day. One who is under,[67] or over this age[68] must carry on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. This is the opinion of R. Meir. The Sages, however, said: The one as well as the other carries on her marital intercourse in the usual manner. and mercy will be vouchsafed from heaven,[69] for it is said in the Scriptures, The Lord preserveth the simple![70] — [The case of our Mishnah] is possible with a mistaken betrothal,[71] and on the basis of a ruling of Rab Judah in the name of Samuel. For Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel in the name of R. Ishmael: And she be not seized[72] [only then[73] is she] forbidden;[74] if, however, she was seized[75] she is permitted;[74] there is, however, another kind of woman who is permitted[74] even if she was not seized.[76] And who is she? — A woman whose betrothal was a mistaken one,[77] who may, even if her son sits riding on her shoulder, make a declaration of refusal [against her husband] and go away.[78]

(1) The son whose father is unknown.

(2) Husband of his mother.

(3) If there were no other surviving brothers. The widow is either his sister-in-law with whom levirate marriage is lawful, or a stranger with whom he may contract an ordinary marriage.

(4) Either a son of the first, or a son of the second husband.

(5) From the widow of the son whose father is unknown, if he died childless.

(6) Since the widow is either his sister-in-law and the levirate marriage with her is lawful, or she is a stranger and permitted to marry him because her brother-in-law had submitted to her halizah.

(49) To be eligible for the rights of priesthood.

(50) Not actual proof.

(51) For the purpose of re-burial. Whenever such collecting takes place, even many years after death, the son must on that day observe the laws relating to an onan (cf. Pes. 91b). Such mourning, therefore, is possible even after the marriage of his mother with her second husband.

(52) Having died, according to the present assumption, before the birth of the son.

(53) Owing to the possibility that he is the son of the first and, consequently, a legitimate priest who is forbidden to defile himself for the corpses of strangers.

(54) Who married his mother while she was a divorced woman.

(55) V. Glos. The child of a union between a priest and a divorced woman is disqualified for the priesthood and may defile himself for the dead.

(56) Where neither of the men had contracted legal marriage with her. Her son, since she has the status of feme sole, has also the status of a legitimate priest who must observe the laws of priestly sanctity, and must not, therefore, defile himself for either of the men. Death and divorce being excluded as factors in the separation of the woman from the first man, it is also possible that the son should he in the position of onan for them and that they should he onenim for him.

(57) בועלה. The consonants בעלה are the same as those of ‘her husband’, בעלה.

(58) Who disqualified such a child for the priesthood. Cf. supra p. 688, n. 15.

(59) V. Glos. s.v. mi'un. Such a minor requires no letter of divorce. It is, therefore, possible for her to be separated from her first husband and yet remain permitted to marry a priest. Her son would consequently be subject to the restrictions spoken of in our Mishnah. Cf. supra p. 690. n. 6.

(70) Ps. CXVI, 6, those who are incapable of preserving themselves. Tosef. Nid. II. supra 12b q. v. notes. Now, since a minor may not make a declaration of refusal unless she is under the age of twelve years and one day, and since a minor under that age either dies if she conceives, or does not conceive at all if she is younger, how could our Mishnah speak of a minor who made a declaration of refusal and who also had a child?
(71) When a condition which remained unfulfilled was attached to it. In such a case, the woman may leave her husband without a letter of divorce and is, consequently, permitted to marry a priest. Her son who is, therefore, a legitimate priest may well be subject to the restrictions enumerated in our Mishnah. Cf. supra p. 690. n. 6.
(72) Num. V. 13. (E.V., Neither she be taken in the act), referring to a woman who was defiled secretly and there were no witnesses against her.
(73) Only if she was not seized, i.e., she did not act under compulsion but willingly. Cf. supra 56b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 101a

IF THE TWO [HUSBANDS] WERE PRIESTS etc. Our Rabbis taught: If he[1] struck one[2] and then struck the other, or if he cursed one[2] and then cursed the other, or cursed them both simultaneously or struck them both simultaneously, he is guilty.[3] R. Judah. however, said: If[4] simultaneously, he is guilty;[5] if[4] successively he is exonerated.[6] But, surely, it was taught: R. Judah stated that he[7] is exonerated [even if his offences were] simultaneous! — Two Tannaim differ as to what was the opinion of R. Judah.

What is the reason of him who exonerated?[8] R. Hanina replied: 'Blessing'[9] is spoken of in Scripture [in respect of parents] on earth[10] and blessing[9] is spoken of [in respect of God] above.[11] As there is no association above so must there be no association below;[12] and striking has been compared to cursing.[13]

HE MAY GO UP [TO SERVE] IN THE MISHMAR etc. Since, however, HE DOES NOT RECEIVE A SHARE why should he go up? — [You ask] 'Why should he go up'; surely. he might say: I wish to perform a commandment![14] — But [this is the difficulty]: It does not say. '[If] he went up'[15] but HE GOES up, implying even against his will![16] — R. Aha b. Hanina in the name of Abaye in the name of R. Assi in the name of R. Johanan replied: In order [to avert any possible] reflection on his family.[17]

IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME MISHMAR etc. In what respect do two mishmaroth[18] differ [from one] that [in the former case] he should not [receive a share]? [Is it] because when he comes to the one mishmar he is driven away and when he comes to the other mishmar he is again driven away?[19] Then, even in the case of one mishmar also, when he comes to one beth ab[20] he is driven away and[21] when he comes to the other beth ab he is also driven away! —

R. Papa replied: It is this that was meant: IF, HOWEVER, BOTH SERVED IN THE SAME Mlshmar and in the same beth ab, HE RECEIVES A SINGLE PORTION.

CHAPTER XII

MISHNAH. THE COMMANDMENT OF HALIZAH MUST BE PERFORMED IN THE PRESENCE OF THREE JUDGES, EVEN THOUGH ALL THE THREE ARE LAYMEN.[22] IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SHOE,[23] HER HALIZAH IS VALID,[24] [BUT IF] WITH A SOCK[25] IT IS INVALID; IF WITH A SANDAL[26] TO WHICH A HEEL IS ATTACHED IT IS VALID, BUT [IF WITH ONE] THAT HAS NO HEEL IT IS INVALID. [IF THE SHOE WAS WORN][27] BELOW THE KNEE[28] THE HALIZAH IS VALID, BUT IF ABOVE THE KNEE[28] IT IS INVALID. IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL[26] THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM,[29] OR WITH A WOODEN SANDAL, OR WITH THE ONE OF THE LEFT FOOT [WHICH HE[29] WAS WEARING] ON HIS RIGHT FOOT, THE HALIZAH IS VALID.

IF SHE PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL TOO LARGE [FOR HIM],[29] IN WHICH, HOWEVER, HE IS ABLE TO WALK, OR WITH ONE TOO SMALL WHICH, HOWEVER, COVERS THE GREATER PART OF HIS FOOT, HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

GEMARA. Since even THREE LAYMEN [are sufficient],[30] what need is there for JUDGES? — It is this that we were taught: That three men are required, who are capable of dictating [the prescribed texts][31] like judges.[32] Thus we have learned here what the Rabbis taught: The commandment of halizah is performed in the presence of three men who are able to dictate [the prescribed texts][31] like judges.[32] R. Judah said: In the presence of five.[33]

What is the first Tanna's reason? — Because it was taught: Elders[34] [implies] two; but as no court may be evenly balanced,[35] one man more is added to them; behold here three. And R. Judah?[36] — The elders of[37] [implies] two; and elders[38] [implies another] two; but since no court may be evenly balanced,[35] one man more is added to them; behold here five.

As to the first Tanna, what deduction does he make [from the expression] the elders of?[37] — He requires it for the purpose of including[39] even three laymen. Whence, then, does R. Judah deduce the eligibility of laymen?[39] — He deduces it from Before the eyes of;[40] a Master having said: ‘Before the eyes of’, excludes blind men. Now, since the expression ‘Before the eyes of’ is required to exclude blind men it follows that even laymen [are eligible]. For should it be suggested [that only members of] the Sanhedrin[41] are required. what need was there to exclude blind men, [an exclusion which could have been] deduced from that which R. Joseph learnt! For R. Joseph learnt: As the Beth din[42] must be clean[43] in respect of righteousness so must they be clear from all physical defects,[44]

(1) The son concerning whom it is unknown, as in our Mishnah, which of his mother's two husbands was his father.

(2) Lit., ‘this’, one of his mother's two husbands.

(3) Since one of the two is certainly his father. As to the necessary caution v. infra nn. 12 and 13.

(4) He struck or cursed.

(5) The specific caution that must precede any forbidden act that is punishable by a court is here effected when the witnesses cautioned the offender by one statement against the striking or the cursing of the two, e.g., ‘do not strike them’.

(6) Though he may have been duly cautioned in each particular case, no penalty can be imposed upon him by any court, since each caution was of a doubtful character, it being unknown in each case whether the particular man he was about to strike or curse was his father or not. A caution of a doubtful character is, in the opinion of R. Judah, of no validity. while in the opinion of the first Tanna it is valid.

(7) V. supra note 8.

(8) If the offender struck or cursed simultaneously. One of the victims must surely have been his father!

Such proximity, according to the opinion here expressed, serves the purpose of an analogy. According to another opinion, the analogy is disturbed by the intervening v. 16. Cf. Sanh. 85a.
(14) To take part in the Temple service, even though he derives no material benefit from it.
(15) The past tense, implying contingency.
(16) Why should he be compelled?

(27) Cf. Rashi. According to others the law refers not to the shoe itself but to the sandal straps.
(28) Where, for instance, the levir (according to Rashi) had his foot amputated. According to the other interpretation ‘below’, and ‘above’ the knee refers to the position of the straps on the leg.
(29) The levir.
(30) To constitute a tribunal for halizah.
(31) Deut. XXV, 7-9.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 101b

for it is said in Scripture, Thou art all fair, my love; and there is no spot in thee.[1]

As to the former,[2] however, what deduction does he make from the expression. ‘Before the eyes of'? — That expression serves the purpose of a deduction like that of Raba, Raba having stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture, Before the eyes of the elders . . . and spit.[3] But does not the other[4] also require the text[5] for a deduction like that of Raba! — This is so indeed. Whence, then,[6] does he deduce [the eligibility of] laymen?[7] — He deduces it from in Israel[8] [implying] any Israelite whatsoever. As to the former,[9] however, what deduction does he make from 'In Israel'?[10] — He requires it for a deduction like that which R. Samuel b. Judah taught: 'In Israel' [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes.[11] And the other?[4] — 'In Israel' is written a second time.[12] And the former?[9] — He requires it[13] for another deduction in accordance with what was taught: R. Judah stated, 'We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, "Exclaim all of you: The man that had his shoe drawn off"'.[14] And the other? — This is deduced from And [his name] shall be called.[14] If this is so'[15] And they shall call[16] [implies] two;[17] And they shall speak[16] [also implies] two,[17] [so that] here also [one might deduce]: According to R. Judah,[18] behold there are here nine; and according to the Rabbis,[19] behold there are here seven! — That text[16] is required for a deduction in accordance with what was taught: And they[20] shall call him[16] but not their representative; And they shall speak unto him[16] teaches that they give him suitable advice. If he,[21] for instance, was young and she[22] old, or if he was old and she was young, he is told, 'What would you with[23] a young woman?' Or 'What would you[23] with an old woman? Go to one who [is of the same age] as yourself, and introduce no quarrels into your home'.[24]

Raba stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that halizah is to be performed in the presence of three men, since the Tanna[25] has taught us so[26] anonymously.[27] Said Raba to R. Nahman: If so [the same ruling should apply to] mi'un[28] also, for we learned:[29] Mi'un and halizah [must be witnessed] by three men![30] And should you reply [that the halachah] is so indeed, surely [It may be retorted] it was taught: Mi'un,[31] Beth Shammai ruled, [must be declared before] a Beth din of experts;[32] and Beth Hillel ruled: [It may be performed] either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required. R. Jose son of R. Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Jose[33] ruled: [The mi'un is] valid [even if it was declared] before two.[34] And R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R Nahman[34] that the halachah is in agreement with this pair![35] — There,[36] only one anonymous [teaching] is available while here[37] two anonymous [teachings][38] are available.

There[36] also two anonymous [teachings] are available! For we learned: If, however, a woman made a declaration of refusal[39] or performed halizah in his presence, he[40] may marry her,[41] since he [was but one of the] Beth din![42] — But, [the fact is that while] there,[43] only two anonymous [teachings] are available; here,[44] three anonymous [teachings] are available.[45]

Consider! The one[43] is an anonymous [teaching], and the other[44] is an anonymous [teaching]; what difference does it make to me whether the anonymous [teachings] are one, two or three? — Rather, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, [the reason[46] is] because the anonymity[47] occurs in a passage recording a dispute.[48] For we learned: 'The laying on of hands by the elders,[49] and the breaking of the heifer's neck[50] is performed by three elders; so R. Jose,[51] while R. Judah stated: By five elders. Halizah and declarations of mi'un, [however, are witnessed] by three men';[52] and since R. Judah does not express disagreement,[53] it may be inferred that R. Judah changed his opinion.[54] This proves it.

Raba stated: The judges must appoint a place;[55] for it is written, Then his brother's wife shall go up to the gate[56] unto the elders.[57]

R. Papa and R. Huna son of R. Joshua arranged a halizah'[48] in the presence of five. In accordance with whose view?[58] Was it in accordance with that of R. Judah? He, surely, had changed his opinion![59] [Their object[60] was] to give the matter due publicity.[61]

R. Ashi once happened to be at R. Kahana's, when the latter said to him, ‘The Master has come up to us [at an opportune moment] to complete a quorum of five’.[62]

R. Kahana stated: I was once standing in the presence of Rab Judah, when he said to me, ‘Come, get on to this bundle of reeds[63] that you may be included in a quorum of five’.[62] On being asked, ‘What need is there for five?’ he replied, ‘In order that the matter be given due publicity’.[61]

R. Samuel b. Judah once stood before Rab Judah when the latter said to him, ‘Come, get on to this bundle of reeds[63] to be included in a quorum of five,[62] in order that the matter be thereby given due publicity’.[61] ‘We learned’, the first remarked, ‘In Israel [implies that halizah must be performed] at a Beth din of Israelites but not at a Beth din of proselytes[64] while I am, in fact, a proselyte’. ‘On the word[65] [of a man] like R. Samuel b. Judah’, Rab Judah said, ‘I would withdraw money [from its possessor]’.[66] [You say] ‘Withdraw’! Could this be imagined? Surely the All Merciful said, At the mouth of two witnesses![67] — Rather [it is this that he meant]. ‘I would on his word[65] impair the validity of a note of indebtedness.[68]

Samuel would always be believed (v. Tosaf. s.v. מרענא).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 102a

A proselyte may, according to Pentateuchal law, sit in judgment[1] on a fellow proselyte, for it is said in the Scriptures, Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee, whom the Lord thy God shall choose; one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee;[2] only when set over thee[2] is he required to be one from among thy brethren;[2] when, however, he is to judge his fellow proselyte he may himself be a proselyte.[3] If his[4] mother was an Israelitish woman he may sit in judgment even on an Israelite.[5] In respect of halizah, however, [no man is eligible as judge] unless both his father and his mother were Israelites for it is said, And his name shall be called in Israel.[6]

Rabbah stated in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may be performed with a foot-covering shoe,[7] he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal,[8] he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

R. Joseph, however, reported in the name of R. Kahana in the name of Rab: If Elijah should come and declare that halizah may not be performed with a foot-covering shoe,[7] he would be obeyed; [were he, however, to declare that] halizah may not be performed with a sandal,[8] he would not be obeyed, for the people have long ago adopted the practice [of performing it] with a sandal.

What is the practical difference between them?[9] — The practical difference between them is [the propriety of using] a foot-covering shoe ab initio.[10]

According to him, however, who stated [that it was proper to use[11] it] even ab initio, surely, [it may be objected] we learned: IF A WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A FOOT-COVERING SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS VALID [which[12] implies validity only] after the action had been performed but not ab initio. — The same law[13] is applicable even [where the shoe was used] ab initio. As, however, it was desired to state in the final clause: BUT IF WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID, [a law] which applies even after the action had been performed, a similar expression[14] was also used in the first clause.

[On the question of] using a foot-covering shoe[15] ab initio Tannaim differ. For it was taught: R. Jose[16] related, 'I once went to Nesibis where I met an old man whom I asked, "Are you perchance acquainted with R. Judah b. Bathyra?" and he replied, "Yes; and he in fact always sits at my table". "Have you ever seen him arranging a halizah ceremony for a sister-in-law?" [I asked]. "I saw him arranging halizah ceremonies many a time", he replied. "With a foot-covering shoe [I asked] or with a sandal?" — "May halizah be performed", he asked me' "with a foot-covering shoe?" I[17] replied: Were that [not] so, what could have caused[18] R. Meir to state that halizah if performed with a foot-covering shoe is valid, while R. Jacob reported in his[19] name that it was quite proper to perform [even] halizah ab initio with a foot-covering shoe!'

With reference to him who ruled that it was not proper ab initio [to perform halizah with a foot-covering shoe] what could be the reason? If it be suggested: Because [the loosing of] the upper[20] [may be described as] from off[21] and [the loosing of the] thong[22] as 'from off of the from off', [a performance which is not in accordance with] the Torah which said, from off[21] but not 'from off of the from off'; [it could well be retorted that] if such were the reason [the halizah should be invalid] even when actually performed. — This[23] is a preventive measure against the possible use of a flabby[24] shoe or even half a shoe.[25]

Said Rab: Had I not seen my uncle[26] arranging a halizah with a sandal that had laces I would have allowed a halizah only with an Arabian sandal which can be more firmly fastened. And in respect of our [kind of sandal] though it has a knot,[27] a strap also should be tied to it,[28] so that the halizah may be properly performed.[29]

(Mnemonic: You permitted a sister-in-law a sandal.)[30] Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: The permissibility of a sister-in-law to marry a stranger takes effect as soon as the greater part of the heel[31] is released.[32]

An objection was raised: If the straps of a foot-covering shoe or of a sandal were untied[33] or if [the levir] slipped [it off from] the greater part of his foot,[34] the halizah is invalid.[35] The reason then[36] is because it was he that slipped it off; had she, however, slipped it off, her halizah would have been valid; [and, furthermore this applies to] the greater part of the foot only[37] but not to the greater part of the heel![38] — The 'greater part of the foot' has the same meaning as 'the greater part of the heel'; [and the reason] why he calls it 'the greater part of the foot' [is] because all the weight of the foot rests on it.

This[39] provides support for R. Jannai. For R. Jannai stated: Whether [the levir] untied [the straps] and she slipped off [the sandal] or whether she untied the straps and he slipped off the sandal, her halizah remains invalid, unless she unties the straps and she slips off the sandal.

R. Jannai enquired: What is the law if she tore it?[40] What if she burnt it?[40] Is the exposure of the foot necessary,[41] and this has here been effected,[42] or is 'taking off' necessary, which has not taken place here?[43] — This remains undecided.[44]

R. Nehemiah enquired of Rabbah: What is the law in the case of two shoes one above the other? — How is this enquiry to be understood? If it be suggested: That she[45] drew off the upper one and the lower one remained, surely, the All Merciful said: From off[46] but not 'from off of the from off'! — Such enquiry is necessary only where she tore the upper one and removed the lower one while the upper one remained [on the levir's foot], the question being whether[47] the requirement is the 'taking off' which has been done[42] , or whether the exposure of the foot is necessary which was not effected here?[48]

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 102b

Does this, however, ever happen? — Yes; for the Rabbis once saw Rab Judah going out into the street in five pairs of felt socks.

Rab Judah reported in the name of Rab: A sister-in-law who was brought up together with the brothers[1] is permitted to marry any one of the brothers and there is no need to consider the possibility that she[2] might have taken off the sandal [from the foot] of one of them.[3] The reason, then[4] is because we did not actually observe it,[5] had we, however, observed it[5] the possibility [that her halizah was valid] would have had to be taken into consideration.[6] But, surely, it was taught:

Whether he[7] had the intention[8] [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he did not, halizah is invalid, it being necessary[9] that both shall at the same time have such intention![10] It is this that was meant : Although we observed it[5] there is no need to consider the possibility that they might have intended [to give their action the character of a valid halizah].

Others read: The reason[4] is because we did not see it,[5] had we, however, seen it, the possibility [of a valid halizah] would have had to be considered,[6] the statement that[11] intention[12] is necessary[13] applying only to the permissibility [of the woman] to strangers,[14] but to the brothers she does become forbidden.[15]

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that was sewn with flax,[16] for it is said in Scripture, And I shod thee with tahash.[17] Might it be suggested that [the skill of] a tahash[18] is admissible[19] but not any other material? — The mention of ‘shoe’ twice[20] indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather]. If the repeated mention of ‘shoe’ indicates the inclusion [of all kinds of leather] all other materials should also be included! — If that were so,[21] for what purpose was the term tahash used?

R. Eleazar enquired of Rab: [What is the law where] the sandal was made of leather and its straps of [animal] hair? — The other replied: Could we not apply to it, And I shod thee with tahash![22] If so, a shoe all made of hair[23] should also be admissible! — Such is called a slipper.[24]

Said R. Kahana to Samuel: Whence is it derived that the verb in[25] we-halezah[26] his shoe from off his foot[27] signifies taking off? — Because it is written, That they shall take out[28] the stones in which the plague is.[29] But I might suggest that the meaning[30] is that of arming;[31] for it is written in Scripture, Arm[32] ye men from among you for the war![33] — There also,[33] [the underlying meaning is] the slipping out from the house to go to war. But, surely, it is also written in Scripture, He girds[34] the afflicted in his affliction![35] — [The meaning is that] as a reward for his affliction He will deliver[36] him from the judgment of Gehenna. What, however, is the explanation of the Scriptural text,[37] The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and He girds them?[38] — [The meaning is that] as a reward for those who fear him He will deliver them from the judgment of Gehenna.

What explanation is there, however, for the Scriptural text,[39] And He will make strong[40] thy bones,[41] of which R. Eleazar said that this was the best of the blessings,[42] and Raba explained that the meaning[43] was the strengthening of the bones![44] — Yes, it may bear the one meaning and it may also bear the other; but were the meaning here[45] intended to be that of ‘tying on’,[46] the All Merciful should have written: ‘We-halezah his shoe upon his foot’.[47] But [it might be still objected], had the All Merciful written, ‘upon his foot’ it might have been suggested: Only upon his foot, but not upon his leg;[48] hence the All Merciful wrote From off[49] his foot, [to indicate] that [halizah may be performed] even on the [levir's] leg! — If so, the All Merciful should have written: ‘Upon [what is] above his foot’. Why [then did He use the expression] From off his foot? Consequently it must be inferred that the meaning[50] is ‘to take off’.

A certain Min[51] once said to R. Gamaliel:[52] You are a people with whom its God has performed halizah,[53] for it is said in Scripture, with their flocks and with their herds they shall go to seek the Lord, but they shall not find him; He hath drawn off[54] [the shoe] from them.[55] The other replied: Fool, is it written: ‘He hath drawn off [the shoe] for them’? It is written, ‘He hath drawn off [the shoe] from them’; now in the case of a sister-in-law from whom the brother drew off [the shoe] could there be any validity in the act?[56]

BUT IF WITH A SOCK IT IS INVALID etc. This then teaches that a sock is not regarded as a shoe; and so it was also taught: The man who removes [the monies] from the Temple treasury[57] must not enter with a bordered tunic or with a sock,[58] and there is no need to state [that he must not enter] with a shoe or with a sandal, since no one[59] may enter the Temple court with a shoe or a sandal;[60] but elsewhere the contrary was taught: One must not walk[61] with a shoe, a sandal or a sock either from one house to another or even from one bed to another bed![62] — Abaye replied: [This refers to a sock] which is furnished with pads, [the prohibition] being due to the pleasure [its wearing affords].[63] Said Raba to him: Is [all footwear] forbidden on the Day of Atonement because of the pleasure it affords, even though it cannot be regarded as a shoe? Surely, Rabbah son of R. Huna used to wrap a scarf round his foot and so went out![61] — But [in fact], said Raba,[64] there is no difficulty: The one Baraitha[65] refers to a leather sock; the other[66] to a felt sock. This explanation is indeed reasonable. For were you not to say so, a contradiction [would arise between one statement dealing with] the Day of Atonement and [another statement which also deals with] the Day of Atonement. For it was taught: No man may walk about in slippers in his house,[61] but he may walk about in his house in socks.[67] Consequently[68] it must be inferred that one statement refers to a leather sock and the other to a felt sock. This proves It.

It was taught in agreement with Raba:[69] [If a sister-in-law] performed halizah with a torn shoe which covered the greater part of the [levir's] foot, with a broken sandal which contained the greater part of his foot, with a sandal of cork[70] or of bast, with an artificial foot,[71] with a felt sock, with a support of the feet,[72] or with a leather sock, and also where she performed halizah with an adult Shab. 28b). The mention in the context of shoeing of tahash, the use of the skin of which only was recorded in the Scriptures, is taken to imply that the shoe spoken of in the Scriptures was invariably made of a material similar to that of the skin of tahash, viz., leather. Hence the inadmissibility in halizah of any shoe that was not wholly made of leather.

(33) Num. XXXI, 3.
(34) יחלץ, (rt חלץ). V. supra note 9.
(35) Job XXXVI, 15, which shews that the rt. חלץ also signifies ‘putting on’, ‘tying on’.
(36) יחלצו cf. E.V. He delivereth the afflicted by His affliction.
(37) Lit., ‘but that which it is written’.
(38) Ps. XXXIV, 8. ויחלצם (rt חלץ), v. supra p. 705, nn. 9 and 18.
(39) Lit., ‘but that which it is written’.
(40) יחליץ(rt. חלץ).
(41) Isa. LVIII, 11.
(42) That were enumerated in the context. Cf. ibid. 8-14.
(43) Of יחליץ.
(44) Which shews that the rt. חלץ signifies also ‘strengthening’, ‘equipping’, ‘arming’, and thus also ‘tying on’.
(45) Deut. XXV, 9.
(46) Lit., ‘strengthening’, ‘arming’.
(47) Instead of ‘from off’.
(48) And in case his foot was amputated, no halizah would be possible.
(49) מעל lit., ‘from above’, i.e., even from that part which is above his foot.
(50) Of וחלצה in Deut. XXV, 9.
(51) V. Glos.
(52) [Probably R. Gamaliel of Jabneh, after the destruction of the Temple in 70 C.E. V. Herford, Christianity in the Talmud p. 355].
(53) I.e., severed his connection with them.
(54) חלץ.
(55) E.V. ‘He hath withdrawn Himself from them’. Hos. V, 6.
(56) Certainly not. It is the sister-in-law that performs the halizah while the brother-in-law only submits to it. God, in the image of the text quoted, standing towards Israel in the relationship of a Ievir to his sister-in-law, cannot perform the halizah, and his action is, so to speak, invalid, the bond between him and His people remaining in force.
(57) Cur. edd. ‘we learned’. Cf. marg. note a.l. and Shek. III, 2.
(58) In order that he may be free from the suspicion that he concealed some money in his socks or in the border of his tunic.
(59) Even when suspicion is out of the question.
(60) Out of respect for the place. Now, since a sock is permitted in the Temple court where a shoe is for. bidden it is obvious that a sock is not included in the category of shoe.
(61) On the Day of Atonement, when as a part of the affliction (cf. Lev. XVI, 29) the wearing of shoes is forbidden.
(62) Which shows that a sock is also regarded as a shoe.
(63) Cf. supra n. 6.
(64) In reply to the contradiction that was pointed out.
(65) Which forbids the wearing of a sock on the Day of Atonement.
(66) That dealing with entry into the Temple court.
(67) Which is contradictory to the Baraitha previously cited there the wearing of socks was forbidden even where one only walked from one bed to another.
(68) Lit., ‘but not’?
(69) That a difference is drawn between a sock of felt or cloth and one of leather. While the former is not regarded as a shoe the latter is.
(70) Or, according to others, ‘bamboo’.

(71) Of the levir. Lit., 'the hollowed stump of the cripple'.
(72) One of the cushions which a cripple ties to his feet.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 103a

whether he was standing, sitting or reclining, and also if her halizah was performed with a blind man, her halizah is valid. [If her halizah] however, [was performed] with a torn shoe that did not cover the greater part of the [levir's] foot, with a broken sandal which does not hold the greater part of his foot, with a support of the hands,[1] or with a cloth sock, and also where her halizah was performed with a minor, her halizah is invalid.[2]

Whose [view is represented in the first statement mentioning] the artificial foot?[3] — [Obviously that of] R. Meir, for we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath][4] with his artificial foot;[5] so R. Meir, and R. Jose forbids it;[6] [but the latter statement]: 'With a cloth-sock'[7] can only represent the view of the Rabbis![8] — Abaye replied: Since the latter statement [represents the opinion of] the Rabbis, the first also [must represent the opinion of] the Rabbis, the first [dealing with an artificial foot that was] covered with leather.[9]

Said Raba to him:[10] What, however, [is the law if it[11] was] not covered with leather? Is it then unfit![12] If so, instead of teaching in the latter statement, 'With a cloth sock',[13] a distinction should have been drawn in [respect of the artificial foot] itself: This[14] applies only where it was covered with leather, but if it was not covered with leather it is unfit![12] Rather, said Raba, since the first statement represents the view of R. Meir, the latter also represents the view of R. Meir, the one[11] affording protection[15] while the other[16] affords no protection.[17]

Amemar stated: When a levir submits to halizah he must press down his foot [to the ground]. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: Was it not taught [that the halizah was valid] 'whether he[18] was standing, sitting or reclining'? — Read: And in all these cases, only if he pressed his foot [to the ground].

Amemar further stated: A man who walks on the upper side of his foot[19] must not submit to halizah. Said R. Ashi to Amemar: But, surely, it was taught: 'Supports of the feet';[20] does not [this signify] that such [a cripple][21] may submit to halizah with a support! No; [the meaning is] that he may give it to another person[22] who is allowed to submit to halizah [with it].

Said R. Ashi: According to Amemar's ruling neither Bar Oba nor Bar Kipof[23] could submit to halizah.

[IF THE SHOE WAS WORN] BELOW THE KNEE etc. A contradiction was pointed out: Regalim,[24] excludes[25] stump-legged cripples![26] — Here[27] it is different since it was written in Scripture, From off his foot.[28] If so, [halizah should be permissible] above the knee also! — From off but not 'from off the from off'.[29]

Said R. Papa: From this[30] it may be inferred that the istewira[31] reaches down to the ground;[32] for were it to be imagined that it is disconnected,[33] it [would be situated] above [the foot], while the leg [would be] above that which is above [the foot].[34] R. Ashi, however, said: It may even be said that it is disconnected, but any part adjacent to the foot is legally regarded as the foot itself.[35]

ABOVE THE KNEE. R. Kahana raised an objection: And against her afterbirth that cometh out from between her feet![36] — Abaye replied: When a woman kneels down to give birth she presses her heels against her thighs and thus gives birth. Come and hear: He had neither dressed his feet nor trimmed his beard![37] — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: And Saul went in to cover his feet![38] — This is a euphemistic expression. Come and hear: Surely he is covering his feet in the cabinet of the cool chamber![39] — This is a euphemistic expression. Between her feet etc.![40] — This is a euphemistic expression.

R. Johanan Said: That profligate[41] had seven sexual connections on that day;[42] for it is said, Between her feet he sunk, he fell, he lay; at her feet he sunk, he fell; where he sunk there he fell down dead.[43] But, surely she[44] derived gratification from the transgression! R. Johanan replied in the name of R. Simeon b. Yohai: All the favours of the wicked[45]

(1) Cf. supra n. 6, one of the cushions tied to a cripple's hands.

(2) Thus it has been shown that in respect of halizah a legal distinction is made between the two kinds of sock. Cf. supra n. 3.

(3) Regarding it as a proper shoe. Cf. supra n. 5.

(4) When carrying from one domain into another is forbidden.

(5) Because it is regarded as a shoe which one may wear on the Sabbath.

(6) Shab. 65b, Yoma 78b.

(7) That halizah with it is invalid.

(8) Who differ from R. Meir in regarding neither the artificial foot nor the cloth sock as a shoe. According to R. Meir a cloth sock, like an artificial foot, is regarded as a shoe. Does then the Baraitha represent the contradictory views of R. Meir and the Rabbis!

(9) Hence its admissibility as a shoe for halizah.

(10) Abaye.

(11) The artificial foot.

(12) For halizah.

(13) That halizah with it is invalid.

(14) The admissibility of the artificial foot for halizah.

(15) For the Ieg. Hence it is regarded as a shoe that is admissible for halizah.

(16) A cloth sock.

(17) Hence its unfitness for halizah. It is not the material of which it is made but its unsuitability as a covering of the foot that causes its unfitness.

(18) The levir.

(19) Owing to a deformity in his foot (cf. Rashi). ליחתא the ‘fibula’, ‘splint-bone's ‘his feet being turned outward so as to form an obtuse angle’ (Jast.).

(20) Are among the objects that may be used as shoes for the purpose of halizah.

(27) The case of halizah.

(28) Deut. XXV, 9, מעל רגלו, lit., ‘from above his foot’, i.e., any part of the leg.

(29) V. supra n. 5. The part of the leg between the knee and the foot is ‘above the foot’; and the part above the knee is ‘above the above’.

(30) Our Mishnah which permits halizah on any part of the leg below the knee.

(31) [The ankle-bone (talus) v. Katzenelsohn, Talmud und Medizin, p. 384.]

(32) There is legally no division between the foot and this bone.

(33) From the foot.

(34) And halizah on that part would be invalid.

(35) Hence any part between it and the knee may be legally regarded as directly above the foot.

(45) Which they do for the righteous.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 103b

are evil for the righteous;[1] For it is said, Take heed to thyself that thou speak not to Jacob either good or evil.[2] Now, as regards evil, one can perfectly well understand [the meaning][3] but why not good? From here then it may be inferred that the favour of the wicked is evil for the righteous.

There,[4] one can well see the reason,[5] since he[6] might possibly mention to him the name of his idol;[7] what evil, however, could be involved here?[8] — That of infusing her with sensual lust. For R. Johanan stated: When the serpent copulated with Eve,[9] he infused her[10] with lust. The lust of the Israelites who stood at Mount Sinai,[11] came to an end, the lust of the idolaters who did not stand at Mount Sinai did not come to an end.

IF THE WOMAN PERFORMED THE HALIZAH WITH A SANDAL THAT DID NOT BELONG TO HIM etc. Our Rabbis taught: [From the expression] His shoe[12] I would only know that his own[13] shoe [is suitable];[14] whence, however, is it deduced that anybody's shoe is suitable?[15] Hence was the term ‘shoe’ repeated,[16] thus indicating the suitability of anyone's shoe.[17] If so, why was the expression, ‘His shoe’, at all used? — ‘His shoe implies one which he can wear, excluding a large one in which he cannot walk, excluding a small one which does not cover the greater part of his foot, and excluding also a sandal which consists of a sole but has no heel.

Abaye once stood in the presence of R. Joseph when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah. ‘Give him’,[18] he[19] said to him,[20] your sandal’, and [Abaye] gave him’ his left sandal. ‘It might be suggested’, he[19] said to him,[20] ‘that the Rabbis spoke[21] only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio?’ The other[20] replied: If so, in respect of a sandal that is not the levir's own, it might also be suggested that the Rabbis spoke[22] only of a fait accompli; did they, however, speak also of what is permissible ab initio! ‘I’, the first[19] answered him, ‘meant to tell you this: Give it to him and transfer possession to him’.[23]

A WOODEN SANDAL. Who is the Tanna [whose view is expressed in this ruling]?[24] — Samuel replied: The view is that of R. Meir. For we learned: A cripple may go out [on the Sabbath][25] with his wooden stump; so R. Meir,[26] while R. Jose forbids it.[27] Samuel's father explained:[28] With one that is covered with leather, [the ruling representing] the general opinion.[29]

R. Papi stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed with a sandal that is under observation;[30] a halizah, however, that has been performed [with it] is valid. No halizah may be performed with a sandal, the leprous condition of which has been confirmed;[31] and even a halizah that had already been performed [with it] is invalid.[32] R. Papa, however,stated in the name of Raba: No halizah may be performed either with a sandal under observation[30] or with one the leprous condition of which had been confirmed;[31] a halizah, however, that had been performed [with either] is valid.

An objection was raised: A house locked up[33] imparts uncleanness from within,[34] [and a house] confirmed in its leprous condition [imparts uncleanness][34] both within and without. The one as well as the other imparts uncleanness to anyone entering.[35] Now, if it is to be assumed [that an object doomed to destruction is regarded] as already crushed to dust,[36] surely [it may be objected] the requirement [there][37] is that He goeth into the house;[38] but [such a house] is not in existence![39] — There[37] it is different, because Scripture said, And he shall break down the house,[40] even at the time of breaking down it is still called ‘house’.

Come and hear: A [leprous] strip of cloth[41] measuring three [finger-breadths] by three,[42] even if [in volume] it does not amount to the size of an olive,[43] causes, as soon as the greater part of it has entered a clean house, the defilement of that house.[44] Does not [this refer to a strip of cloth the uncleanness of which] had been confirmed![45] No; [it refers to] one under observation.[46] But if so, read the final clause: If in volume[47] it constituted the size of many olives[48] , as soon as a portion of it of the size of an olive[49] enters a clean house, it causes the uncleanness of that house.[50] Now, if you grant [that the reference is to a strip] of confirmed leprosy one can well understand why it was compared[51] to a corpse;[52] if, however, you maintain [that the reference is to a strip] under observation[53] why [it may be objected] was it compared to a corpse! — There[54] it is different,[55] for Scripture said, And he shall burn the garment,[56] even at the time of burning it is still called ‘garment.’[57] Then let [halizah] be deduced from it![58] — A prohibition cannot be deduced from [the laws of] uncleanness.[59]

Raba stated: The law is that [a sister-in-law] may not perform halizah either with a sandal under observation,[60] or with a sandal of confirmed leprosy, or with a sandal belonging to an idol;[61] if, however, she has performed halizah [with either of these], her halizah is valid.[62] [With a sandal] that was offered to an idol[63]

(51) In the fixing of its minimum, in respect of imparting uncleanness, to be that of the size of an olive.
(52) Which also imparts uncleanness if a small part of it of the size of an olive only remained. Confirmed leprosy may well be compared to a corpse. Cf. Num. XII, 22: Let her not . . . be as one dead. The reference is to Miriam who was at the time leprous (v. ibid. 10) and Aaron requested Moses that she may not be confirmed in her leprosy and thus become like a corpse.
(53) V. supra p. 712, n. 13 mutatis mutandis.
(54) The law of uncleanness in respect of the strip of leprous cloth.
(55) From the law of halizah where an object doomed to destruction is regarded as non-existent.
(56) Lev. XIII, 52, emphasis on burn and garment.
(57) Hence it may impart uncleanness even where it is doomed to destruction.
(58) And a sandal of confirmed leprosy should also be admissible for halizah.
(59) Which form a peculiar class of their own.
(60) Cf. supra p. 712, n. 13.
(61) Which is put on the idol when it is moved from place to place (Rashi).
(62) Because the sandal under observation is not doomed to destruction; the sandal of confirmed leprosy is regarded as a garment despite its doom, (as deduced supra from Lev. XIII, 52); while the sandal of the idol, being only an accessory to it, is not doomed to burning. Though no benefit may be derived therefrom it is admissible for halizah, because the fulfilment of a precept is not regarded as a 'benefit'.
(63) As part of its worship, and which must consequently be destroyed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104a

or [with one] that belonged to a condemned city[1] or [with one] that was made[2] in honour of a [dead] elder,[3] no halizah may be performed; and even a halizah that has been performed with it is invalid.

Said Rabina to R. Ashi: In what respect is [the sandal] that was made in honour of a [dead] elder different [from an ordinary sandal]? Is it because it was not made for walking? That of the Beth din also[4] was not made for walking! — The other replied: Should the attendant of the Beth din use it for walking, would the Beth din object![5]

MISHNAH. IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED THE HALIZAH AT NIGHT, HER HALIZAH IS VALID. R. ELEAZAR, HOWEVER, REGARDS IT AS INVALID. [IF SHE PERFORMED IT] WITH [THE LEVIR'S] LEFT SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS INVALID, BUT R. ELEAZAR DECLARES IT TO BE VALID.

GEMARA. May it be suggested that they[6] differ on the following principle: The one Master[7] holds the opinion that lawsuits are to be compared to plagues,[8] while the other Master[9] holds the opinion that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues?[10] — No; all agree that lawsuits cannot be compared to plagues; for should they be compared, even the close of a legal process could not have been allowed at night.[11] Here, however, they[12] differ on the following principle: Ones Master[9] holds that halizah is like the commencement of legal proceedings[13] and the other Master[14] holds that halizah is like the close of the proceedings.[15]

Rabbah[16] b. Hiyya of Ktesifon[17] carried out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, at night. Said Samuel: How great is his authority[18] in acting on the view of one individual![19] What [however, could be his] objection?[20] If [against the use of the] felt sock, an anonymous Baraitha[21] [permits it]![22] If [against his acting at] night, our anonymous Mishnah[23] [permits this]![24] — His objection, however, is [that Rabbah acted] alone. How [he objected] could he act alone when it was only one individual who expressed approval of such a procedure![25] For we learned: If [a sister-in-law] performed halizah in the presence of two or three men, and one of them. was discovered to be a relative or in any other way unfit [to act as judge], her halizah is invalid; but R. Simeon and R. Johanan ha-Sandelar declare it valid. Furthermore, it once happened that a man submitted to halizah with none present but himself and herself in a prison, and when the case came before R. Akiba he declared the halizah valid.[26]

And[27] if you prefer I might say: All these [rulings] also are the views of[28] an individual. For it was taught: R. Ishmael son of R. Jose stated, ‘I saw R. Ishmael b. Elisha carry out a halizah with a felt sock, with no other men present, and [this occurred] at night’.

WITH [THE LEVIR'S] LEFT SHOE HER HALIZAH etc. What is the Rabbis’ reason? ‘Ulla replied: [The meaning of] ‘foot’ [here][29] is deduced from that of foot[30] in the context of the leper. As there[31] it is the right[32] so here[33] also it must be the right. Does not R. Eleazar, then, deduce [the meaning of] foot [here][33] from that of foot[34] in the context of the leper? Surely, it was taught: R. Eleazar stated, Whence is it deduced that the boring [of the ear of a Hebrew slave][35] must be performed on his right ear? — For the term ear was used here[36] and the term ‘ear’ was also used elsewhere;[37] as there[37] it is the right ear[38] so here also it is the right ear![39] — R. Isaac b. Joseph replied in the name of R. Johanan: The statement is to be reversed.[40]

Raba said: There is, in fact, no need to reverse [the statement,[36] the reply to the objection[41] being that] the terms ‘ear’[42] [are both] free [for the deduction];[43] the terms of ‘foot,’[44] however, are not free for deduction.[45] But even if [one of the texts] is not free for deduction, what objection can be raised [against the deduction]?[46] — It may be objected: The case of the leper is different,[47] since he is also required [to bring] cedar-wood and hyssop and scarlet.[48] MISHNAH. [IF A SISTER-IN-LAW] DREW OFF [THE LEVIR'S SHOE] AND SPAT,[49] BUT DID NOT RECITE [THE FORMULAE],[50] HER HALIZAH IS VALID.[51] IF SHE RECITED [THE FORMULAE] AND

SPAT, BUT DID NOT DRAW OFF THE SHOE, HER HALIZAH IS INVALID.[52] IF SHE DREW OFF THE SHOE AND RECITED [THE FORMULAE] BUT DID NOT SPIT, HER HALIZAH, R. ELIEZER[53] STATED, IS INVALID; AND R. AKIBA STATED: HER HALIZAH IS VALID.

(25) Lit., ‘taught it’.
(26) Thus it is proved that it is an individual opinion, that of R. Akiba, that permits halizah in the absence of witnesses.
(27) Cf. Bah. Cur. edd. insert: ‘And R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman that the halachah is not in agreement with that pair.’ This occurs infra 105b, but is irrelevant here.
(28) Lit., ‘taught them’.

(38) Since the text explicitly mentions it.
(39) Kid. 15a, which shews that R. Eleazar does make deduction from the terms used in the context of the leper.
(40) In our Mishnah. It is R. Eleazar, and not the first Tanna, who ruled that halizah with the left shoe is invalid.
(41) As to why R. Eleazar draws an analogy between the terms of ear and not between those of foot.
(42) Lit., ‘ear, ear’.
(43) Both in the case of leper (Lev. XIV, 14 and 17) and in that of the slave (Ex. XXI, 6 and Deut. XV, 17) one of the terms is superfluous and, therefore, free for the deduction that the boring must be performed on the right ear.

(44) Lit., ‘foot, foot’.

(45) Though in the context of the leper the term foot occurs twice (Lev. XIV. 14 and 17), in that of halizah it appears only once (Deut. XXV, 9). As in the latter text it is required for the context itself no deduction can be made from such an analogy unless it is one that is free from all possible objection.

(46) Cf. supra n. 14 final clause. Since no refutation can be advanced, the deduction, though based on texts of which one only is free for the purpose, should hold!

(47) From that of halizah.

(48) On the day of his cleansing. (Cf. Lev. XIV, 4). The laws of the leper, being in this respect more rigid than those of halizah, may also be more rigid in respect of the requirement of the right shoe. Hence R. Eleazar's opinion that no deduction is to be made from the analogous words, and that halizah with the left shoe is, therefore, valid.

(49) Cf. Deut. XXV, 9.

(50) Prior to the halizah she declares (a) ‘My husband's brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel; he will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me’ (ibid. 7). After the halizah she exclaims, (b) ‘So shall it be done unto the man that doth not build up his brother's house’ (ibid. 9).

(51) The omission of an act, but not that of a formula, renders a halizah invalid. V. infra.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 104b

SAID R. ELIEZER TO HIM: [SCRIPTURE STATED], SO SHALL BE DONE,[1] ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED[2] IS A SINE QUA NON.[3] R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID TO HIM, FROM THIS VERY TEXT[4] PROOF [MAY BE ADDUCED FOR MY VIEW]: SO SHALL BE DONE UNTO THE MAN,[5] ONLY THAT WHICH IS TO BE DONE UNTO THE MAN.[6]

IF A DEAF[7] LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF[7] SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR MUST AGAIN PERFORM HALIZAH WHEN SHE BECOMES OF AGE; AND IF SHE DOES NOT AGAIN PERFORM IT, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO OR THREE MEN AND ONE OF THEM WAS DISCOVERED TO BE A RELATIVE OR ONE IN ANY OTHER WAY UNFIT [TO ACT AS JUDGE], HER HALIZAH IS INVALID; BUT R. SIMEON AND R. JOHANAN HA-SANDELAR DECLARE IT VALID. FURTHERMORE,[8] IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF IN A PRISON, AND WHEN THE CASE CAME BEFORE R. AKIBA HE DECLARED THE HALIZAH VALID.

GEMARA. Raba said: Now that you have stated[9] that the recital [of the formulae][10] is not a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man and a dumb woman is valid.

We learned: IF A DEAF LEVIR SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. Now, what is the reason?[11] is it not because these are unable to recite [the formulae]![12] — No; because they are not in complete possession of their mental faculties.[13] If so, [the same applies] also to a dumb man and to a dumb woman![14] — Raba replied: A dumb man and a dumb woman are in full possession of their mental faculties, and it is only their mouth that troubles[15] them. But, surely, at the school of R. Jannai it was explained [that the reason why a deaf-mute is unfit for halizah is] because [the Scriptural instruction], He shall say[16] or She shall say[17] is inapplicable to such a case![18] — [Say] rather, if Raba's statement was ever made it was made in connection with the final clause: IF A DEAF LEVir SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH, OR IF A DEAF SISTER-IN-LAW PERFORMED HALIZAH, OR IF A HALIZAH WAS PERFORMED ON A MINOR, THE HALIZAH IS INVALID. [It is in connection with this that] Raba said: Now that you have stated that the recital of [the formulae][19] is a sine qua non, the halizah of a dumb man or a dumb woman is invalid. And our Mishnah[20] [is based on the same principle] as [that propounded by] R. Zera; for R. Zera stated: Wherever proper mingling[21] is possible actual mingling is not essential,[22] but where proper mingling is not possible[23] the actual mingling is a sine qua non.[24]

[The following ruling] was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-inlaw who spat[25] must perform the halizah.[26] This implies that she is rendered unfit for the brothers;[27] but whose view is this?[28] If it be suggested [that it is that of] R. Akiba, it may be objected:[29] If R. Akiba said that it[30] was not indispensable[31] even where the actual commandment [of halizah is being performed, in which case] it could be argued that it could be given the same force as [the burning] of the altar portions of the sacrifices. which is not an essential [rite] when [the portions] are not available,[32] and yet is a sine qua non when they are available,[33] [would he regard it[30] as a reason for the woman] to become thereby unfit for the brothers! [Should it be suggested], however, [that the view[34] is that] of R. Eliezer,[35] surely [it may be retorted] are two acts which jointly effect permissibility,[36] and any two acts that jointly effect permissibility are ineffective one without the other![37] — Rather, the view[38] is in agreement with that of Rabbi. For it was taught: The Pentecostal lambs[39] cause the consecration of the bread[40] only by their slaughter.[41] In what manner?[42] If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices[43] and their blood also was sprinkled with such intention,[43] the bread becomes consecrated. If they were not slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices,[44] though their blood was sprinkled for the proper purpose,[43] the bread does not become consecrated. If they were slaughtered for the purpose of the festival sacrifices[43] and their blood was sprinkled for another purpose,[45] [the bread] is partly consecrated and partly unconsecrated;[46] so Rabbi. R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon, however, stated: [The bread] is never consecrated unless the slaughtering [of the lambs] and the sprinkling of their blood were both intended for the proper purpose of the festival.[47]

Did R. Akiba, however, hold that the act of spitting does not render the woman unfit?[48] Surely it was taught: If she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not

(14) Why then is their halizah valid?

(31) Which shews what little significance R. Akiba attaches to this part of the ceremony.
(32) If, for instance, they were lost or became unfit for the altar owing to uncleanness. Cf. Pes. 59b.
(33) So in the case of halizah, R. Akiba might have been expected to regard the spitting, which is an act that can be performed, as an essential.

(44) Lit., not for their name’; i.e., if they were intended to be merely sacrifices, not specifically those prescribed for the Pentecost festival.

(46) I.e., it is subject to some, but not to all, of the restrictions of properly consecrated bread.
(47) Cf. supra note 8. Pes. 13b, Men. 47a. Thus it has been shewn that according to Rabbi, where two acts such as proper slaughtering and proper sprinkling are required, consecration is partially effected even though the former act alone was properly performed. Similarly, in respect of halizah, one of the prescribed acts is sufficient to render the woman unfit for the levirate marriage.
(48) For the levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 105a

spit nor recite,[1] her halizah is valid. If she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite,[2] her halizah is invalid[3] if she recited[2] but did not spit nor draw off the shoe, there is here no reason whatsoever for apprehension.[4] Now, whose [view is here represented]? If it be suggested [it is that of] R. Eliezer, [how could it be stated that] ‘if she drew off [the levir's shoe] but did not spit nor recite, her halizah is valid’ when, surely, R. Eliezer said: SO SHALL BE DONE, ANYTHING WHICH IS A DEED IS A SINE QUA NON? It is consequently obvious [that it is the view of] R. Akiba; and yet it was stated that ‘if she spat but did not draw off the shoe nor recite, her halizah is invalid’. To whom, [however, does the invalidity cause her to be forbidden]?[5] If it be suggested, ‘To strangers’;[6] is not this [it may be retorted] self-evident? Is it a halizah [like this that would enable the sister-inlaw] to become free to marry a stranger![7] It must therefore, be admitted[8] [that the validity refers to her state of prohibition] to the brothers.[9] Thus you have our contention proved.

According to R. Akiba, wherein lies the legal difference between the act of spitting and that of reciting?[10] — Recital[11] that must take place both at the commencement[12] [of the halizah ceremony] and at its conclusion[13] cannot be mistaken;[14] spitting, however, which does not take place at the beginning but only at the end, might be mistaken [for a proper halizah],[15] and thus[16] a proper halizah also would be permitted to marry the brothers.[17]

Others say that the following ruling was sent to him:[18] A sister-in-law who spat[19] may afterwards perform halizah and need not spit a second time.[20] So,in fact,it once happened that a sister-in-law[21] who came before R. Ammi, while R. Abba b. Memel was sitting in his presence, spat prior to her drawing off the shoe. ‘Arrange the halizah for her’, said R. Ammi to him,[22] ‘and dismiss her case’.[23] ‘But surely’. said R. Abba to him, ‘spitting is a requirement!’ — ‘She has spat indeed!’ ‘But let her spit [again]; what could be the objection?’ — ‘The issue might [morally and religiously] be disastrous; for should you rule that she is to spit again, people might assume that her first spitting was ineffective[24] and thus[25] a proper haluzah also would be permitted to marry the brothers!’[26] ‘But is it not necessary. [that the various parts of the halizah] should follow in the prescribed order?’ — ‘The order of the performances is not essential’. He[22] thought [at the time] that the other[27] was merely shaking him off. When, however, he went out he carefully considered the point and discovered that it was taught: Whether drawing off the shoe preceded the spitting or whether spitting preceded the drawing off, the action performed is valid.[28]

Levi once went out [to visit] the country towns,[29] when he was asked: ‘May a woman whose hand was amputated perform halizah?[30] What is the legal position where a sister-in-law spat blood? [It is stated in Scripture]: Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth;[31] does this[32] then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth?’ He was unable to answer.[33] When he came and asked these questions at the academy. they answered him: Is it written, ‘And she shall draw off with her hand’?[34] Is it written, ‘And spit spittle’?[34] [As to the question] ‘Howbeit I will declare unto thee that which is inscribed in the Writing of Truth,[31] does this then imply that there exists a [divine] Writing that is not of truth’? There is really no difficulty. For the former[35] refers to a [divine] decree that was accompanied by an oath while the latter[36] refers to one that was not accompanied by an oath. [This is] in accordance with a statement of R. Samuel b. Ammi. For R. Samuel b. Ammi stated in the name of R. Jonathan: Whence is it deduced that a decree which is accompanied by an oath is never annulled?[37] — From the Scriptural text, Therefore I have sworn unto the House of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be expiated with sacrifice nor offering for ever.[38] Rabbah said: It will not be expiated ‘with sacrifice nor offering’, but it will be expiated with the words of the Torah.

Abaye said: It will not be expiated ‘with sacrifice nor offering’ but it will be expiated with the practice of lovingkindness.

Rabbah and Abaye were both descendants of the house of Eli. Rabbah who engaged in the study of the Torah lived forty years. Abaye, however, who engaged in the study of the Torah and the practice of lovingkindness, lived sixty years.

Our Rabbis taught: There was a certain family in Jerusalem whose members used to die when they were about the age of eighteen. When they came and acquainted R. Johanan b. Zakkai [with the fact,] he said to them: ‘perchance you are descendants of the family of Eli concerning whom it is written in Scripture. And all the increase of thy house shall die young men;[39] go and engage in the study of the Torah, and you will live'. They went and engaged in the study of the Torah and lived [longer lives]. They were consequently called 'The family of Johanan', after him.

R. Samuel b. Unia stated in the name of Rab: Whence is it deduced that a [divine] dispensation against a congregation is not sealed? — [You say] 'Is not sealed'! Surely it is written, For though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before Me![40] — But [this is the question]: Whence is it deduced that even if it has been sealed it is torn up? — From the Scriptural text, What . . . as the Lord our God is whensoever we call upon him.[41] But, surely, it is written, Seek ye the Lord while He may be found![42] — This is no contradiction. The latter applies to an individual, the former to a congregation. And[43] when may an individual [find him]? R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In[44] the ten days between the New Year and the Day of Atonement.[45]

[The following ruling] was sent to Samuel's father: A sister-inlaw who spat blood shall perform halizah,[46] because it is impossible that blood should not contain some diluted particles of spittle.

An objection was raised: It might have been assumed that blood that issues from his[47] mouth or membrum virile is unclean,[48] hence it was explicitly stated, His issue is unclean,[49] but the blood which issues from his mouth or from his membrum virile is not unclean, but clean![50] — This is no contradiction: The former[51] is a case[52] where she sucks in;[53] the latter,[54] where [the blood] flows gently.

(9) The second meaning of פסולה (v. supra note 4. (b) being that the woman is forbidden to contract the levirate marriage with any of the brothers. Cf. Git. 24b.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 105b

Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab:[1] This[2] is the view of R. Meir;[3] but the Sages maintain that the halizah of a minor has no effect at all.[4]

[A SISTER-IN-LAW] WHO PERFORMED HALIZAH WHILE SHE WAS A MINOR etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: This[5] is the view of R. Meir who stated, ‘In the Pentateuchal section [of halizah] the expression man[6] is used,[7] and the woman is to be compared to the man’.[8] The Sages, however, maintain that in the Pentateuchal section ‘man’ was written;[7] [and as to] a woman, whether she is of age or a minor [her halizah is valid].

Who [is the Tanna here described as the] Sages? — It is R. Jose. For R. Hiyya and R. Simeon b. Rabbi once sat together, when one of them began as follows:[9] A man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes towards [the Temple][10] below,[11] for it is said, And Mine eyes and Mine heart shall be there perpetually.[12] And the other said: The eyes of him who offers up prayers shall be directed[13] towards [the heavens] above, for it is said Let us lift up our heart with our hand.[14] In the meanwhile they were joined by R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. ‘On what subject are you engaged?’ he asked them. ‘On the subject of prayer’, they replied. ‘My father’, he said to them, ‘ruled thus: A man who offers up his prayers must direct his eyes to the [Sanctuary] below and his heart towards [the heavens] above so that these two Scriptural texts may be complied with.’ While this was going on, Rabbi entered the academy.[15] They, being nimble, got into their places quickly. R. Ishmael son of R. Jose, however, owing to his corpulence[16] could only move to his place with slow steps. ‘Who is this man, cried Abdan[17] out to him, ‘who strides over the heads[18] of the holy people!’ The other replied. ‘I am Ishmael son of R. Jose who have come to learn Torah from Rabbi’.[19] ‘Are you, forsooth, fit’, the first said to him, ‘to learn Torah from Rabbi?’ — ‘Was Moses fit’, the other retorted, ‘to learn Torah from the lips of the Omnipotent!’ ‘Are you Moses indeed!’ the first exclaimed. — ‘Is then your Master a god!’ the other retorted. R. Jose remarked: Rabbi got what he merited when the one[20] said to the other[21] ‘Your Master’ and not ‘my Master’.[22] While this was proceeding a sister-in-law came before Rabbi.[23] ‘Go out’, said Rabbi to Abdan, ‘and have her examined’.[24] After the latter went out, R. Ishmael said to him:[25] Thus said my father, ‘In the Pentateuchal section man[26] is written;[27] [but as to] a woman, whether she is of age or a minor [her halizah is valid]’. ‘Come back’, he[15] , cried after him,[21] ‘you need not [arrange for any examination]; the grand old man[28] has already given his decision [on the subject]’.

Abdan now came back picking his steps,[29] when R. Ishmael son of R. Jose exclaimed, ‘He of whom the holy people is in need may well stride over the heads of the holy people; but how dare he of whom the holy people has no need stride over the heads of the holy people!’ ‘Remain in your place’, said Rabbi to Abdan.

It was taught: At that instant Abdan became leprous, his two sons were drowned and his two daughters-in-law made declarations of refusal.[30] ‘Blessed be the All Merciful’, said R. Nahman b. Isaac, ‘who has put Abdan to shame in this world’.[31]

‘We may learn from the words of this eminent scholar’,[32] said R. Ammi, ‘that [a sister-in-law who is] a minor may perform halizah while she is still in her childhood’.[33] Raba said: [She must wait with halizah] until she has reached the age of [valid] vows.[34] The law however, is [that she must not perform halizah] until she has produced two [pubic] hairs.

IF [A SISTER-IN-LAW] PERFORMED HALIZAH IN THE PRESENCE OF TWO etc. R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is not in agreement with this pair.[35] But, surely. R. Nahman had once stated this; for R. Joseph b. Manyumi stated in the name of R. Nahman: The halachah is that[36] halizah [must be performed] in the presence of three [judges]![37] — [Both are] required: For if the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed [that three judges are required] ab initio only. but that ex post facto even two [judges are enough] hence we were taught that ‘the halachah is not in agreement with this pair’.[38] And if we had been taught that ‘the halachah is not in agreement with this pair’ but in accordance with the ruling of the first Tanna, it might have been assumed [that this applies only] ex post facto,[39] but that ab initio five [judges] are required,[40] [hence the former statement was also] required.[41]

IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN SUBMITTED TO HALIZAH.[42] etc. PRIVATELY BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF! How, then, can we know it? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When witnesses observed it from without.

The question was raised:[43] Did it happen that the HALIZAH was performed privately BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF outside, AND THE CASE WAS BROUGHT BEFORE R. AKIBA IN PRISON,[44] or perhaps it happened that the HALIZAH was performed BETWEEN HIMSELF AND HERSELF in prison? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: The incident occurred in prison and the case also came up for decision in prison.[45] [

(1) Others, ‘Samuel’. Cf. Tosaf. supra 96a, s.v. רבי.

(2) That the halizah of a minor is invalid and that it consequently prohibits the woman from contracting levirate marriage with any of the older brothers.

(3) Who stated (supra 96a) that the halizah of a minor has the same force as that of a divorce by a levir who is of age.

(4) His act is legally null and void. She is not thereby forbidden even to himself.

(5) That a sister-in-law who was a minor may not perform halizah.

(6) V. Deut. XXV, 7.

(7) Which excludes the male minor.

(8) Since both man and sister-in-law (woman) were mentioned in the same verse (ibid.). As the male minor is excluded so is the female minor excluded.

(9) Lit., ‘and said’.

(10) In Jerusalem. Cf. Ber. 28b, 30a.

(11) I.e., on this earth, opp. to ‘heaven’ above.

(12) I Kings IX, 3. Hence it must always form the centre of attraction for all engaged in prayer.

(14) Lam. III, 41, emphasis on lift up.

(15) When everyone present was expected to take his usual seat.

(16) Cf. B.M. 84a.

(17) One of Rabbi's disciples. ‘Abdan’ is a contraction of ‘Abba Judan’ by which name he is known in the Palestinian Talmud. (Cf. Tosaf. s.v. אבא a.l.).

(18) During the discourses of the Master the disciples were seated on the ground in Eastern fashion; and R. Ishmael, in making his way towards his seat in the front rows, was compelled to stride over the heads of the assembly.

(19) Lit., ‘my master’, a designation applied to R. Judah the prince who was in his time the Master par excellence.

(20) R. Ishmael.

(21) Abdan.

(22) A slight upon Rabbi's recognized high position but one he well deserved for allowing Abdan publicly to annoy R. Ishmael.

(23) Desiring him to arrange for her a halizah ceremony.

(24) To ascertain whether she has developed the marks of puberty and is consequently eligible to perform halizah.

(25) Rabbi.

(26) Which excludes the male minor.

(27) Deut. XXV, 7.

(28) R. Jose. Thus it is proved that it is R. Jose's view that was presented supra as that of ‘the Sages’.

(29) Cf. supra note 4.

(30) V. Glos. s.v. Mi'un. The Talmudic text may imply that the two daughters. in-law, as minors, refused to contract levirate marriage with the brothers of their dead husband, so that the names of the deceased were ‘blotted out of Israel’ (cf. Golds.). Accordingly the rendering of the text should be ‘two (of) his (several) sons were drowned’. The text, however, might also be rendered: ‘His two sons were drowned (after) his two daughters-in-law had made declarations of refusal (against them)’.

(31) As an atonement for his ill-treatment of R. Ishmael; thus enabling him to enter the hereafter free from all sin.

(32) R. Jose ברבי בי רבי lit., ‘of the school of my master’, or ‘of Rabbi’, was a title of scholastic distinction given to many eminent scholars who were Rabbi's disciples or contemporaries, and similarly also to predecessors as well as to immediate successors among the early Amoraim. V. Nazir, Sonc., ed., p. 64, n. 1.

(33) פעוטות (cf. פטפט פוט, ‘to babble’) ‘talkers’, children of six or seven years of age, who may legally purchase or sell movable property. A child at this age, being regarded as sufficiently developed to understand certain commercial transactions, is also regarded as sufficiently developed to perform a halizah.

(34) One year prior to puberty, or the age of eleven years and one day, when her vows and consecrations are valid if on examination she is found to understand their significance and purpose. (Cf. Nid. 45b).

(35) R. Simeon and R. Johanan ha-Sandelar, the halachah being in agreement with the first Tanna who maintains that three judges are required for a halizah.

(36) V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit.
(37) Cf. supra 101b.
(38) Even ex post facto, which is the case spoken of in our Mishnah, halizah is invalid if no three eligible judges were present.
(39) Of which our Mishnah speaks (cf. supra n. 3).
(40) In agreement with R. Judah (cf. supra 101a).
(41) To indicate that even in the dispute between the first Tanna and R. Judah the halachah is in agreement with the former.
(42) Cf. our Mishnah. Cur. edd. read here 'they performed halizah'.
(43) The ambiguity in our Mishnah is due to a reading which omits the Waw in ובא so that it is possible to join 'in prison' either to the previous, or to the following clause (cf. Tosaf. s.v. ובא).
(44) During the revolt of Bar Kokeba (132-135 C.E.) R. Akiba was for a time held by the Romans as a prisoner and was subsequently martyred.
(45) [Tosaf.: Rab Judah had it on tradition that it was so, even as it is related in T.J.: R. Johanan ha-Sandelar passed outside the prison wherein R. Akiba was incarcerated, calling out, 'Who requires needles?', 'Who requires forks?' . . . 'How is it where the halizah was performed between himself and herself?' R. Akiba thereupon looked out through the window and replied: 'Hast thou of needles (kushin)? Hast thou kasher?', thus intimating that it is legal. V. Tosef. quoted in תוס״ ישנים for a slightly different version].

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 106a

Our Rabbis taught: A halizah under a false assumption[1] is valid.[2] What is meant by 'a halizah under a false assumption'? Resh Lakish explained: Where a levir is told, 'Submit to halizah and you will thereby wed her'. Said R. Johanan to him:[3] I am in the habit of repeating a Baraitha, 'Whether he[4] had the intention[5] [of performing the commandment of halizah] and she had no such intention, or whether she had such intention and he had not, her halizah is invalid, it being necessary[6] that both shall at the same time have such intention',[7] and you say that her halizah is valid![8] But [in fact this is the meaning]:[9] When a levir is told, 'Submit to her halizah on the condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'.[10]

So it was also taught [elsewhere]: A halizah under a false assumption is valid; and what is meant by a halizah under a false assumption? One in which the levir is told 'Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'. Such an incident, in fact, occurred with a woman who fell to the lot of an unworthy levir who was told, 'Submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz'. When this case came before R. Hiyya he ruled that the halizah was valid.

A woman[11] once came before R. Hiyya b. Abba.[12] 'Stand up,[13] my daughter', the Rabbi said to her. 'Her sitting is her standing',[14] replied her mother.[15] 'Do you know this man?'[16] the Rabbi asked. 'Yes', she answered him, 'it is her money that he saw and he would like to it'.[17] 'Do you not like him then?' he asked the woman.[18] 'No', she replied. 'Submit to her halizah', [the Rabbi] said to [the levir], 'and you will thereby wed her'. After the latter had submitted to halizah at her hands he said to him, 'Now she is ineligible to marry you; submit again to a proper halizah that she may be permitted to marry a stranger'.

A daughter of R. Papa's father-in-law fell to the lot of a levir who was unworthy of her.[19] When [the levir] came before Abaye the latter said to him, 'Submit to her halizah and you will thereby wed her'. Said R. Papa to him, 'Does not the Master accept the [relevant] ruling of R. Johanan?'[20] — 'What then could I tell him?' [the other asked]. 'Tell him', the first replied, '"submit to her halizah on condition that she gives you two hundred zuz."' After [the levir] had submitted to halizah at her hand [Abaye] said to her,[18] 'Go and give him [the stipulated sum]'.[21] 'She', R. Papa replied, 'was merely fooling him';[22] was it not, in fact taught: If a man escaping from prison beheld a ferry boat and said [to the ferryman], 'Take a denar and lead me across',[23] [the latter] can only claim his ordinary fare.[24] From this then it is evident that the one can say to the other, ‘I was merely fooling you’; so here also[25] [the woman may say], ‘I was merely fooling you’. ‘Where is your father?’[26] [Abaye] asked him. — ‘In town’, the other replied. ‘Where is your mother?’[26] — ‘In town’, the other again replied. He set his eyes upon them and they died.

Our Rabbis taught:[27] A halizah under a false assumption is valid; a letter of divorce [given] under a false assumption is invalid.[28] A halizah under coercion is invalid; a letter of divorce [given] under compulsion is valid. How is this[29] to be understood? If it is a case where the man [ultimately][30] says, ‘I am willing’, the halizah also [should be valid]; and if he does not say, ‘I am willing’, a letter of divorce also should not [be valid]! — It is this that was meant: A halizah under a false assumption is always valid, and a letter of divorce [given] on a false assumption is always invalid; but a halizah under coercion and a letter of divorce [given] under coercion are sometimes valid and sometimes invalid, the former when the man [ultimately][30] declared, ‘I am willing’, and the latter, when he did not declare, ‘I am willing’. For it was taught: He shall offer it[31] teaches that the man is coerced.[32] It might [be assumed that the sacrifice may be offered up] against his will, it was, therefore, expressly stated, In accordance with his will.[33] How then [are the two texts to be reconciled]? He is subjected to pressure until he says, ‘I am willing’. And so you find in the case of letters of divorce for women: The man[34] is subjected to pressure until he says, ‘I am willing’.[35]

Raba reported in the name of R. Sehora in the name of R. Huna: Halizah may be arranged even though [the parties][36] are unknown[37] A declaration of refusal[38] may be arranged even though the parties[39] are unknown.[37] For this reason[40] no certificate of halizah may be written[41] unless the parties are known,[42] and no certificate of mi'un[43] may be written[41] unless the parties are known,[42] for fear of an erring Beth din.[44]

Raba in his own name, however, stated: halizah must not be arranged unless the parties[45] are known,[46] nor may a declaration of refusal[43] be heard unless the parties[47] are known.[46] For this reason[48] it is permissible[49] to write a certificate of halizah[50] even though the parties are not known,[51] and it is also permissible[49] to write a certificate of mi'un[52] even though the parties are not known,[51] and we are not afraid of an erring Beth din.[53]

(13) I.e., to contract the levirate marriage.

(14) She was lame or suffered from some other chronic disease which disabled her from standing up. Another interpretation: Her ‘sitting’, i.e., her abstention from the marriage is her ‘standing’, i.e., salvation.

(15) Cf. Bah.

(16) I.e., did she know why he insisted on marrying a disabled woman? According to the second interpretation the question was whether she knew anything against his character.

(17) After which he would get rid of her. Lit., ‘and he desires to eat it from her’.

(18) The sister-in-law.

(19) But who insisted on contracting with her the levirate marriage.

(20) Requiring both the man and the woman to be of the unanimous intention, during the ceremony, of fulfilling the commandment of halizah. V. supra.

(21) Though the halizah was in any case valid, Abaye held that the condition must be complied with.

(22) Lit., ‘(the trick of) "I fooled with you", she did to him’. Since the halizah is valid, and since it is the levir's duty to perform it, no legal obligation is incurred by promising him an excessive sum for doing that which it was his duty to do.

(23) An excessive fee for crossing a river.

(24) B.K. 116a.

(42) To the writers who witnessed the ceremony.

(43) Mi'un. V. Glos.

(44) I.e., a second Beth din who might be called upon to deal with the question of the remarriage of the parties and who might be unaware of the law that halizah and mi'un may be arranged even for unknown persons, and who, in their reliance on the written certificate, might permit the woman to marry again; overlooking the fact that the usual declaration that the parties were known to the writers (cf. supra note 1) was wanting from the certificate.

(45) V. supra p. 732, n. 10.

(53) Cf. supra note 4 mutatis mutandis. Since the first Beth din must know the parties the question of mistaken identity does not arise.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 106b

MISHNAH. [THIS IS THE PROCEDURE IN THE PERFORMANCE OF] THE COMMANDMENT OF HALIZAH: HE[1] AND HIS DECEASED BROTHER'S WIFE COME UNTO THE BETH DIN, AND [THE LATTER] OFFER HIM SUCH ADVICE AS IS SUITABLE TO HIS CONDITION,[2] FOR IT IS SAID IN THE SCRIPTURES, THEN THE ELDERS OF HIS CITY SHALL CALL HIM AND SPEAK UNTO HIM.[3] SHE THEN ANNOUNCES: MY HUSBAND'S BROTHER REFUSETH TO RAISE UP UNTO HIS BROTHER A NAME IN ISRAEL; HE WILL NOT PERFORM THE DUTY OF A HUSBAND'S BROTHER UNTO ME.[4] THEN HE MAKES THE DECLARATION: I LIKE NOT TO TAKE HER.[5] [THESE FORMULAE] WERE ALWAYS SPOKEN IN THE HOLY TONGUE.[6] THEN SHALL HIS BROTHER'S WIFE DRAW NIGH UNTO HIM IN THE PRESENCE OF THE THE ELDERS AND DRAW[7] HIS SHOE FROM OFF HIS FOOT, AND SPIT BEFORE[8] HIS FACE,[9] SUCH SPITTLE AS THE JUDGES CAN SEE, AND SHE RAISES HER VOICE AND SAYS:[10] SO SHALL IT BE DONE UNTO THE MAN THAT DOTH NOT BUILD UP HIS BROTHER'S HOUSE,[11] THUS FAR[12] USED THEY TO RECITE.[13] WHEN, HOWEVER, R. HYRKANUS, UNDER THE TEREBINTH AT KEFAR ETAM,[14] ONCE DICTATED THE READING AND COMPLETED THE ENTIRE SECTION,[15] THE PRACTICE WAS ESTABLISHED TO COMPLETE THE ENTIRE SECTION.

[THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, ‘THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN[16] OFF’,[17] IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES.[18] R. JUDAH, HOWEVER, RULED: IT IS A DUTY INCUMBENT UPON ALL PRESENT TO CRY ‘[THE MAN][19] THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN[16] OFF’.[17]

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated: [This is the procedure in the performance of] the commandment of halizah: She recites;[20] he recites;[21] she draws off his shoe, spits and recites.[22] What does he teach us [by this statement]? This is our very Mishnah! — It is this that he teaches us: The prescribed procedure is such, but if the order was reversed, it does not matter. So it was also taught: Whether the drawing off of the shoe preceded the spitting or whether the spitting preceded the drawing off, the act is valid.[23]

Abaye ruled: The man who dictates the halizah formulae[24] shall not read for the woman [the word] not[25] separately and [the clause] he will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me[26] separately, since this[27] would convey the meaning, ‘He desires to perform the duty of a husband's brother to me’; but [should read without a pause]. He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me. Nor shall he read for the levir [the word] not[28] separately and [the clause] I like[28] separately; for this[27] would convey the meaning. ‘I like to take her’; but [he should read without a pause], I like not to take her.[29] Raba, however, stated: This[30] is only the conclusion[31] of a sentence, and in a concluding clause [a pause] is of no consequence.[32]

R. Ashi found R. Kahana making a painful effort to read out for a woman,[33] He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me,[34] [without a pause]. ‘Does not the Master,’ he asked him, ‘accept the ruling of Raba?’[35] — ‘Raba’, the other replied, ‘admits in [the case of the formula] He will not perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me[34] [that no pause is permitted].[36]

Abaye stated: The person who writes a certificate of halizah shall word it as follows: ‘We read out for her[37] from My husband's brother refuseth[38] to[39] will perform the duty of a husband's brother unto me;[40] and we read out for him[41] from not[42] to[39] to take her;[43] and we read out for her from So[44] to[45] him that had his shoe drawn off.[46]

Mar Zutra ruled [the paper][47] and copied the full text.[48] Mar b. Idi[49] demurred: But, surely, [a section only of the Pentateuch] is not permitted to be written![50] The law, however, is in agreement with the ruling of Mar Zutra.[51]

Abaye stated: If, when she spat. the wind carried the spittle away,[52] her act is invalid.[53] What is the reason? — It is necessary that she shall spit before[54] his face.[44] If, therefore, he was tall and she was short, and the wind carried the spittle away,[55] her act is deemed to have been[56] before his face.[57] If, however, she was tall and he was short, it is necessary that [the spittle] shall drop to the level of his face before[58] it disappears.

Raba stated: If she ate garlic and then spat[59] or if she ate a clod of earth and then spat,[59] her act is invalid.[53] What is the reason? — Because it is necessary that she shall spit[44] of her own free will, which is not the case here.[60]

Raba further stated: The judges must see the spittle issuing from the mouth of the sister-in-law, because it is written in Scripture Before the eyes of the elders . . . and spit.[61]

[THAT] HIS NAME SHALL BE CALLED IN ISRAEL, ‘THE HOUSE OF HIM THAT HAD HIS SHOE DRAWN OFF’ IS A COMMANDMENT [TO BE PERFORMED] BY THE JUDGES AND NOT BY THE DISCIPLES. It was taught: R. Judah stated: We were once sitting before R. Tarfon when a sister-in-law came to perform halizah, and he said to us, ‘Exclaim all of you: Haluz ha-na'al,[62] haluz ha-na'al, haluz ha-na'al!’ [

CHAPTER XIII

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: ONLY THOSE[1] WHO ARE BETROTHED[2] MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL;[3] BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: BOTH THOSE WHO ARE BETROTHED AND THOSE WHO ARE MARRIED. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL[3] MAY BE MADE] AGAINST A HUSBAND BUT NOT AGAINST A LEVIR;[4] BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER AGAINST A HUSBAND OR AGAINST A LEVIR. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [THE DECLARATION][5] MUST BE MADE IN HIS PRESENCE, BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER IN HIS PRESENCE OR NOT IN HIS PRESENCE. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: [THE DECLARATION[5] MUST BE MADE] BEFORE BETH DIN, BUT BETH HILLEL RULED: EITHER BEFORE BETH DIN OR NOT BEFORE BETH DIN.

BETH HILLEL SAID TO BETH SHAMMAI: [A GIRL] MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL WHILE SHE IS A MINOR EVEN FOUR OR FIVE TIMES.[6] BETH SHAMMAI, HOWEVER, ANSWERED THEM: THE DAUGHTERS OF ISRAEL ARE NOT OWNERLESS PROPERTY,[7] BUT, [IF ONE] MAKES A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, SHE MUST WAIT TILL SHE IS OF AGE, AND DECLARE HER REFUSAL[8] AND MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: What is Beth Shammai's reason?[9] Because no stipulation is attachable to a marriage;[10] and were a married minor to be allowed to exercise the right of refusal, it would come to be assumed[11] that a stipulation is attachable to a marriage.[12] What reason, however, could be advanced[13] where she only entered the bridal chamber[14] and no cohabitation had taken place?[15] Because no condition is attachable to an entry into the bridal chamber.[16] What reason, however, could be advanced[13] where the father[17] entrusted her to the representatives of the husband?[18] — The Rabbis made no distinction.[19] And Beth Hillel?[20] — It is well known that the marriage of a minor is only Rabbinically valid.[21]

Both Rabbah and R. Joseph declared: The reason of Beth Shammai[22] is that no man wishes to treat his cohabitation as mere fornication.[23] What, however, can be the reason[22] where she only entered the bridal chamber and no cohabitation took place?[24] No man would like his bridal chamber to be [an introduction to] a forbidden act.[25] What reason,[22] then, could be advanced where the father[26] had entrusted her to the representatives of the husband?[27] — The Rabbis made no distinction.[28] And Beth Hillel?[29] — Since [a minor's marriage] involves[30] betrothal and kethubah no one would suggest that her husband's cohabitation was an act of fornication.

R. Papa explained: Beth Shammai's reason[31] is because of the usufruct,[32] and Beth Hillel's reason also is because of the usufruct.[32] ‘Beth Shammai's reason is because of the usufruct’, for should you say that a married minor may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband][33] might [indiscriminately] pluck [the fruit] and consume it, [knowing as he does] that she might leave him at any moment.[34] Beth Hillel, however, [say]: On the contrary; since it is laid down that she may exercise the right of refusal, [her husband] would make every effort to improve her property, fearing that if [he should] not [do this], her relatives might give her their advice [against him] and thus take her away from him.

Raba stated: The real reason[31] of Beth Shammai is because no man would take the trouble to prepare a meal[35] and then spoil it.[36] And Beth Hillel?[37] — Both are pleased [to be married to each other][38] in order that they may be known as married people.[39]

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . AGAINST A HUSBAND etc. R. Oshaia stated: She may[40] make a declaration of refusal in respect of his ma'amar[41] but she has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond.[42]

Said R. Hisda: What is R. Oshaia's reason? — She has the power to annul a ma'amar which is effected with her consent; she has no power, however, to sever the levirate bond since it is binding on her against her will.[43] But, surely, [levirate marriage by] cohabitation may be effected against her will[44]

(1) Young girls who are minors and whose fathers are dead. v. infra n. 2.

(2) With the permission of their mother or brothers into whose charge they pass after the death of their fathers.

(3) Mi'un (v. Glos.) and no divorce is required.

(4) The levirate bond with whom can he severed by halizah only. Bah deletes ‘but not . . . levir’.

(5) Cf. supra n. 3.

(6) And may marry again after each refusal.

(7) To be taken up by man after man without receiving proper divorce from the one before being betrothed or married to the other

(8) This is explained in the Gemara infra.

(9) For ruling that ONLY BETROTHED WOMEN MAY EXERCISE THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL and that consequently a married minor may not exercise the right.

(10) And the validity of the marriage is not in any way impaired even if the condition that was attached to it was not fulfilled. The law assumes that the man tacitly renounces, on cohabitation, the condition.

(11) The invalidity of her marriage being assumed to be due, not to her minority, but to some unfulfilled stipulation that was attached to her marriage.

(12) Even in the case of one who is of age. Hence Beth Shammai's ruling in our Mishnah. Cf. supra note 1.

(13) For the prohibition of mi'un. V. Glos.

(14) Huppah, v. Glos.

(15) In such a case, since consummation of marriage has not taken place, there is, surely, no need to provide against the erroneous assumption of the validity of a stipulation in consummated marriage!

(16) If a minor at such a stage in her marriage were allowed mi'un it might be assumed that the reason why her union was severed without a divorce was not because of her minority but owing to an unfulfilled condition that was attached to her entry into the bridal chamber, and so it would be concluded erroneously that even in the case of one who is of age a condition attached is valid.

(17) I.e., his successors in authority over the minor, after his death, viz., his wife and sons. (Cf. supra p. 738, n. 2). Where a father is alive the law of mi'un (with the exception of the case mentioned supra p. 2, n. 6) does not apply, since he has the right to give her away in perfect and proper marriage while she is a minor.

(18) An act which, though regarded as marriage, is a stage preceding that of entry into the bridal chamber, where a condition is valid, even in the case of a bride who is of age.

(19) Between a marriage fully consummated and one in its earlier stage. Since both are cases of marriage, permissibility of mi'un in the latter might lead to an erroneous conclusion concerning the former.

(20) Why do they not provide against the possibility of erroneous conclusions.

(21) No one would draw comparisons between a marriage the validity of which is only Rabbinical and one which is Pentateuchally binding.

(22) V. Supra p. 739, n. 1.

(23) Which would be the case were a married minor to be allowed to leave her husband by mi'un only without a proper divorce. Mi'un was, therefore, forbidden in order to encourage the marriage of orphan minors who, if they remain unmarried, are subject to the dangers of immorality and prostitution. Cf. infra 112b.

(24) In which case the reason given is inapplicable.

(25) Retrospective prostitution.

(26) V. Supra p. 739, n. 9.

(27) Though such an act on the part of the minor's mother or brothers constitutes marriage in accordance with Rabbinic law, as does such an act on the part of the father even in the case of one who is of age (cf. Keth. 48b), nevertheless the question of fornication does not in such a case arise. Why, then, do Beth Shammai forbid mi'un even at this stage of marriage?

(28) Cf. supra p. 739, n. 11.
(29) How, in view of the reason advanced, could they allow mi'un even in marriage!
(30) Lit., ‘there is’.
(31) V. supra p. 739, n. 1.
(32) Of the minor's melog (v. Glos.) property.
(33) Who after marriage is entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.
(34) Lit., ‘for in the end she stands to go out’.
(35) The wedding feast.
(36) Had mi'un been allowed after a marriage no one would, for this reason, ever marry a minor; and this might lead to immoral consequences. Cf. supra p. 740, n. 2.
(37) v. p. 740, n. 8.
(38) Despite the objections pointed out by Beth Shammai.
(39) The possible loss does not, therefore, prevent a man from marrying a minor.
(40) According to Beth Hillel who allow the right of refusal even against a levir.
(41) If the levir made a ma'amar, she can annul it by mi'un, and no divorce is required.
(42) Only halizah can sever the levirate bond. In ordinary cases where the levir addressed to the yebamah a ma'amar, she requires for her freedom both a divorce to annul the effect of the ma'amar, and halizah to sever the levirate bond.
(43) Because it is due to her marriage with the deceased brother, which, since she did not exercise her right of refusal against him, remained valid.
(44) Cf. supra 53b, 54a.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 107b

and yet she may annul it! — [This,] however, [is really the reason]: She may annul [a kinyan by] cohabitation or by a ma'amar, because it is the levir who effects it; she cannot, however, annul the levirate bond which the All Merciful has imposed upon her.

‘Ulla said: She may exercise her right of refusal even in respect of his levirate bond. What is the reason?[1] [By her refusal] she annuls the marriage of her first husband.[2]

Raba raised an objection against ‘Ulla: The rival of anyone, entitled to make a declaration of refusal,[3] who did not exercise her right, must perform the ceremony of halizah[4] [if her husband died childless] but may not contract levirate marriage.[5] But why? Let her exercise her right of refusal now and thereby annul the marriage of her first husband, and then let her rival[6] contract the levirate marriage![7] — The rival of a forbidden relative is different.[8] For Rami b. Ezekiel learnt: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against her husband she is permitted to marry his father,[9] but if against the levir[10] she is forbidden to marry his father. It is thus evident[11] that at the time she became subject to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his[12] daughter-in-law;[13] similarly here also[14] [marriage of the rival is forbidden because] at the time of her subjection to the levirate marriage she is looked upon as his daughter's rival.[15] Rab stated: If she[16] made a declaration of refusal against one[17] [of the levirs] she is forbidden [to marry] the others[17] also; her case being analogous to that of the recipient of a letter of divorce.[18] As[19] the recipient of a letter of divorce is forbidden to all [the brothers] as soon as she is forbidden to one[20] so is there no difference here also.[21]

Samuel, however, stated: If she[16] exercised her right of refusal against one[20] [of the levirs] she is permitted [to marry] the others;[17] her case being unlike that of the recipient of a letter of divorce.[18] For with the recipient of a letter of divorce[18] it is he[20] who took the initiative against her;[22] but here it is she who took the initiative against him, declaring, ‘I do not like you and I do not want you; it is you whom I dislike but I do like your fellow’.

R. Assi ruled: If she[16] made a declaration of refusal against one [levir] she is permitted [to marry] even him. May it be assumed that he is of the same opinion as R. Oshaia who maintains that a minor has no right to make a declaration of refusal in respect of his levirate bond?[23] — In respect of one levir she may well be entitled to annul [the levirate bond]; here, however, we are dealing with two levirs [the reason[24] being] that no declaration of refusal is valid against half a levirate bond.[25]

When Rabin came[26] he reported in the name of R. Johanan: If she[16] exercised her right of refusal against one[17] [of the levirs] she is permitted to marry the other brothers. [They], however did not agree with him. Who [are they who] did not agree with him?

Abaye said: Rab;[27] Raba said: R. Oshaia;[28] and others said: [Even] R. Assi.[29]

BETH SHAMMAI RULED . . . IN HIS PRESENCE etc. It was taught: Beth Hillel said to Beth Shammai, 'Did not the wife of Pishon the camel driver make her declaration of refusal in his absence?' 'Pishon the camel driver', answered Beth Shammai to Beth Hillel, 'used a reversible measure;[30] they, therefore, used against him also a reversible measure'.[31] Since, however, he was eating the usufruct[32] it is obvious that [the minor] was married to him;[33] but [if this was the case] did not Beth Shammai rule [it may be asked] that a married minor may not exercise the right of refusal![34] They bound him with two bonds.[35]

BETH SHAMMAI RULED: . . . BEFORE BETH DIN etc. Elsewhere we learned: Halizah and declarations of mi'un [must be witnessed by] three men.[36] Who is the Tanna?[37] — Rabbah replied: This [ruling is that of] Beth Shammai.[38] Abaye said: You may even say [that it is the ruling of] Beth Hillel. All that[39] Beth Hillel really stated was that no experts[40] are required; three men, however, are indeed required. As it was, in fact, taught: Beth Shammai ruled [that mi'un must he declared] before Beth din,[41] and Beth Hillel ruled: Either before a Beth din or not before a Beth din. Both, however, agree that a quorum of three is required.[42] R. Jose son of R.[43] Judah and R. Eleazar son of R. Simeon[44] ruled: [Mi'un is] valid [even if It was declared] before two.[45] R. Joseph b. Manyumi reported in the name of R. Nahman that the halachah is in agreement with this pair.[46]

BETH SHAMMAI, HOWEVER, ANSWERED . . . AND SHE DECLARES HER REFUSAL etc. But, surely, she has already made a declaration of refusal![47] — Samuel replied: [The meaning is] TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states, 'I am willing to abide by the first declaration of refusal'.[48] 'Ulla replied: Two [different statements] are here made: Either she declares her refusal 'and is betrothed after she is of age,[49] or she declares her refusal, and is married forthwith.[50]

According to 'Ulla one can well understand why the expression, TILL SHE IS OF AGE OR DECLARES HER REFUSAL[51] AND MARRIES AGAIN, was used. According to Samuel, however, it should have been stated 'TILL SHE IS OF AGE and states'.[52] — This is a difficulty. MISHNAH. WHICH MINOR MUST MAKE THE DECLARATION OF REFUSAL?[53] ANY WHOSE MOTHER OR BROTHERS HAVE GIVEN HER IN MARRIAGE WITH HER CONSENT. IF, HOWEVER, THEY GAVE HER IN MARRIAGE WITHOUT HER CONSENT SHE NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.[54]

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD WHO IS UNABLE TO TAKE CARE OF HER TOKEN OF BETROTHAL[55] NEED NOT MAKE ANY DECLARATION OF REFUSAL.[54]

R. ELIEZER[56] RULED: THE ACT OF A MINOR HAS NO VALIDITY AT ALL, BUT [SHE[57] IS TO BE REGARDED] AS ONE SEDUCED. IF, THEREFORE, SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [AND WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST SHE MAY NOT EAT TERUMAH,[58] AND IF SHE IS THE DAUGHTER OF A PRIEST [AND WAS MARRIED] TO AN ISRAELITE SHE MAY EAT TERUMAH.[59]

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN

REMARRYING][60] THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND, [THE MINOR] IS DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN[61] HIS WIFE; BUT IN THE CASE OF ANY HINDRANCE [IN REMARRYING] THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND SHE IS NOT DEEMED TO HAVE BEEN[62] HIS WIFE.

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated, and others say that it was taught In a Baraitha: Originally, a certificate of mi'un was drafted [as follows]: ‘I do not like him and I do not want him and I do not desire to be married to him’. When, however, it was observed that the formula was too long and it was feared that

---

(1) How could she annul a bond which the ‘All Merciful has imposed upon her’?

(2) The deceased; so that the levirate bond ceases to exist retrospectively as if it had never been in existence.

(3) I.e., a girl who married while she was a minor and whose father did not receive the token of her betrothal. This may occur even during the lifetime of her father if she marries a second time after she had been divorced by her first husband to whom she had been given in marriage by her father. After a divorce the father's right to give his ‘minor’ daughter in marriage ceases.

(4) With the levir, though he is the father or any other forbidden relative of the minor. It is only the rival of a woman whose marriage is Pentateuchally valid who is exempt from both levirate marriage and halizah with the forbidden relative of that woman. The marriage of a minor, who could exercise her right of refusal at any moment, is only Rabbinically valid.

(5) Supra 2b. Since after all the minor did not exercise her right of refusal her marriage is valid enough to forbid her rival's levirate marriage, as is the case with a Pentateuchally valid marriage.

(6) Who, by the declaration of refusal of the minor, ceases to be her rival.

(7) With the minor's forbidden relative.

(8) From a minor who becomes subject to halizah. While the minor may, by annulling her marriage retrospectively by the exercise of the right of mi'un, procure exemption from the halizah, her rival cannot, through the minor's exercise of this right, obtain the freedom to marry the minor's forbidden relative.

(9) Who, owing to her retrospective annulling by mi'un of her marriage with his son, is to him now a mere stranger.

(10) To whom she has become bound by the levirate obligation when her husband, against whom she did not exercise her right of mi'un, died childless.

(11) Since she is forbidden to marry the levir's father.

(12) The levir's father's.

(13) A status which she retains despite the mi'un.

(14) Though her mi'un which annulled her marriage retrospectively exempted her from halizah.

(15) Her subsequent estrangement, effected by the minor's mi'un, cannot remove her known status of forbidden relative's rival. Cf. supra note 10.

(16) A minor.

(17) Lit., ‘this’.

(18) From one of the levirs.

(19) Lit., ‘not?’

(20) The levir who gave her the letter of divorce.

(21) The mi'un which causes her to be forbidden to marry one of the brothers causes her, as in the case of divorce, to be equally forbidden to all the other brothers.

(22) And he is presumed to have acted on behalf of all his brothers.

(23) And if she did exercise It she still remains permitted to the levir, v. supra p. 741, n. 8.

(24) For the invalidity of the mi'un.

(25) She is equally bound to the two levirs, and her refusal was declared against one of them only.

(26) From Palestine to Babylon.

(27) Who stated supra that if a minor made a declaration of refusal against one of the brothers she is forbidden to all.

(28) R. Johanan permitted her to marry the brothers only where there were several of them (the reason being the same as that of R. Assi that a part of a levirate bond cannot be severed); where, however, there was only one brother R. Johanan forbids him to marry the minor who made a declaration of refusal against him. This ruling is contrary to that of R.

Oshaia who in all cases regards mi'un against a levirate bond as invalid.

(29) Much more so R. Oshaia (v. supra n. 13). Even R. Assi who, unlike R. Oshaia agrees with R. Johanan in permitting the marriage of a minor, after her mi'un, only where the number of levirs is more than one, differs, nevertheless, from him in allowing the minor to marry the very levir against whom her declaration of refusal was made.

(30) כפושה (rt. כפש 'to bend'cf.מדה כפושה, a measure of capacity having a deep receptacle at one end and a shallow one at the other, to defraud thereby sellers and buyers; ‘a false measure’. This is a metaphor expressing Pishon's double dealing with his wife in pretending merely to eat the fruit of her melog property, to which he was in fact entitled, while in reality he was encroaching upon the property itself which belonged to her.

(31) He was paid ‘measure for measure’, ‘tit for tat’. In other cases, however, mi'un must be declared before Beth din only.

(32) Of the minor's melog property.

(33) Not merely betrothed. Before marriage, even if betrothal had taken place, a husband is not entitled to the usufruct of his wife's melog property.

(34) How then could she here at all make such a declaration !

(35) Metaph. He was subjected to two penalties. קיטרי sing.קטרא (Heb. קשר) ‘knot’, ‘bond’.

(36) Supra 101b, Sanh. 2a.

(37) Whose ruling this statement represents.

(38) Who require the presence of a Beth din (v. our Mishnah) which consists of three men.

(39) Lit., ‘until here’.

(40) Mumhin, plur. of mumhe, v. Glos.

(41) ‘Of experts’. This is the reading supra 101b.

(42) Which confirms Abaye's opinion.

(43) Cur. edd., בר (‘son’), is apparently a misprint for בר (‘son of R.’), which is the reading supra, loc. cit.

(44) Cf. loc. cit. where the reading is ‘Jose’.

(45) Sanh. 2a, supra loc. cit.

(46) Who require a quorum of two only, v. supra loc. cit.

(47) When she was a minor. Why then does our Mishnah speak of a second declaration of refusal after she has become of age?

(48) By the second refusal (cf. supra n. 8) only the confirmation of the first was intended. Without such confirmation it might be possible to assume that she had changed her opinion and withdrawn her first declaration.

(49) When she may no more exercise the right of mi'un even after a betrothal only.

(50) While still a minor. Since, according to Beth Shammai, mi'un after a marriage is invalid she would not be able, once she was married, to exercise that right again. The word ותמאן translated AND DECLARES etc. should be rendered OR DECLARES etc.

(51) ‘OR . . . REFUSAL is wanting in cur. edd., but is to be added (cf. our Mishnah).

(52) That she abides by her declaration.

(53) If she desires to leave her husband.

(54) She may leave her husband without any legal formality, and may marry any other man.

(55) The money or object whereby the kinyan of betrothal is effected. Cf. Kid. 2af.

(56) Cf. Bah, Bomb. ed. and separate edd. of the Mishnah; Cur. edd., ‘Eleazar’.

(57) If she was given away in marriage.

(58) Her marriage being invalid, she remains in her father's control, and, like any other daughter of an Israelite who never married a priest, is forbidden to eat terumah.

(59) As the daughter of a priest who never married an Israelite. Cf. supra n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108a

people might mistake it for a letter of divorce,[1] the following formula was instituted: ‘On the Nth day, So-and-so the daughter of So-and-so made a declaration of refusal in our presence’.

Our Rabbis taught: What is regarded as mi'un? — If she[2] said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, or ‘I do not want the betrothal which my mother or my brothers have arranged for me’.[3] R. Judah said even more than this:[4] Even if while sitting in the bridal litter,[5] and being carried[6] from her father's house to the home of her husband, she said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, her statement[7] is regarded as[8] a declaration of refusal. R. Judah said more than this:[9] Even if, while the wedding guests were reclining [on their dining couches] in her husband's house and she was standing and waiting[10] upon them , she said to them, ‘I do not want my husband So-and-so’, her statement[11] is regarded as[12] a declaration of refusal. R. Jose b. Judah said more than this: Even if, while her husband sent her to a shopkeeper to bring him something for himself,[13] she said, ‘I do not want So-and-so my husband’, you can have no mi'un more valid than this one.[14]

R. HANINA B. ANTIGONUS RULED: ANY CHILD etc. Rab Judah reported in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Hanina b. Antigonus.

A Tanna taught: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal married herself again, her marriage, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra, is to be regarded as her declaration of refusal.

It was asked: What is the law where she[15] was only betrothed?[16] — Come and hear: If a minor who did not make a declaration of refusal betrothed herself [to another man], her betrothal, it was stated in the name of R. Judah b. Bathyra, is regarded as her declaration of refusal.

The question was raised: Do the Rabbis differ from R. Judah b. Bathyra or not? If you can find some ground for holding that they differ, [it may be asked whether only] in respect of betrothal,[17] or even in respect of marriage? And should you find some reason for holding that they differ even in respect of marriage [the question arises whether] the halachah is in agreement with him[18] or not? And if you can find some ground for holding that the halachah is in agreement with him [it may be asked whether only] in respect of marriage or also in respect of betrothal? — Come and hear: Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel that the halachah is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathyra;[19] [since it had to be stated that] the halachah [is so] it may be inferred that they differ.[20]

The question, however, still remains [whether the minor spoken of][21] is one who was married in the first instance[22] or perhaps she is one who was only betrothed?[23] — Come and hear: Abdan's[24] daughters-in-law[25] rebelled [against their husbands].[26] When Rabbi sent a pair of Rabbis to interrogate then,[27] some women said to them, ‘See your husbands are coming’. ‘May they’, they replied, ‘be your husbands!’[28] and ‘Rabbi decided: ‘No more significant mi'un than this is required’. Was not this a case of marriage?[29] — No, one of betrothal only. The halachah, however, is in agreement with R. Judah b. Bathyra, even where marriage with the first husband has taken place.

R. ELIEZER[30] RULED etc. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: I have surveyed [the rulings] of the Sages from all aspects and found no man who was so consistent in his treatment of the minor as R. Eliezer.[30] For R. Eliezer[30] regarded her as one taking a walk with [her husband] in his courtyard who, when she rises from his bosom, performs her ritual immersion[31] and is permitted to eat terumah in the evening.[32]

It was taught: R. Eliezer stated: There is no validity whatsoever in the act of a minor, and her husband is entitled neither to anything she may find,[33] nor to the work of her hands,[33] nor may he annul her vows;[34] he is not her heir[33] and he may not defile himself for her.[35] This is the general rule: She is in no respect regarded as his wife, except that it is necessary for her to make a declaration of refusal.[36] R. Joshua stated: Her husband has the right to anything she finds[37] and to the work of her hands,[37] to annul her vows,[34] to be her heir,[37] and to defile himself for her;[38] the general principle being that she is regarded as his wife in every respect, except that she may leave him[36] by a declaration of refusal.[39] Said Rabbi: The views of R. Eliezer are more acceptable than those of R. Joshua; for R. Eliezer is consistent throughout in his treatment of the minor while R. Joshua makes distinctions. What [unreasonable] distinctions does he make? — If she is regarded as his wife, she should also require a letter of divorce.[40] But according to R. Eliezer also [it may be argued] if she is not regarded as his wife, she should require no mi'un either! — Should she then depart without any formality whatever?[41]

R. ELIEZER B. JACOB RULED: etc. What is to be understood by a HINDRANCE THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND and a HINDRANCE THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND? — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: If when she was asked to marry[42] she replied, '[I must refuse the offer] owing to So-and-so my husband'; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND.[43] [If, however, she refused the offer] 'because', [she said] 'the men [who proposed] are not suitable for me'; such a HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND.

Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin gave the following explanation: If he gave her a letter of divorce, the HINDRANCE IS one THAT WAS DUE TO THE HUSBAND[44] and, therefore, he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest.[45] If, however, she exercised her right of refusal against him, the HINDRANCE is one THAT WAS NOT DUE TO THE HUSBAND and, therefore, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest.[46]

But surely, this[47] was specifically stated below: If a minor made a declaration of refusal against a man, he is permitted to marry her relatives and she is permitted to marry his relatives, and he does not disqualify her from marrying a priest; but if he gave her a letter of divorce he is forbidden to marry her relatives and she is forbidden to marry his relatives, and he also disqualifies her from marrying a priest![48] — The latter[49] is merely an explanation [of the former].[50]

MISHNAH. IF A MINOR MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN, HE IS PERMITTED [TO MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS PERMITTED TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE DOES NOT DISQUALIFY HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST;[51] BUT IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE, HE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HER RELATIVES AND SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO [MARRY] HIS RELATIVES, AND HE ALSO DISQUALIFIES HER FROM [MARRYING] A PRIEST.[52] IF HE GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND REMARRIED HER AND, AFTER SHE HAD EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM, SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.[53] IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM[54] AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND SUBSEQUENTLY GAVE HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND THEN SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM.[55]

(12) Lit., ‘behold it’.
(13) Lit., ‘an object of his’.
(14) Tosef. Yeb. XIII. Though her statement might possibly be the result of a mere outburst against her husband for troubling her with his errand, and though no one but the shopkeeper was present when she made the statement.
(15) A minor who did not make her declaration of refusal.
(16) Not married. Has betrothal the same validity as marriage?
(17) Do they require separate mi'un, but not in the case of marriage, where they agree with R. Judah.
(18) R. Judah; though he is in the minority.
(19) In respect of marriage as well as in that of betrothal.
(20) Had they all been of the same opinion there would have been no need to make the statement that the halachah agrees with him.
(21) Concerning whom it was ruled that no mi'un is required.
(22) l.e. , to her first husband.
(23) But if married, specific mi'un is required.
(24) Abdan was one of Rabbi's disciples, who, after an incident with R. Ishmael, lost his two sons the husbands of the young women here mentioned. Cf. supra 105b.
(25) Who were minors.
(26) Refusing to perform their marital obligations.
(27) To ascertain whether their refusal was in earnest.
(28) I.e., you are welcome to them.
(29) Lit ‘what not (but) that she was married’, i.e., each of them was married to her husband, and, since a mere casual remark was nevertheless accepted by Rabbi as mi'un, it may be inferred that an actual marriage with, or a betrothal to another man may even more so be regarded as mi'un.
(30) Cf. supra p. 746, n. 4.
(31) Necessitated by their connubial intercourse.
(32) If her father is a priest, though her husband is an Israelite. R. Eliezer does not regard the minor as a wife either in respect of the requirement of mi'un or in respect of any other restrictions or privileges such as those relating to terumah.
(33) To which a lawful husband is entitled.
(34) Which is the privilege of a husband. Cf. Num. XXX. 71f.
(35) If he is a priest. Only a lawful husband may. Cf. Lev. XXI, 2.
(36) If she wishes to marry another man.
(37) Rabbinic law has conferred upon him the same rights as those of a lawful husband. Cf. supra n. 4.
(38) Even if he is a priest (cf. supra n. 6). She is regarded as a meth mizwah (v. Glos.), hence he may defile himself for her though Pentateuchally she is not his proper wife.
(39) And no letter of divorce is required.
(40) Mi'un should not have been allowed.
(41) Certainly not. Hence the requirement of mi'un.
(42) While she was still living with her first husband.
(43) Since the minor has shewn by her declaration that it was her desire to continue to live with him.
(44) Since she did not exercise her right of refusal it is obvious that as far as she was concerned the union would never have been broken.
(45) Like any other divorced woman.
(46) Since she is not regarded as his wife.

(51) Since she is not regarded as his wife.
(52) Like any other divorced woman.
(53) It is only a divorced woman that must not be remarried by her first husband after she had been married to another (v. Deut. XXIV, 2-4) but not a minor who left her husband by mi'un which even cancels her status of divorcee in which she may find herself after a previous separation from her husband.
(54) Her first husband.
(55) Since her second separation from her first husband was by means of a letter of divorce, she retains the status of a divorcee. Cf. supra n. 6.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 108b

THIS IS THE GENERAL RULE: IF DIVORCE FOLLOWED MI'UN[1] SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM,[2] AND IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE[1] SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM.[3]

IF A MINOR EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN, AND THEN SHE WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO ANOTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, AND THEN TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER,[4] SHE[5] IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN.

GEMARA. It is thus[6] evident that mi'un has the power to cancel[7] divorce; but this, surely, is contradicted by the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST A MAN AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO ANOTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, AND THEN TO ANOTHER MAN WHO DIVORCED HER,[8] SHE[5] IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN, from which it is evident that mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel[7] his own divorce![9] — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: There is a break[10] [in our Mishnah], the one who taught the former[11] did not teach the latter.[11] Raba[12] said: But what contradiction is this? It is possible that mi'un[13] cancels his own divorce, but that the mi'un against his fellow[14] does not cancel his own letter of divorce! But in what way is the mi'un against his fellow different from one against himself] that it should not cancel his own[15] divorce? [Obviously for the reason that] as she is familiar with his[15] hints and gesticulations he[15] might allure her and marry her again.[16] [But if this is the case] mi'un against himself also should not cancel his divorce, [for the same reason] that as she is familiar with his hints and gesticulations he might allure her and marry her again! Surely, he[15] had already tried to allure[17] her but she did not succumb.[18]

If a contradiction, however, [exists it is that between one ruling] concerning his fellow against [another ruling] concerning his fellow: IF, HOWEVER, SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HIM AND HE REMARRIED HER, AND HAVING SUBSEQUENTLY GIVEN HER A LETTER OF DIVORCE SHE MARRIED ANOTHER MAN AND BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO HIM. The reason [then why she is forbidden to return to him is] because she BECAME A WIDOW OR WAS DIVORCED, but had she exercised her right of refusal[19] she would have been permitted to return to him,[20] from which it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has the power to cancel[21] his own divorce; but this view is contradictory to the following: IF A MINOR EXERCISED THE RIGHT OF REFUSAL AGAINST HER HUSBAND AND THEN WAS MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN WHO

DIVORCED HER, AND AFTERWARDS TO AN OTHER MAN AGAINST WHOM SHE MADE A DECLARATION OF REFUSAL, SHE[22] IS FORBIDDEN TO RETURN TO THE MAN FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, BUT IS PERMITTED TO RETURN TO HIM FROM WHOM SHE WAS SEPARATED BY HER EXERCISE OF THE RIGHT OF MI'UN. From this, then, it is evident that the mi'un against his fellow has no power to cancel[23] his own divorce! R. Eleazar replied: There is a break[24] [in our Mishnah]; the one who taught the former[25] did not teach the latter.[25] ‘Ulla replied: [The latter statement refers to a case where], for instance, she was thrice divorced, so that she appears like a grown up.[26]

Who taught [the two respective statements of our Mishnah]?[27] Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: To this may be applied the Scriptural text,[28] We have drunk our water for money; our wood cometh to us for price.[29] In the time of proscription[30] the following halachah was inquired for: If a minor left her first husband with a letter of divorce and her second husband through mi'un, may she return to her first husband? They hired a man for four hundred zuz,[31] and [through him] they addressed the enquiry to R. Akiba in prison,[32] and he stated that she was forbidden.[33] R. Judah b. Bathyra [also was asked] at Nesibis and he too forbade her.[33] Said R. Ishmael son of R. Jose: There was no need for us to [ascertain] such [an halachah],[34] For if in a prohibition involving the penalty of kareth[35] he has been permitted[36] how much more so[37] in one [involving only the penalty of] a negative commandment.[38] But the enquiry was in this manner: If [a minor] was the wife of his mother's brother, and consequently forbidden to him as a relative of the second degree,[39] and his paternal brother [subsequently] married her[40] and died,[41] may she now exercise her right of mi'un,[42] and thus annul her first marriage[43] and so be permitted to contract the levirate marriage?[44] Is[45] mi'un valid after [a husband's] death where a religious performance[46] is involved, or not? Two men were hired for four hundred zuz[47] and when they came and asked R. Akiba in prison he ruled [that such levirate marriage was] forbidden; and when R. Judah b. Bathyra [was asked] at Nesibis he also decided that it was forbidden.

R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: Rab, however, admits that she[48] is permitted to marry the brother[49] of the man whom she is forbidden [to remarry].[50] Is not this obvious? For it is only he with whose hints and gesticulations she is familiar but not his brother![51] — It might have been assumed that [marriage with] the one[52] should be forbidden as a preventive measure against the other[52] hence we were taught [that his brother may marry her]. Another reading: R. Isaac b. Ashian stated: As she[53] is forbidden to him[54] so is she forbidden to his brothers. But, surely, she is not familiar with their hints and gesticulations![55] — His brothers were forbidden [marriage with her] as a preventive measure against [marriage] with him.

(1) Irrespective of the number of times the man married and divorced her and the number of times she exercised the right of mi'un.

(2) Because her last separation was by means of a letter of divorce. Cf. supra. n. 8.

(4) Others insert here, ‘to another against whom she exercised her right of refusal’ (cf. separate edd. of the Mishnah, Alfasi and Bah).

(5) Cur. edd., ‘this is the general rule’ is here omitted in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah and Alfasi.

(6) Since it was ruled that IF MI'UN FOLLOWED DIVORCE SHE IS PERMITTED TO RETURN to her husband, despite the divorce that preceded it. Cf. supra p. 751, 15, 6.

(13) The case spoken of in the first statement of our Mishnah.
(14) Spoken of in the second statement.
(15) The first husband.
(16) Lit., ‘entangle and bring her’, i.e., he might take advantage of their earlier familiarity and insidiously ingratiate himself with her, creating dislike between her and her second husband so that she might be led to exercise her right of mi'un against the latter and return to him.
(17) Cf. supra n. 3.
(18) Lit., ‘she was not entangled’, ‘confused’. The fact that she exercised the right of refusal against him after he had married her a second time and presumably made every effort to retain her, may be regarded as proof that she would not be induced to marry him a third time. When the mi'un, however, concerns a second husband. It is quite likely that, as her separation from her first husband was not due to her mi'un but to his divorcing her, she might readily consent to return to him and thus allow him to induce her to exercise her right of mi'un against her second husband.
(19) Against her second husband.
(20) Her first husband.
(21) Lit., ‘comes . . . and cancels’.
(22) V. supra p. 752, n. 2.
(23) Lit., ‘comes...and cancels’.
(24) V. supra p. 752, n. 7.
(25) Lit., ‘this’.
(26) It is in such a case only that she may not he remarried to any of the men, even though her separation from her last husband was by mi'un. If, however, she was divorced once or twice only, the mi'un against her last husband confirms her in the state of her minority, and she may be married again by either of the men who had previously divorced her.
(27) Concerning which it was said supra that they represent the views of different authors.

(32) The payment of the exorbitant sum of four hundred zuz for obtaining the required ruling recalled to Rab's mind the text of Lamentations quoted.
(33) To return to her first husband.
(34) Since, as is shewn presently, it is obvious that the minor is permitted to marry her first husband again after she has been separated from her second husband by mi'un.
(35) Marriage with a married woman.
(36) In the case of a minor who has exercised the right of mi'un.
(37) Should one be permitted to marry her.
(38) That of again marrying one's divorced wife. Thus it has been shewn that the author of the first statement in our Mishnah was Rab and that the author of the second statement was R. Ishmael son of R. Jose. Rab, though he belonged to the first generation of Amoraim, was also among the last of the Tannaim. Hence he was sometimes described as Tanna.
(39) Forbidden by Rabbinic law. Cf. supra 21a.
(40) After the death of her first husband.
(41) Without issue, so that she became subject to levirate marriage with his paternal brother.
(42) Against her first husband, through marriage with whom she became forbidden to the levir, the man in question.
(43) And remove thereby her forbidden relationship with the levir.
(44) With the levir between whom and herself no forbidden relationship any longer exists owing to her mi'un. Cf. supra notes 7 and 8.
(45) Cur. edd. insert in parenthesis ‘her rival’.
(46) That of the levirate marriage (Deut. XXV, 5).
(47) V. Glos.
(48) A divorced minor who may not be married again by the husband who divorced her though she was separated from her second husband by mi'un.
(49) She is not regarded as his brother's divorcee.

(50) Though her mi'un does not alter her status of divorcee in respect of her former husband himself (for the reason stated supra) it does remove it as far as marriage with his brother is concerned. She is, as a result of her mi'un, no longer regarded as his brother's divorcee.

(51) And since it is only this familiarity that is the cause of the prohibition, it is obvious that where it does not apply there should be no prohibition.

(52) Lit., 'this'.

(54) The husband who divorced her.

(55) Cf. supra p. 755, n. 16. Why then should she be forbidden to marry them?

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 109a

MISHNAH. IF A MAN DIVORCED HIS WIFE AND REMARRIED HER, SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;[1] R. ELEAZAR[2] . HOWEVER, FORBIDS.[3] SIMILARLY, IF A MAN DIVORCED AN ORPHAN[4] AND REMARRIED HER,[5] SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIR;[6] R. ELEAZAR, HOWEVER, FORBIDS.

IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND WAS DIVORCED,[7] [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN 'ORPHAN' IN HER FATHER'S LIFETIME,[8] AND THEN HER HUSBAND REMARRIED HER,[9] ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR.[10]

GEMARA. 'Efa stated: What is R. Eleazar's reason?[11] Because there was a period when she was forbidden to him.[12] Said the Rabbis to 'Efa: If so, halizah also should not be required![13] And should you reply that the law is so indeed; surely [it may be pointed out] it was taught: In the name of R. Eleazar it was stated that she does perform halizah! — In truth, said 'Efa, the reason of R. Eleazar is unknown to me.

Abaye said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar:[11] He was in doubt whether it was death[14] that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage] or whether it was the marriage that preceded it[15] that subjects her to it. If it is death that subjects her to it, she should be subject to the[16] levirate marriage; and if it is the marriage preceding it[15] that subjects her to it, then there was a period when she was forbidden to him.[17]

Raba said: It was in fact obvious to R. Eleazar that it is death[14] that subjects [the widow to the levirate marriage], but while all well know of the divorce, not all are aware of the remarriage.[18] On the contrary! Remarriage gets noised abroad since the woman dwells with him! — Do we not, however, deal here [even with such a case as] where he remarried her in the evening and died in the morning?[19]

R. Ashi said, This is the reason of R. Eleazar:[20] He forbade [the levirate marriage of] these[21] as a preventive measure against the remarriage of an 'orphan' [minor] in her father's lifetime.[22] This[23] may also be logically supported; for in the final clause it was stated, IF A MINOR WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER AND SHE WAS DIVORCED [SO THAT SHE IS REGARDED] AS AN 'ORPHAN' IN HER FATHER'S LIFETIME, AND THEN REMARRIED HER HUSBAND, ALL AGREE THAT SHE IS FORBIDDEN TO MARRY THE LEVIR. Now what [need was there] to state [this when it is so] obvious![24] Consequently it must be[25] this that was taught: R. Eleazar's reason[20] is because he forbade [the levirate marriages of] those as a preventive measure against [the levirate marriage of] this one. Thus our case has been proved.

It was taught in agreement with R. Ashi: The Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor whom her father had given in marriage and who was divorced [so that she is regarded] as an ‘orphan’ in her father's lifetime, and who then remarried [her husband], that she is forbidden to [contract the levirate marriage with] the levir, because her divorce was a perfectly legal divorce, whereas her remarriage was not a perfectly legal remarriage. This,[26] however, applies only where he[27] divorced her while she was a minor[28] and remarried her while she was still a minor;[29] but if he[27] divorced her while she was a minor and remarried her when she was of age, and also if he remarried her while she was still a minor and she became of age while she was with him, and then he died,[30] she may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage.[31] In the name of R. Eleazar, however, it was stated: She must perform halizah but may not contract the levirate marriage.[32]

Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What is [the law[33] in respect of] her[34] rival?[35] — The other replied: [The prohibition against] herself is a preventive measure;[36] shall we then go so far[37] as to enact a preventive measure[38] against a preventive measure?[39] But, surely, it was taught: It was stated in the name of R. Eleazar, ‘She and her rival perform halizah’; Now can it possibly be imagined that she and her rival [are to perform halizah]? Consequently it must mean,[40] ‘either she or her rival performs halizah’![41] — Are you not [in any case obliged to] offer an explanation?[42] Explain, then,[42] as follows: She performs halizah while her rival may either perform halizah or contract the levirate marriage.

MISHNAH. WHERE TWO BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE MINORS[43] AND ORPHANS,[44] AND THE HUSBAND OF ONE OF THEM DIED,[45] [THE WIDOW][46] IS FREE[47] AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. SIMILARLY IN THE CASE OF TWO DEAF[48] [SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS] OF AGE AND [THE OTHER] A MINOR, IF THE HUSBAND OF THE MINOR DIED, THE MINOR IS FREE[47] AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE HUSBAND OF THE ELDER SISTER DIED, THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED, R. ELIEZER[49] STATED, TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN AGAINST HIM.[50] R. GAMALIEL SAID: IF SHE[51] EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF MI'UN WELL AND GOOD;[52] BUT IF [SHE DID] NOT, LET HER WAIT[53] UNTIL SHE IS OF AGE[54] WHEN THE OTHER BECOMES FREE[47] AS BEING [THE LEVIR'S] WIFE'S SISTER. R. JOSHUA SAID: WOE TO HIM[55] BECAUSE OF HIS WIFE AND WOE TO HIM BECAUSE OF HIS BROTHER'S WIFE! HE MUST ALLOW HIS WIFE TO GO[56] BY [GIVING HER] A LETTER OF DIVORCE,[57] AND HIS BROTHER'S WIFE[58] BY [SUBMITTING TO HER] HALIZAH.

GEMARA. But is this is permitted? Surely. Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things and keep away from three things. ‘A man should cling to the following three things’: Halizah, the making of peace and the annulment of vows; ‘and keep away from three things’: — From mi'un, from [receiving] deposits and from acting as surety![59] Mi'un [involving the fulfilment] of a commandment[60] is different.[61]

[Reverting to our] previous text, ‘Bar Kappara taught: A man should always cling to three things . . . Halizah’, in accordance with [a statement of] Abba Saul. For it was taught: Abba Saul said, ‘If [a levir] married his sister-in-law on account of her beauty, or in order to gratify his sexual desires ‘or with any other ulterior motive, it is as if he has infringed [the law of] incest; and I am even inclined to think that the child [from such a union] is a bastard’.[62]

‘The making of peace’, for it is written, Seek peace and pursue it[63]

---

(1) Though at the time his brother had divorced her she was forbidden to him as ‘his brother's divorcee’.

(2) Mishnah edd.: R. Eliezer.

(3) The reason is given infra.

(4) A minor who was given to him in marriage by her mother or brothers, and who is entitled, therefore, to exercise mi'un.

(5) Whether during her minority or after she had attained her majority.

(6) It is the death of her husband, not his marriage with her, that subjects her to the levir; and at the hour of his death she was no longer his divorcee but his wife.

(7) While she was still in her minority, the letter of divorce having been accepted on her behalf by her father (Rashi). (Cf. Keth. 46b) Rashi s.v. ומקבל and Sonc. ed. p. 266, n. 6.

(8) A father, in accordance with Pentateuchal law, is entitled to give his minor daughter in marriage only once. After she has been divorced, therefore, a father has no more right to give her away in marriage than her mother or brothers in the case where the father is dead. As in the latter case mi'un cancels marriage so it does in the former. The minor thus assumes the status of ‘orphan’ while her father is still alive.

(9) During her minority.

(10) If her husband died during her minority. She has the status of a divorcee because her letter of divorce, having been accepted by her father, is valid, Her subsequent marriage has no validity since her father can no longer act for her (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12) and her own act has no legal force.

(11) For forbidding to the levir his brother's divorced wife despite the fact that at the time of his brother's death she was married to him again.

(12) Lit., ‘she stood for him one hour in prohibition’; i.e,, at the time she was divorced she was forbidden to him under the penalty of kareth as his ‘brother's divorcee’. Her subsequent remarriage does not alter her status.

(13) As any other ‘brother's divorcee’.

(14) Of the childless husband,

(15) Lit.,’the first’.

(16) Lit., ‘behold she is thrust before him’.

(17) Cf. supra n. 4. Hence levirate marriage is forbidden (owing to the second possibility), and halizah is necessary (owing to the first).

(18) Should the levir, therefore, be permitted to contract with her the levirate marriage, it might be assumed by those who knew of the divorce and not of the remarriage that he married his brother's divorcee. Hence R. Eleazar's prohibition.

(19) Certainly we do, since the Mishnah applies to all possible cases. In such a case as the one mentioned the remarriage remains unknown.

(20) v. supra p. 757, n. 3.

(21) The remarried women spoken of in our Mishnah.

(22) Who, as stated in our Mishnah, may not be married by the levir because she retains the status of a divorcee.

(23) R. Ashi's explanation.

(24) As her father has no legal authority to give her in marriage, and as the remarriage that has been contracted by herself (a minor) has no validity, it is obvious that her previous legal status of divorcee remains in force and that she is, therefore, forbidden to the levir as ‘his brother's divorcee’.

(25) Lit. ‘but not’?

(26) That the Sages admit that the minor may not contract the levirate marriage.

(27) Her first husband.

(28) Her father having accepted on her behalf the letter of divorce which is thus valid.

(29) When neither she nor her father had the right to contract the marriage (cf. supra p. 756, n. 12); and where the death of the husband occurred while she was still in her minority, so that there was no cohabitation at all when she was of age.

(30) So that cohabitation between them could take place while she was of age.

(31) Since the final act of cohabitation after she becomes of age constitutes a legal kinyan of marriage.

(32) Keth. 73bf. Since it was stated that ‘the Sages agree with R. Eleazar in respect of a minor . . . in her father's lifetime’, it is obvious that R. Eleazar himself spoke of this case and presumably made it the cause of the prohibition of the levirate marriages with the others mentioned.

(33) According to R. Eleazar.

(34) A divorced minor whom the husband remarried when she was of age.

(35) Is her rival permitted levirate marriage?

(36) Against the possibility of contracting levirate marriage with an ‘orphan’ in her father's lifetime.

(37) Lit., ‘rise’.

(38) Prohibition of the levirate marriage of the rival.

(39) Cf. supra note 5. Obviously not.

(40) Lit., ‘but no?’

(41) How then could it be said supra that, according to R. Eleazar, the rival may contract the levirate marriage?

(42) The statement being obscure, and an explanation being required in any case.

(43) And given in marriage by their mother or brothers.

(44) So in accordance with the separate edd. of the Mishnah, The last two words are wanting in cur. edd.

(45) Without issue.

(46) Cur. edd., החזו ‘that’, is here omitted, in accordance with the reading of the separate edd. of the Mishnah, and the Palestinian Talmud, Cf. Wilna Gaon.

(47) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(48) Deaf and dumb, whose marriage is valid according to Rabbinic law only.

(49) Others, ‘Eleazar’.

(50) Her husband. His marriage with her (a minor) being only Rabbinically valid, his levirate bond with the elder sister renders her forbidden to him. By the mi'un of the minor the levir is able to perform the Pentateuchal law.

(51) The minor.

(52) Lit., ‘she refused’ and the elder sister is then enabled to contract the levirate marriage.

(53) I.e., she is not forbidden to her husband, despite his levirate bond with her elder sister which his brother's death had created, (Cf. supra 51a).

(54) And her marriage with her husband becomes Pentateuchally binding.

(55) The surviving brother,

(56) He may not retain her owing to the levirate bond (cf. supra note); R. Joshua, contrary to the opinion of R. Gamaliel, holding the view that a levirate bond does cause the prohibition of the widow's minor sister; and since the levirate bond is the result of a Pentateuchally binding marriage, the marriage with the minor, which is only Rabbinically valid, must be dissolved,

(57) Not by mi'un for the reason given in the Gemara infra.

(58) Who is forbidden as the sister of his divorcee. (15) To instruct a minor to exercise her right of refusal.

(59) The reasons are given infra. From this then it is obvious that mi'un is not to be encouraged. Why then is THE MINOR TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN?

(60) As is the case in our Mishnah, where the exercise of mi'un enables the levir to observe the Pentateuchal commandment of the levirate marriage.

(61) From ordinary mi'un; while the latter is to be avoided the former is to be encouraged.

(62) Supra 39b.

(63) Ps. XXXIV, 15. Pursue it רדפהו (rt. רדף).

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 109b

and [in connection with this] R. Abbahu stated that deduction is made[1] by a comparison between the two expressions of ‘pursuit’:[2] Here it is written, Seek peace and pursue it and elsewhere it is written, He that pursueth[3] after righteousness and mercy findeth life, prosperity and honour.[4]

‘The annulment of vows’, in accordance with [a statement of] R. Nathan. For it was taught: R. Nathan said, ‘If a man makes a vow it is as if he has built a high place[5] and if he fulfils it,[6] it is as if he has offered up a sacrifice upon it’.[7]

‘And keep away from three things: From mi'un’, since it is possible that when she becomes of age she will change her mind.

‘From [receiving] deposits’ [applies to deposits made by] his fellow townsman who [regards] his house as his own house.[8]

‘From acting as surety [refers to would-be] sureties in Shalzion.[9] For R. Isaac said, ‘What was meant by the Scriptural text, He that is surety for a stranger shall smart for it?[10] Evil after evil[11] comes upon those who receive proselytes,[12] and upon the sureties[13] of Shalzion and upon him who rivets[14] himself to the word of the halachah.[15]

That ‘those who receive proselytes’, [bring evil upon themselves, is deduced] in accordance with [a statement of] R. Helbo. For R. Helbo stated: Proselytes are hurtful to Israel as a sore on the skin.[16]

‘The sureties of Shalzion [bring evil upon themselves]’ because [in that place] they practice ‘pull out and thrust in’.[17]

‘Who rivets himself to the word of the halachah’, [brings evil upon himself], for it was taught: R. Jose said, ‘Whosoever says that he has no [desire to study the] Torah, has no [reward for the study of the] Torah’. Is not this obvious? — But [this must be the meaning]: ‘Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah[18] has only [reward for the study of the] Torah’. This, however, is also obvious! — But [the meaning really is] that he has no [reward] even [for the study of the] Torah. What is the reason? — R. Papa replied: Scripture said, That ye may learn them and observe to do them,[19] whosoever is [engaged] in observance[20] is [also regarded as engaged] in study, but whosoever is not [engaged] in observance is not [regarded as engaged] in study. And if you wish I may say: [The reading is] in fact, as was said before: ‘Whosoever says that he has only [an interest in the study of the] Torah has only [reward for the study of the] Torah’, yet [the statement] was necessary [in the case] where he teaches others and these go and do observe [the laws of the Torah]. Since it might have been assumed that he also receives reward,[21] hence we were taught [that he does not]. And if you wish I may say [that the statement] ‘who rivets himself to the word of the halachah’ [applies] to a judge who, when a lawsuit is brought before him, and he knows of an halachah [relating to a similar case], compares one case with the other[22] and, though he has a teacher, he does not go to him to inquire.[23] [Such a judge brings evil upon himself] for R. Samuel b. Nahmani stated in the name of R. Jonathan: A judge should always imagine himself as if [he had] a sword lying between his thighs, and Gehenna was open beneath him; as it is said in Scripture, Behold, it is the couch[24] of Solomon; threescore mighty men[25] are about it, of the mighty men of Israel etc. because of the dread in the night:[26] ‘because of the dread of’ Gehenna[27] which is like ‘the night’.

R. GAMALIEL SAID: IF SHE EXERCISED HER RIGHT OF MI'UN etc. R. Eleazar inquired of Rab: What is R. Gamaliel's reason?[28] Is it because he holds the opinion that the betrothal of a minor remains in a suspended condition[29] and as she grows up it grows with her[30] even though no cohabitation has taken place;[31] or is the reason because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby, but thereby only,[32] [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,[33] but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not? — The other replied, This is R. Gamaliel's reason: Because he is of the opinion that when a man betroths the sister of his sister-in-law the latter procures her exemption thereby but thereby only[32] [and consequently] only if cohabitation has taken place is the elder sister exempt,[33] but if no cohabitation has taken place she is not.

Said R. Shesheth: It seems[34] that Rab made this statement while he was sleepy and about to doze off;[35] for it was taught: If a man betrothed a minor, her betrothal remains in a suspended condition. Now, what [is meant by] ‘a suspended condition’ ? Obviously[36] that as she grows up it grows up with her[37] even though there was no cohabitation.[38] Said Rabin the son of R. Nahman to him: The matter of the betrothal of a minor[39] remains in a suspended condition. If cohabitation had taken place[40] it is valid, but if no cohabitation had taken place[40] it is not; for [in the absence of such cohabitation] she thinks ‘He has an advantage over me[41] and I have an advantage over him’.[42]

Is Rab, however, of the opinion that only if cohabitation had taken place is the betrothal valid,[43] but if there was no cohabitation it is not? Surely it was stated: Where a minor did not exercise her right of mi'un and, when she became of age, actually[44] married [another man], Rab ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from her second husband, and Samuel ruled: She requires a letter of divorce from her second husband.[45]

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 110a

Does not [this refer to a case] where he[1] did not cohabit [with her]?[2] — No; where he[1] did cohabit with her.[3] If, however, he[1] cohabited [with her] what is Samuel's reason?[4] — He holds the view that one Who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal.[5] But surely they[6] once disputed this point! For it was stated: If a man betrothed a woman conditionally,[7] and unconditionally, Rab ruled: She[8] requires from him a letter of divorce; and Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him. ‘Rab ruled: She requires from him a letter of divorce’, because as soon as he marries her he undoubtedly dispenses with his condition.[9] ‘And Samuel ruled: She requires no letter of divorce from him’, because one who performs cohabitation does so in reliance on his first betrothal![10] — [Both disputes were] necessary. For if the former[11] only had been stated, it might have been assumed that Rab adheres to his opinion there only because no condition[12] was attached [to the betrothal][13] but in the latter case,[14] where a condition was attached to it,he agrees with Samuel.[15] And if the latter case[14] only had been stated, it might have been assumed that there only[16] does Samuel maintain his view[17] but in the former[18] he agrees with Rab.[19] [Hence both were] required.

Did Rab, however, state that only where [the husband] cohabited with her[20] does she require a letter of divorce[21] but that if he did not cohabit with her none is required?[22] Surely it once happened at Naresh that a man betrothed a girl while she was a minor, and, when she attained her majority and he placed her upon the bridal chair,[23] another man came and snatched her away from him; and, though Rab's disciples, R. Beruna and R. Hananel, were present on the occasion, they did not require the girl to obtain a letter of divorce from the second man![24] — R. Papa replied: At Naresh they married[25] first and then placed [the bride] upon the bridal chair.[26] R. Ashi replied: He[27] acted improperly[28] they, therefore, treated him also improperly, and deprived him of the right of valid betrothal.[29] Said Rabina to R. Ashi: [Your explanation is] satisfactory where the man betrothed [her] with money;[30] what [however, can be said where] he betrothed her by cohabitation? — The Rabbis have declared his cohabitation to be an act of mere fornication.[31]

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer;[32] and so did R. Eleazar state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer.[32]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS[33] AND DIED, COHABITATION[34] OR HALIZAH[35] WITH ONE OF THEM EXEMPTS HER RIVAL.[36] AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO[37] TWO DEAF[38] WOMEN.[39]

[IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO] A MINOR AND TO A DEAF[38] WOMAN,[40] COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL.[41] [IF ONE WAS] POSSESSED OF HER FACULTIES AND THE OTHER WAS DEAF,[42] COHABITATION WITH THE FORMER EXEMPTS THE LATTER, BUT COHABITATION WITH THE LATTER DOES NOT EXEMPT THE FORMER. [IF ONE WAS] OF AGE AND THE OTHER A MINOR, COHABITATION WITH THE FORMER EXEMPTS THE LATTER, BUT COHABITATION

WITH THE LATTER DOES NOT EXEMPT THE FORMER.

GEMARA. Is, however, a deaf[42] woman permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If a deaf levir submitted to halizah or a deaf sister-in-law performed halizah, or if halizah was performed on a minor, the halizah is invalid![43] — R. Giddal replied in the name of Rab: [This[44] applies] to COHABITATION.[45] Raba[46] replied: It[47] may be said to apply even to halizah; one[48] referring to a woman who was originally deaf,[49] and the other[50] referring to a woman who was possessed of hearing[51] and became deaf afterwards. The 'woman who was originally deaf', leaves[52] as she entered,[53] but the 'woman who was possessed of hearing and became deaf afterwards' cannot do so, since her inability to recite [the prescribed formulae][54] acts as an obstacle.[55]

Abaye raised an objection against him: Is, however, one who was originally deaf permitted to perform halizah? Surely, we learned: If two brothers, one of whom was in possession of his faculties and the other deaf,[45] were [respectively] married to two strangers,[56] one of whom was in the possession of her faculties and the other deaf,[57] and the deaf [brother] who was the husband of the deaf woman died, what should [his brother who was] in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman in possession of her faculties, do? He marries her[58] and if he wishes to send her away,[59] he may do so.[60] If the [brother] who was in possession of his faculties, the husband of the woman who was in possession of her faculties, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf woman do? He marries [the widow] and may never divorce her.[61] Does not this apply to a woman who was originally deaf?[62] And yet it was stated that he may only marry

---

(1) Her first husband.

(2) After she had attained her majority. And since Rab nevertheless rules that no divorce from the second husband is required it is obvious that he regards her first marriage as valid!

(3) And it is this cohabitation, not their first betrothal, that constitutes the kinyan of the first marriage.

(4) Since cohabitation renders the betrothal of the first husband valid, that of the second must be invalid; why then did Samuel require the woman to be divorced from her second husband!

(5) Which was invalid. The marriage with the second husband is therefore valid and can be annulled by divorce only.

(6) Rab and Samuel.

(7) Stipulating, for instance, that she must have no bodily defect or that she must not be subject to any restrictions due to a vow she may have made.

(8) If it was discovered that she had a defect or that she was subject to the restrictions due to a vow.

(9) And valid kinyan is effected by their first cohabitation.

(10) Which was invalid; v, Keth. 72b. Why then should they dispute the same point again?

(11) Lit., 'that'; the dispute concerning a minor who did not exercise her right of mi'un, cited from Keth. 73a.

(12) This is the reading of Rashi, following the version in Keth. 73a. The reading of cur. edd. is given infra p. 766, n. 6.

(13) And the husband was obviously anxious to give the union all the necessary validity. Being well aware that the betrothal of a minor is Pentateuchally invalid he naturally 'betroths' her again by cohabitation as soon as she becomes of age.

(14) Lit., 'that'; cited from Keth. 72b.

(15) That the original condition remains in force even after consummation of the marriage.

(16) Since the condition was attached to the original betrothal,

(17) That the marriage remains dependent on the original condition and is, therefore, invalid.

(18) v. supra p. 765, n. 13.

(19) Cur. edd. read, 'For if that had been stated, (it might have been assumed that) in that case only did Rab maintain his view, because there existed a condition and as soon as (the man) cohabited with her he dispensed with his condition; but in this case it might have been assumed that he agrees with Samuel; and if this had been stated (it might have been assumed that) in this case only did Samuel maintain his view; but in that, it might have been said, he agrees with Rab'. [Rashi rejects this reading in view of the passage in Keth. 72a which states distinctly that Rab's ruling was not because he held that the man dispenses with the condition on intercourse, but because he renews betrothal at the time to avoid intercourse degenerating into mere fornication. Tosaf. s.v. בההיא retains the reading of cur. edd., and explains that it is because no man would render his intercourse mere fornication that we assume that he dispensed with the condition, since he made no mention of the condition at the time. Had he, however, repeated the condition at intercourse, the condition would stand].

(20) The minor who has attained majority.

(21) Lit., ‘yes’.

(22) Lit., ‘not’.

(23) It is assumed that this was a ceremony similar to ordinary huppah (v. Glos.).

(24) Obviously because they regarded the first marriage. though no cohabitation had taken place (v. supra n. 10), as valid, As the disciples presumably acted in accordance with the ruling of their Master, Rab, how could it be said that Rab requires a divorce only where cohabitation had taken place?

(25) Cohabitation.

(26) And this is the reason why Rab's disciples regarded the marriage with the first husband as valid and, therefore, required no divorce from the second man.

(27) The second man.

(28) In snatching away another man's wife.

(29) All betrothals are made ‘in accordance with the law of Moses and Israel’ (cf. P.B. p. 298) i.e.. the Pentateuchal, as well as Rabbinic law; hence it is within the power of the Rabbinical authorities to declare certain betrothals, such, for instance, as the present one where the girl was improperly snatched away, to be invalid.

(30) One of the forms of kinyan in marriage (cf. Kid. 2a). Since the Rabbis are empowered to confiscate a man's property they might well dispose of the money of the betrothal by treating it as a mere gift to the girl.

(31) Which has no legal validity to effect a kinyan.

(32) That THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN.

(33) Marriage with whom is only Rabbinically valid.

(34) By the levir, even during her minority, for the purpose of the levirate marriage.

(35) After she has attained her majority.

(36) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(37) Lit., ‘and so’.

(38) I.e., deaf.mute.

(39) Marriage with whom, like marriage with a minor, is only Rabbinically valid.

(40) Though the marriage with either, according to Rabbinic law, is of equal validity.

(41) Since it is uncertain, owing to the difference in their physical condition and age, which of them he preferred and which of them has consequently the greater claim to be regarded as his wife.

(42) I.e., deaf-mute.

(43) Supra 104b. How then could it be said in our Mishnah. AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN?

(44) The law in our Mishnah concerning two deaf women. V. supra n. 3.

(45) Not to halizah.

(46) Others, ‘Rabbah’. Cf. infra p. 772, n. 8.

(47) V. supra note 4.

(48) Lit. , ‘here’; our Mishnah which allows halizah in respect of a deaf woman.

(49) Even before her marriage.

(50) The Mishnah supra 104b which rules the halizah of a deaf woman to be invalid.

(51) At the time she married.

(52) The levir by means of halizah.

(53) The marriage with her husband. As the marriage was performed by means of signs and gestures so also is the halizah.

(54) Cf. supra 106b.

(55) As a deaf-mute she is unable to recite them and is consequently precluded from the performance of halizah.

(56) I.e., women who were not related to one another.

(57) I.e., deaf-mute.

(58) I.e., contracts the levirate marriage by means of signs and gestures. No halizah is permitted since the woman is incapable of reciting the prescribed formulae.

(59) After he has married her.

(60) Divorcing her, as he married her, by the use of signs and gestures.

(61) Infra 112b. The divorce of a man who is not in the possession of all his faculties cannot annul the marriage of his brother who was in the possession of all his faculties and whose marriage, therefore, subjects him to a levirate marriage that can never be annulled.

(62) Probably it does.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 110b

but not submit to halizah![1] — No, this refers to a woman who was capable of hearing[2] and became deaf afterwards.[3]

Come and hear: If two brothers of sound senses were married to two strangers[4] one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the deaf woman, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, do? He marries [the deaf widow], and if he wishes to divorce her he may do so.[5] If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was of sound senses, died, what should the [brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of the woman who was deaf, do? He may either submit to halizah or contract levirate marriage.[6] Are we not to assume that[7] as the man was originally[8] of sound senses so was she originally[8] deaf, and nevertheless it was stated that he may only[9] marry her but may not submit to her halizah![10] — Is this an argument? Each one may bear its own meaning.[11]

An objection was raised against him:[12] If two brothers, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, were married to two sisters, one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, and the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, died, what should [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, do? — [Nothing, since] the widow is released[13] by virtue of her being [the levir's] wife's sister. If [the brother who was] of sound senses, the husband of [the sister who was] of sound senses, died, what should the deaf brother, the husband of the deaf sister, do? He releases his wife by means of a letter of divorce,[14] while his brother's wife is for ever forbidden [to marry again]![15] And should you reply that here also [it is a case of a man] who was of sound senses and who became afterwards deaf, is [such a man, it may be retorted], in a position to divorce [his wife]? Surely, we learned: If she[16] became deaf, he may divorce her; if she became insane, he may not divorce her.[17] If he became deaf or insane he may never divorce her.[18] Consequently it must be a case of a man[19] who was originally[20] deaf. And since [the man spoken of] is one who was originally deaf, the woman [spoken of in the same context must] also be one who was originally deaf; and, as the sisters were such as were originally deaf, the strangers also [must be such as were] originally deaf; but in the case of the strangers we learned that [the levir] may only marry[21] but may not submit to halizah![22] The other[23] remained silent.

When he[24] visited R. Joseph, the latter said to him: Why did you raise your objections against him[23] from [teachings] which he could parry by replying that the sisters [spoken of are such as were] originally deaf, and that the strangers [are such as were originally] of sound senses who became deaf afterwards? You should rather have raised your objection against him from the following: If two deaf brothers were married to two sisters who were of sound senses, or to two deaf sisters or to two sisters one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf; and so also if two deaf sisters were married to two brothers who were of sound senses, or to two deaf brothers, or to two brothers one of whom was of sound senses and the other deaf, behold these women[25] are exempt from levirate marriage and from halizah.[26] If [however the women] were strangers[27] [the respective levirs] must marry them,[28] and if they wish to divorce them, they may do so.[29] Now, how [is this ruling][30] to be understood? If it be suggested [that it refers to brothers who were first][31] of sound senses and who became deaf afterwards,[32] could they [it may be asked] divorce [their wives]? Surely, we learned: If he[33] became deaf or insane he may never divorce her![34] This ruling must consequently refer[35] to [brothers who were] originally[31] deaf; and since they [are such as were] originally deaf, the women [referred to must] also be [such as were] originally[31] deaf; and it was nevertheless taught: 'If [the women, however], Were strangers [the respective levirs] must marry them',[36] they may thus only[37] marry them but may not submit to their halizah. This, then, presents a refutation of Rabbah![38] — This is indeed a refutation.

A MINOR AND A DEAF WOMAN etc. R. Nahman related: I once found R. Adda b. Ahabah and his son-in-law R. Hana sitting in the market place of Pumbeditha and bandying arguments[39] and [in the course of these they] stated: The ruling,[40] [IF A MAN WAS MARRIED TO] A MINOR AND TO A DEAF WOMAN, COHABITATION WITH ONE OF THEM DOES NOT EXEMPT HER RIVAL applies only to a case[41] where [the widows] became subject to him[42] through a brother of his who was of sound senses, since it is not known to us whether he[43] was more pleased with the minor or whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman; 'whether he was more pleased with the minor' because she would [in due course] reach the age of intelligence or 'whether he was more pleased with the deaf woman' because she was fully grown and in a marriageable condition; if [the widows], however, became subject to him[42] through a deaf brother of his, there is no doubt that he[44] was more pleased with the deaf woman, because she was of matrimonial age and of his kind. But I told them: Even if [the widows] became subject to him[45] through a deaf brother of his [the question of his preference still remains] a matter of doubt.

How do they[46] obtain redress?[47] — R. Hisda replied in the name of Rab: [The levir] marries the deaf widow and then releases her by a letter of divorce,[48] while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah.[49]

From this, said R. Hisda, it may be inferred that Rab is of the opinion that a deaf wife is partially acquired,[50] [while concerning] a minor [it is a matter of doubt whether] she is [properly] acquired,[51] or not acquired [at all];[52] for were it to be suggested that concerning a deaf wife [it is uncertain whether] she is acquired[51] or not acquired [at all and that] a minor is partially acquired,[50] [the question would arise] why [should the levir] marry [the deaf widow] and release her by a letter of divorce?

---

(1) Owing to the woman's incapability of reciting the prescribed formulae. How, then, could Raba (or Rabbah) state that in such a case halizah is permissible?

(2) At the time she married.

(3) After he has married her.

(4) I.e., women who were not related to one another.

(5) V. supra n. 5.

(6) Infra 112b.

(7) Lit., 'what not?'

(8) Even before marriage.

(9) Lit., 'yes'.

(10) V. p. 769, n. 8.

(11) Lit., 'that as it is, and that etc.'

(12) Raba (or Rabbah).

(13) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(14) He must not continue to live with her because she is the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.) the levirate bond with whom is, as was her marriage with her husband, Pentateuchally valid, while his own marriage with his deaf wife, though valid in Rabbinic law, is invalid in Pentateuchal law. A Rabbinically valid marriage cannot override a levirate bond which is Pentateuchal.

(15) Infra 112b. She is forbidden to her brother-in-law since she is (in Rabbinic law) his wife's (or divorcee's) sister, and she is forbidden to other men since, as a deaf-mute who is unable to recite the prescribed formulae, her brother-in-law is precluded from submitting to halizah from her, and, in consequence, she remains attached to him by the levirate bond. Now, as the levir's deafness is, in this case, an affliction from which he suffered prior to his marriage, the deafness spoken of in the two previously cited cases (since all these appear in the same contexts) must similarly refer to afflictions commenced prior to the marriage. This then presents an objection against Raba (cf. supra p. 769, n. 8)!

(16) One's wife.

(17) In accordance with a Rabbinical provision safeguarding the position of the woman who, were she to be divorced and thus remain unprotected by a husband, would be subject, owing to her mental condition, to serious moral and physical danger.

(18) Infra 112b; because his marriage which took place when he was in full possession of his senses was Pentateuchally valid, while a divorce given by him while deaf or insane would have no Pentateuchal validity.

(24) Abaye.

(25) If their husbands died without issue.

(26) Because all these marriages having been contracted by signs and gestures, are of equal validity. Each widow is, therefore, forbidden to the respective levir as his wife's sister.

(27) To one another.

(28) Halizah is forbidden, since either the levir or the sister-in-law (or both), as the case may be, is unable to recite the prescribed formulae.

(33) Cf. Bah. Cur. edd. insert: ‘If she became insane he may not divorce’.

(34) Git. 71 b. infra 112b. Cf. supra p. 771, n. 1. How, then, could it be said to be a case of deafness acquired after marriage!

(35) Lit., ‘but not?’

(36) Git. 71 b, infra 112b.

(37) Lit., ‘yes’.

(38) Or ‘Raba’. Cf. supra p. 768, n. 6 and supra p. 769, n. 8.

(39) So Tosaf. and one of Rashi's explanations. וקמקוו אקוותא (vb. קהי ‘to blunt’ and noun אקווא or אקהא ‘refutation’). Jastrow renders, ‘They were sitting and raising arguments . Another interpretation of Rashi derives the expression from the rt קוה ‘to gather’; ‘they were gathering round them an assembly of students’.

(40) Lit., ‘that which we learned’.

(41) Lit., ‘these words’.

(42) Lit., ‘she fell’.

(43) The deceased brother.

(44) The deceased brother.

(45) Lit., ‘she fell’.

(46) The minor and the deaf wife whose husband died childless and who became subject to a levir.

(47) Since one does not exempt the other (v. our Mishnah) and the deaf woman is incapable of performing halizah. Were the levir to marry the deaf widow and submit to halizah from the minor after she had attained her majority, the former would become forbidden to him by the halizah of her rival (‘If a man did not build he must never build’ , supra), the marriage of the deaf not being Pentateuchally valid to sever the levirate bond with the minor.

(48) Cf. supra n. 4.

(49) Both widows are thus released from the levir.

(50) By her husband. Lit., ‘acquired and left over’; only in a part of her person is she legally regarded as wife, Cf. infra n. 9.

(51) Completely; and she is consequently regarded as the deceased brother's proper wife.

(52) And consequently she is legally no more than a stranger. That the legal condition of relationship between the minor and her husband is different from that between the deaf wife and her husband is fairly obvious. For if they were both regarded as partially acquired, or if the acquisition of either was regarded as doubtful, their legal position would in no way differ from that of two minors or two deaf women, while, in fact, it does. (Cf. our Mishnah and the following one). From Rab's ruling, however, it is inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired and that it is the minor concerning whom it is uncertain whether she is wholly acquired or not acquired at all.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111a

Let her[1] continue to live with him in any case. For if [a deaf woman] is acquired[2] then she is of course acquired,[3] and if she is not acquired,[4] then she is a mere stranger.[5] And should you argue, 'why should the minor wait until she grows up and then performs halizah? Let her[6] continue to live with him [for the same reason[7] that] if she is [properly] acquired[4] then she is of course acquired,[8] and if she is not acquired,[4] then she is a mere stranger';[9] if so [it could be retorted] whereby should the deaf [widow] be released![10]

R. Shesheth said: Logical deduction leads also to the interpretation R. Hisda imparted to Rab's ruling.[11] For it was taught: If two brothers were married to two orphan sisters,[12] a minor and a deaf woman, and the husband of the minor died, the deaf widow is released by means of a letter of divorce[13] while the minor waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah.[14] If the husband of the deaf woman dies, the minor is released by a letter of divorce[15] while the deaf widow is forever forbidden [to marry again].[16] If, however, he cohabited with the deaf widow[17] he must give her a letter of divorce and she[18] becomes permitted [to marry any other man].[19] Now, if you grant that a deaf wife is partially acquired[20] [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether] she is [fully] acquired[21] or not acquired [at all], one can well see the reason why when he cohabited with the deaf widow he gives her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]. For you may rightly claim that in any case [she becomes permitted]. If the minor is acquired,[21] [the deaf widow] is rightly released as his wife's sister;[22] and if she is not acquired [at all] he has quite lawfully contracted with her[23] the levirate marriage.[24] If you contend, however, [that concerning] a deaf woman [it is doubtful whether] she is acquired[19] or not acquired [at all], and that a minor is partially acquired,[20] [the difficulty arises] why should the deaf widow, if he cohabited with her and gave her a letter of divorce, be permitted [to marry again] when the cohabitation with her was unlawful,[25] and an unlawful cohabitation does not release a woman?[26] — It is possible that this statement represents the view of[27] R. Nehemiah who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts [a widow] from halizah.[28]

If [this statement represents the view of] R. Nehemiah read the final clause: 'If a man was married to two orphans,[29] one of whom was a minor and the other deaf, and died 'and the levir cohabited with the minor and then cohabited with the deaf widow, or a brother of his cohabited with the deaf widow,[30] both are forbidden to him.[31] How do they obtain redress? The deaf woman is released by a letter of divorce[31] while the minor waits until she is of age 'when she performs halizah'.[32] Now,if you grant[33] that a deaf wife is partially acquired [and that concerning] a minor [it is doubtful whether she is fully] acquired or not acquired [at all],[34] and [that the opinion in this statement] is that of the Rabbis,[35] one can well understand the reason why[36] 'the minor[37] waits until she is of age, when she performs halizah', since [otherwise][38] he might cohabit with the deaf widow first,[39] and the [subsequent] cohabitation with the minor would [thereby] be rendered an unlawful cohabitation.[40] If you contend, however, [that the opinion in the statement is that of] R. Nehemiah,[41] surely he [it may be objected] ruled that an unlawful cohabitation does exempt![42] Consequently it must be concluded [that the opinion in the statement is that of] the Rabbis. Our point is thus proved.

R. Ashi said: From the first clause[43] also it may be inferred that [the opinion expressed] is that of the Rabbis. For it was stated, 'If,[44] however, he cohabited with the deaf widow he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted [to marry any other man]', but it was not stated,[45] 'If he cohabited with the minor, he must give her a letter of divorce and she becomes permitted'![46] — If this is all, there is not much force in the argument; since in respect of the deaf widow for whom no lawful redress is possible[47] mention had to be made of redress obtained through a forbidden act,[48] but concerning a minor, for whom lawful redress is possible,[49] no redress obtainable through a forbidden act was mentioned.

MISHNAH. IF A MAN WHO WAS MARRIED TO TWO ORPHANS WHO WERE MINORS DIED, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH ONE,[50] AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,[51] OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE OTHER,[51]

---

(1) Once the levir married her.

(2) As the legal wife of her husband.

(3) And having been the proper wife of the deceased, her marriage with the levir severs the levirate bond with the minor, the subsequent halizah with whom is null and void and in no way affects the validity of her marriage.

(4) As the legal wife of her husband.

(5) To the minor, halizah with whom does not concern her at all. Consequently it must be inferred that it is the deaf wife who is partially acquired, and that the doubt as to complete acquisition or none exists in the case of the minor.

(6) Once the levir married her.

(7) Given in the case of the deaf woman.

(8) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.

(9) To the deaf woman, marriage with whom does not consequently affect the validity of her marriage.

(10) Of halizah she is incapable, owing to her inability to recite the prescribed formulae; and marriage with her after a marriage had been contracted with the minor is forbidden. Hence the necessity for Rab's ruling which provides redress for the minor as well as the deaf widow.

(11) That a deaf wife is partially acquired and the legality of the acquisition of a minor is altogether doubtful.

(12) Orphan is mentioned on account of the minor.

(13) She is forbidden to live with her husband as the sister of the minor who is now his zekukah (v. Glos.), since she, as a deaf woman, is only partially acquired as wife, while the minor's acquisition by her husband (and consequently her levirate bond with the levir) might possibly have been completely valid.

(14) And is then free to marry any other man.

(15) As it is possible that the minor is not acquired at all as a wife, while the levirate bond with the deaf widow is at all events partially valid, the former is forbidden to her husband as the sister of his zekukah. (V. Glos. and cf. supra n. 11).

(16) She is forbidden to the levir as the sister of his divorcee (it being possible that the minor was completely acquired as his wife), and she is forbidden to any other man since, owing to her inability to recite the required formulae, the levir cannot release her by halizah. Even when the minor dies, and the prohibition of 'divorcee's sister' is lifted, she remains forbidden to the levir as 'brother's wife'. Since at the time she became subject to the levir as his deceased brother's wife she was for some reason unfit to contract the levirate marriage, the prohibition of 'brother's wife' comes again into force.

(17) After he had divorced the minor.

(18) Though the cohabitation was forbidden.

(19) Because (a) if the minor was to be regarded as his legal wife, the deaf woman was all the time permitted to marry a stranger since, as his wife's sister, she was never subject to the levirate obligations; and if (b) the minor was not to be regarded as his legal wife, his marriage with the deaf widow, who accordingly was not his wife's sister, was a valid levirate marriage which was duly and lawfully annulled by the letter of divorce which set her free.

(20) V. supra p. 773, n. 7.

(21) Cf. supra p. 773, n. 8.

(22) Cf. supra n. 3 (a).

(23) The deaf widow.

(24) Cf. supra n. 3 (b).

(25) Since the minor is at least partially his wife and the deaf widow is forbidden to him as his wife's sister.

(26) From the levirate obligations. Since it is possible that the deaf woman was completely acquired as wife by the deceased brother, the levirate bond between her and the levir is also fully valid, and as the partial acquisition of the minor by her husband (the levir) cannot annul such a possibly fully valid bond, the deaf widow is precluded from marrying either the levir whose partial wife's sister she is (cf. supra n. 9) or from marrying any other man to whom she can be permitted only through halizah with the levir, which she, as a deaf person, is incapable of performing. Had she been permitted to marry the levir, his cohabitation with her would have released her from any further levirate obligation, while his divorce would have set her free to marry any other man. Since, however, cohabitation with the levir is unlawful, she cannot thereby be released from her levirate obligation and should consequently remain forbidden to all men forever!

(27) Lit., ‘this, who?’

(28) V. supra 50b. Hence the permissibility for the deaf widow to marry again after she had been divorced.

(29) V. supra p. 774 n. 10.

(30) After the former had cohabited with the minor.

(31) The reason is given infra.

(32) And she is free at all events: If the minor was a lawfully acquired wife the deaf widow is exempt from the levirate marriage by the former's levirate marriage; and if the minor was not a lawfully acquired wife, the deaf widow had performed the levirate obligation by her own cohabitation with the levir through whose divorce she is now free to marry again.

(33) In respect of the two sisters spoken of in the first clause cited.

(34) Cf. supra p. 775, n. 3.

(35) Who maintain that an unlawful cohabitation does not exempt a deceased brother's widow from the levirate marriage and halizah.

(36) In the final clause, relating to a marriage with orphans who were strangers to each other.

(37) Though marriage with her by the levir should in any case be permitted. For if she was fully acquired by her husband the subsequent cohabitation by the levir with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired can have no validity to cause the minor's prohibition to him; and if she was not acquired at all she, as a stranger, should also be permitted to the levir; and in either case her divorce should set her free without the performance of halizah.

(38) If halizah were not imposed upon the minor when she attains her majority.

(39) And the minor, since it is possible that she was fully acquired, would not be exempt by the levir's cohabitation with the deaf widow who was only partially acquired.

(40) Since it followed that of the deaf widow who, having been at least partially acquired, is the minor's rival, and two rivals may not be married. As in such a case the minor could not be free before she became of age and performed halizah, a similar restriction has been imposed in the former case also.

(41) That the minor is partially acquired and that concerning the deaf woman the validity of her acquisition as a wife is in doubt.

(42) Why then should the minor have to wait until she is of age? If the deaf woman is not acquired at all the minor's cohabitation with the levir is, surely, permitted. But even if the deaf woman is acquired, and her levirate bond causes the minor to be forbidden to the levir, there should be no need for the minor to wait until she is of age and able to perform the halizah, while according to R. Nehemiah, an unlawful cohabitation also exempts a woman from the levirate marriage and halizah!

(43) Which deals with the marriage of two sisters.

(44) When the husband of the deaf sister died.

(45) In the case where the husband of the minor died.

(46) Which would be the law according to R. Nehemiah, who ruled that an unlawful cohabitation exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. The statement, consequently, must represent the view of the Rabbis, and the reason why the minor cannot be released by a letter of divorce is because cohabitation with her is unlawful since she is the sister of the levir's partially acquired wife; while she herself, in case she was fully acquired, is subject to the levirate bond, from which the marriage with her deaf sister, whose kinyan was only partial, cannot exempt her.

(47) As she is forbidden to all men including the levir, as shewn supra.

(48) It being the only possible means whereby she could marry again.

(49) She has only to wait until she is of age, when she can lawfully perform halizah and thereby obtain her freedom.

(50) Lit., ‘the first’.

(51) Lit., ‘the second’.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 111b

HE HAS NOT THEREBY RENDERED THE FIRST INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM];[1] AND THE SAME LAW IS APPLICABLE TO TWO DEAF WOMEN.

[IF ONE WAS] A MINOR AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE MINOR AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW, HE HAS RENDERED THE MINOR INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].[2] IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE DEAF WIDOW AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, HE HAS RENDERED THE DEAF WIDOW INELIGIBle [FOR HIM].[3]

[IF ONE WAS] OF SOUND SENSES AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE FORMER AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, HE DOES NOT RENDER THE FORMER INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM]. IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE LATTER, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE FORMER, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE FORMER, HE RENDERS THE LATTER INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].

[IF ONE WAS] OF AGE AND THE OTHER A MINOR, AND THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW] WHO WAS OF AGE, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, HE DOES NOT RENDER THE ELDER INELIGIBLE FOR HIM. IF THE LEVIR COHABITED WITH THE MINOR, AND THEN HE ALSO COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW WHO WAS] OF AGE, OR A BROTHER OF HIS COHABITED WITH [THE WIDOW WHO WAS] OF AGE, HE RENDERS THE MINOR INELIGIBLE [FOR HIM].

R. ELEAZAR RULED: THE MINOR IS TO BE INSTRUCTED TO EXERCISE HER RIGHT OF MI'UN AGAINST HIM.[4]

GEMARA. Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eliezer[5] . So also did R. Eleazar[6] state: The halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.[7] And [both statements[8] were] required. For if the statement had been made on the first [Mishnah] only[5] [it might have been assumed that] in that case alone did Samuel hold that the halachah is in agreement With R. Eliezer,[9] since [the levir there] had not fulfilled the commandment of the levirate marriage,[10] but in this case[11] where[12] the commandment of the levirate marriage has been fulfilled, it might have been assumed that both must be released by a letter of divorce.[13] And if the information[14] had been given on the latter[11] only, [it might have been suggested that] only in this case [is the halachah in agreement with him], because the elder is subject to levirate marriage[15] with him, but not[16] in the other case.[17] [Hence both statements were] required.

MISHNAH. IF A LEVIR WHO WAS A MINOR COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS A MINOR, THEY SHOULD BE BROUGHT UP TOGETHER.[18] IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE, SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE.[19]

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS [AFTER HER LEVIRATE MARRIAGE], ‘HE HAS NOT COHABITED WITH ME’,[20] [THE LEVlr] IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH,[21] BUT [IF HER DECLARATION WAS MADE] AFTER THIRTY DAYS, HE IS ONLY REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.[22] WHEN, HOWEVER, HE ADMITS [HER ASSERTION], HE IS COMPELLED, EVEN AFTER TWELVE MONTHS, TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.

IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH, [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND,[23] BUT IF AFTER THE DEATH OF HER HUSBAND,[24] THE LEVlr MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED[25] TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH. IF THIS,[26] HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH.[27]

GEMARA. Must it be assumed that our Mishnah[28] is not in agreement with R. Meir? For it was taught: A boy minor and a girl minor may neither perform halizah nor contract levirate marriage;[29] so R. Meir![30] — It may even be said to agree with R. Meir, for R. Meir spoke only [of the levirate marriage of a sister-in-law] who was of age to a minor, and [of one who was] a minor to [a levir that was] of age, since one of these[31] [may possibly be performing] forbidden cohabitation.[32] He did not speak, however, of a boy minor who cohabited with a girl minor, in which case both are in the same position.[33] But, surely, it was stated, IF HE COHABITED WITH A SISTER-IN-LAW WHO WAS OF AGE SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE IS OF AGE![34] — R. Hanina of Hozaah replied: If he had already cohabited [the law] is different.[35] But was it not stated: SHE SHOULD BRING HIM UP UNTIL HE is OF AGE,[36] though each act of cohabitation is a forbidden one![37] — The truth is clearly that our Mishnah cannot be in agreement with R. Meir.

Should not the text, To raise up unto his brother a name,[38] be applied here? And this minor,[39] Surely, is not capable of it![40] — Abaye replied: Scripture said, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[41] whoever he may be.[42] Raba[43] replied: Without this [text] also you could not say [that a minor may not contract levirate marriage]. For is there any act [in connection with the levirate marriage] which is at one time[44] forbidden and after a time[45] permitted? Surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Rab: Any sister-in-law to whom the instruction, Her husband's brother shall go in unto her,[41] cannot be applied at the time when she becomes subject to the levirate marriage, is indeed like the wife of a brother who has children, and is consequently forbidden![46] But then might it not be suggested that this same [principle is applicable here] also?[47] — Scripture said, If brethren dwell together,[48] even if [one brother is only] one day old.[49]

IF A SISTER-IN-LAW DECLARED WITHIN THIRTY DAYS etc. Who is it that taught that up to thirty days[50] a man may restrain himself?[51] -R. Johanan replied: It is R. Meir; for it was taught: A complaint in respect of virginity[52] [may be brought] during the first[53] thirty days;[54] so R. Meir. R. Jose said: If [the woman] was shut up [with him, the complaint must be made] forthwith; if she was not shut up [with him], it may be made even after many years.[55] Rabbah stated: It[56] may even be said [to represent the opinion of] R. Jose,[57] for R. Jose spoke there[55] only of one's betrothed with whom one is familiar,[58] but [not of] the wife of one's brother

(1) As the kinyan of both is of equal validity or invalidity, if the levir's kinyan of the first was valid, that of the other, coming as it does after it, is ineffective, while if his kinyan of the first was invalid, that of the other was equally invalid and both have the same status as strangers whom he never married. He may, therefore, retain the first who is in any case permitted to him, while the second must be released, since it is possible that the kinyan of a minor is valid and both were, therefore, the lawful wives of the deceased brother, who, as rivals, cannot both be married by the levir.

(2) This is a preventive measure against the possibility of marrying the deaf woman first. Cf. Gemara supra 111a — Rashi. Cf. infra p. 779, n. 1. [Mishnayoth edd.: ‘he does not render the minor ineligible’, the reason being if the minor is fully acquired, the act of cohabitation with the deaf-mute that followed has no validity. Should, on the other hand, the kinyan in regard to a minor be of no effect whatsoever, then she could not be considered the wife of the deceased brother, v. Bertinoro a.l.].

(3) Since it is possible that the minor is fully acquired, while in the case of the other it is certain that, as a deaf person, she is only partially acquired.

(4) Thus annulling her marriage and enabling the levir to retain the elder woman.

(5) With reference to Mishnah 109a which deals with the levirate marriage of two sisters, cf. however supra p. 760, n. 5.

(6) R. Eleazar b. Pedath, one of the Amoraim.

(7) R. Eleazar b. Shammua’, the Tanna in our Mishnah.

(8) That (a) the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar in our Mishnah and that (b) it is also in agreement with R. Eliezer's view in the Mishnah supra 109a, as stated in the Gemara supra 110a.

(9) V. supra p. 779, n. 3.

(10) There only it is permissible to teach the minor to exercise her right of mi'un, in order that the levir may be enabled to perform the commandment with the elder.

(11) Our Mishnah.

(12) The levir having cohabited with both widows.

(13) And that the minor is not to be taught to exercise her right of mi'un.

(14) That the halachah is in agreement with R. Eleazar.

(15) V. supra note 2.

(16) Cf. supra note 5.

(17) Cf. supra p. 779, n. 3, where, should the minor fail to exercise her right of mi'un, the elder widow would, as his wife's sister, be altogether exempt from the levirate marriage.

(18) Lit., ‘this with this’. As the divorce of a minor is invalid, they cannot be separated by a letter of divorce, should they desire to do so, before both have attained their majority.

(19) During his minority he cannot divorce her (cf. supra note 10).

(20) And he denies her statement.

(21) It being assumed that a period of thirty days sometimes elapses before a marriage is consummated, her word is accepted; v. Gemara.

(22) He cannot be compelled, because it is assumed that no one postpones consummation of marriage for a longer period than thirty days. His word is, therefore, accepted. As the woman, however, by her statement, declared herself to be still bound to him by the levirate bond it is necessary that she should perform halizah, to submit to which, however, the levir can only be asked, not compelled.

(23) When she is not likely to have had in her mind the possibility of ever marrying the levir. The vow is, therefore, presumed to have been due to some quarrel or misunderstanding between her and the levir and to be in no way due to a desire on her part to evade the precept of the levirate marriage.

(24) When her intention may have been to avoid marrying the levir.

(25) But may not be compelled.

(26) Avoidance of the levirate marriage.

(27) And if he refuses, the widow, who is alone to blame for the fact that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted with her, is forbidden to marry again; nor is she entitled to her kethubah.

(28) Which allows levirate marriage to a minor.

(29) Since it is possible that on attaining majority they may be found wanting in procreative powers, in consequence of which they will be unfit for the performance of the levirate obligations. As the Pentateuchal law is thus incapable of fulfilment, the sister-in-law remains forbidden to the levir as his brother's wife’.

(30) Supra 61b. (Cf. supra n. 6).

(31) I.e., the party that is of age.

(32) Cf. supra p. 781, n. 7.

(33) Both are not subject to punishment, even if their cohabitation is found to be a forbidden act and consequently may be allowed in a doubtful case such as this; cf. infra 114a.

(34) Which is not a case concerning two minors.

(35) Though the levirate marriage of a minor with one who is of age is forbidden, it is nevertheless valid ex post facto.

(36) Implying permissibility to continue to live with him.

(37) Which proves that our Mishnah permits directly, not only ex post facto, the levirate marriage of a minor.

(38) Deut. XXV, 7.

(39) As he is incapable of procreation.

(40) To raise up unto his brother a name. Why then is he allowed, the levirate marriage?

(41) Deut. XXV. 5.
(42) Even one who is incapable of fulfilling the commandment in its entirety.
(43) Others, ‘Rabbah’ (cf. Tosaf. supra 20 s,v. ואחות).
(44) Lit., ‘now’, while one of the parties is a minor.
(45) When majority is attained.
(46) Supra 30a; for all time, even when the cause of her prohibition had ceased to exist. Were not the minor then permitted the levirate marriage, this prohibition would not have been removed even after he had attained majority.
(47) I.e., that a levir who was a minor at the time his brother died may never contract levirate marriage.
(48) Deut. XXV, 5.
(49) Must the levirate marriage he contracted, cf. ibid.
(50) After his marriage.
(51) From cohabitation. This being evidently the reason why in our Mishnah the woman's statement is accepted as true.
(52) A husband's assertion that he found no tokens of virginity (cf. Deut. XXII, 13ff), and that, consequently, his wife is not entitled to her kethubah.
(53) Lit., ‘all’.
(54) After marriage; and the husband is believed when he states that he had only just then discovered her defect. If his complaint is made after thirty days, he cannot deprive his wife of her kethubah, it being assumed that her defect, if any, had been discovered by him long ago and that he had acquiesced. His present complaint is regarded as a mere pretext to penalize the woman because of some new quarrel that may have arisen between them.
(55) V. Tosef. Keth. I.
(56) The statement in our Mishnah, which implies that for thirty days after marriage a man may restrain himself. (Cf. supra note 5).
(57) Not only that of R. Meir.
(58) And since he met her in privacy consummation of marriage might well be assumed.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112a

towards whom one is rather reserved.[1]

Now, instead of being compelled to submit to halizah, let [the levir] be compelled to take [his sister-in-law] in levirate marriage! — Rab replied: [This is a case] where her letter of divorce was produced by her.[2]

An objection was raised: If within thirty days[3] a sister-in-law declared, ‘He has not cohabited with me,’ he is compelled to submit to halizah from her, whether he says ‘I have cohabited’ or whether he admits ‘I have not cohabited’; if after thirty days, he may only be requested[4] to submit to halizah from her. If she declares,[5] ‘He cohabited with me,’ and he states, ‘I did not cohabit’, behold, he may[6] release her by a letter of divorce.[7] If he declares, ‘I have cohabited’ and she states, ‘He has not cohabited with me,’ It is necessary for him, even if he withdrew his statement and admitted, ‘I have not cohabited’, [to give her] a letter of divorce[8] and [to submit to her] halizah![9] — R. Ammi replied: [The meaning is that] she requires halizah together with her letter of divorce.[10]

R. Ashi replied: There[11] the letter of divorce [was given] in respect of his levirate bond;[12] while here[13] the letter of divorce [is required in respect] of his cohabitation.[14]

[A couple] both of whom admitted[15] [that there was no consummation of the levirate marriage] once came before Raba. ‘Arrange the halizah for her’, said Raba to his disciples, ‘and dismiss her case’. ‘But, surely’, said R. Sherebya to Raba, ‘it was taught: She requires[15] both a letter of divorce and halizah!’ ‘If it was so taught’, the other replied, ‘well, then it was taught’.

Hon son of R. Nahman enquired of R. Nahman: What [is the law in respect of] her[16] rival?[17] — The other replied: Shall the rival be forbidden [to marry again] because we compel or request [the levir]![18]

IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT etc. We learned elsewhere: At first it was held that [the following] three [classes of] women must be divorced[19] and they also receive their kethubah: One[20] who declares, ‘I am unclean for you’,[21] or ‘heaven is between me and you’,[22] or ‘May I be kept away from the Jews’.[23] This ruling was afterwards withdrawn[24] in order that a wife might not cast eyes upon another man[25] and thus disgrace her husband;[26] but [instead it was ordained that] one[20] who declared, ‘I am unclean for you’[21] must bring evidence in support of her statement;[27] [in respect of a woman who tells her husband] ‘heaven is between me and you’,[22] [peace] is made between them by way of a request [addressed to the husband]; [and if a woman vowed], ‘May I be kept away from the Jews’ [the husband] invalidates his part [of the vow][28] and she may continue connubial intercourse with him, though she remains removed from [other] Jews.[29] The question was raised: What [is her relation] to the levir [if a woman had vowed],[30] ‘May I be kept from the Jews?’ Is [it assumed that][31] it occurred to her that her husband may possibly die[32] and that she might become subject to the levir[33] or not?[34] — Rab replied: The levir has not the same status as the husband;[35] and Samuel replied: The levir has the same status as the husband.

Said Abaye: Logical deduction is in agreement with Rab. For we learned, IF A WOMAN VOWED TO HAVE NO BENEFIT FROM HER BROTHER-IN-LAW, THE LATTER IS COMPELLED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH [IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND. Now, if it is [to be assumed] that it occurred to her’[36]

---

(1) Though he was alone with her no cohabitation may have taken place. מיבזז בזיז rt.בזז ‘to be shy’, ‘bashful’. Cf. כזז גזז.

(2) Lit., ‘from under her hand’. After a divorce by the levir, the levirate marriage is forbidden. It is now assumed that the letter of divorce spoken of is one by which the levir had severed their union after the consummation of their marriage.

(3) After contracting levirate marriage.

(4) He cannot be compelled.

(5) After thirty days from their marriage.

(6) If they desire their union to be severed.

(7) No halizah is necessary, the woman being believed, since more than thirty days have elapsed after their marriage.

(8) Since after thirty days it is assumed that cohabitation had taken place.

(9) Because she herself by her declaration that no cohabitation had taken place and that the levirate bond was consequently still in force has caused her own prohibition to all other men until she has performed the halizah. Now, as in this case it is specifically mentioned that a letter of divorce is required, it is to be presumed that in all cases spoken of in this Baraitha the woman had no divorce; why then in the absence of a divorce, is the levir in the first case, compelled to submit to halizah and not rather to the performance of the levirate marriage?

(10) Which is already in her possession. The clause ‘even if he withdrew’ his statement etc,’ does not emphasize the necessity of giving a letter of divorce but the ruling that where the levir first declared after thirty days that he consummated the marriage he may only be requested and not compelled to submit to halizah even though he later asserted that no cohabitation had taken place.

(11) In the first clause of the Baraitha under discussion.

(12) And this has caused the woman to be forbidden to the levir, in consequence of which halizah only but no levirate marriage is possible.

(13) In the final clause.

(14) The purport of the clause ‘even if he withdrew’ his statement etc.’ being that although the levir admitted later that no cohabitation had taken place, in consequence of which it might have been presumed that halizah alone is sufficient, a letter of divorce is nevertheless required, because, more than thirty days having elapsed after the marriage, his first statement admitting cohabitation is accepted as the true one.

(15) After the levir had first declared that consummation of marriage had taken place.

(16) A sister-in-law who declared that the levirate marriage had not been consummated.

(17) Is the rival also forbidden to marry again before the other had performed the halizah?

(18) Obviously not. The sister-in-law in question may indeed have placed herself under a prohibition as a result of her own declaration. The rival, however, since every levirate marriage is usually consummated, remains free.
(19) Even if the husband is reluctant.
(20) The wife of a priest.
(21) Through outrage. A priest is forbidden to live with a wife in such circumstances.
(22) A declaration that may be made by a woman whom her husband deprives of her connubial rights. The meaning might be: ‘The distance of the heavens lies between us’ or ‘heaven knows (if no man does) our miserable relationship’.
(23) I.e., a vow to have no sexual intercourse with any of them. Such a vow is assumed to be the result of the pain that connubial intercourse may cause her, and therefore justified.
(24) Lit., ‘they returned to say’.
(25) Whom she would arrange to marry in a place where they are unknown.
(26) By inventing the disabilities mentioned.
(27) Otherwise her assertion is disregarded.
(28) That part of the prohibition that concerns himself.
(29) For fuller notes v. Ned., Sonc, ed., pp. 279ff.
(30) During the lifetime of her husband.
(31) Though her husband is alive.
(32) Without issue.
(33) Her vow was consequently meant to include the levir; and, since her husband can only invalidate his own share, she remains forbidden to the levir.
(34) Her vow may have applied to those men only who are otherwise allowed to marry her if her husband divorced her, her object being to convince him that she had no intention of marrying any other man even after she had left him. As the levir remains in any case forbidden to her after her husband had divorced her she could not have had him in mind. Hence he should be permitted to contract levirate marriage with her.
(35) He is excluded from the vow.
(36) Even while her husband was alive, that he might die without issue and that she would, therefore, be subject to the levir.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 112b

it should have been [stated that he is only] to be requested![1] — What we are dealing with here is the case of a woman who has children, so that such a remote possibility[2] does not occur to her.

What, however, [would be the law if] she had no children? [Would the levir in that case have] to be requested! Instead, then, of stating, IF THIS, HOWEVER, WAS IN HER MIND [EVEN IF HER VOW WAS MADE] DURING THE LIFETIME OF HER HUSBAND, THE LEVIR MAY ONLY BE REQUESTED TO SUBMIT TO HER HALIZAH,[3] a distinction should have been made in the very same case:[4] This[5] is applicable only where she has children, but where she has no children he may only be requested!’ Consequently[6] it must be inferred that whether[7] she has children or not, the levir is compelled [to submit to halizah], in accordance with the opinion of Rab. Thus our contention is proved.

MISHNAH. A DEAF[8] MAN WHO MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES OR A MAN OF SOUND SENSES WHO MARRIED A DEAF WOMAN MAY, IF HE WISHES TO RELEASE HER, DO SO;[9] AND IF HE WISHES TO RETAIN HER HE MAY ALSO DO SO. AS HE MARRIES [THE WOMAN] BY GESTURES[10] SO HE DIVORCES HER BY GESTURES.

IF A MAN OF SOUND SENSES MARRIED A WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES AND SHE BECAME DEAF, HE MAY,[11] IF HE WISHES, RELEASE HER;[12] AND IF HE WISHES HE MAY RETAIN HER. IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER.[13] IF HE, HOWEVER, BECAME DEAF OR INSANE, HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.[14]

R. JOHANAN B. NURI ASKED: WHY MAY A WOMAN WHO BECAME DEAF BE DIVORCED WHILE A MAN WHO BECAME DEAF MAY NOT DIVORCE [HIS WIFE]? THEY[15] ANSWERED HIM: A MAN WHO GIVES DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED. FOR WHILE A WOMAN MAY BE DIVORCED WITH HER CONSENT AS WELL AS WITHOUT IT, A MAN CAN GIVE DIVORCE ONLY WITH HIS FULL CONSENT.

R. JOHANAN B. GUDGADA TESTIFIED CONCERNING A DEAF [MINOR] WHO WAS GIVEN IN MARRIAGE BY HER FATHER[16] THAT SHE MAY BE RELEASED BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE.[17] THEY[18] SAID TO HIM:[19] THE OTHER[20] ALSO IS IN A SIMILAR POSITION[21] .

IF TWO DEAF BROTHERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO DEAF SISTERS, OR TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, OR TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER WAS OF SOUND SENSES; AND SO ALSO IF TWO DEAF SISTERS WERE MARRIED TO TWO BROTHERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, OR TO TWO DEAF BROTHERS, OR TO TWO BROTHERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, BEHOLD THESE [WOMEN] ARE EXEMPT FROM HALIZAH AND FROM LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[22] IF [THE WOMEN, HOWEVER], WERE STRANGERS[23] [THE RESPECTIVE LEVlrs] MUST MARRY THEM,[24] AND IF THEY WISH TO DIVORCE THEM,[25] THEY MAY DO SO.[26]

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE SISTER OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT[27] , AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE[28] WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FORBIDDEN FOREVER [TO MARRY AGAIN].[29]

IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT[30] AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE MUST DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE[31] AND [HE RELEASES] HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH.[32]

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD [THE BROTHER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE THE WIDOW] IS RELEASED BY VIRTUE OF HER BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? HE

RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE. WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FOREVER FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].[33]

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE WOMAN WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DO? — HE EITHER SUBMITS TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACTS LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE WOMAN WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN WHO WAS OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST MARRY HER AND HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.[34]

IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS,[35] ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MARRIES [THE WIDOW] AND IF HE WISHES TO DIVORCE HER HE MAY DO SO. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DO? HE MAY EITHER SUBMIT TO HALIZAH OR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.

IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO STRANGERS,[35] ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES. DO? HE MUST MARRY [THE WIDOW], BUT IF HE WISHES TO DIVORCE HER HE MAY DO SO.[36] IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE WOMAN OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF WOMAN, DO? HE MUST MARRY [THE WIDOW] AND HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER.

GEMARA. Rami b. Hama stated: Wherein lies the difference between a deaf man or a deaf woman [and an imbecile] that the marriage of the former should have been legalized by the Rabbis[37] while that of the male imbecile or female imbecile was not legalized by the Rabbis? For it was taught: If an imbecile or a minor married, and then died, their wives are exempt from halizah and from the levirate marriage![38] — [In the case of] a deaf man or a deaf woman, where the Rabbinical ordinance could be carried into practice,[39] the marriage was legalized by the Rabbis; [in that of] a male, or female imbecile, where the Rabbinical ordinance cannot be carried into practice, since no one could live with a serpent in the same basket,[40] the marriage was not legalized by the Rabbis.

And wherein lies the difference between a minor [and a deaf person] that the marriage of the former should not have been legalized[41] by the Rabbis while that of the deaf person was legalized by the Rabbis? — The Rabbis have legalized the marriage of a deaf person since [Pentateuchally] he would never be able to contract a marriage;[42] they did not legalize the marriage of a minor since in due course he would be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage. But, surely, [in the case of] a girl minor, who would in due course be able to contract [a Pentateuchally valid] marriage, the Rabbis did legalize her marriage.[43] — There[44] [it was legalized] in order that people might not treat her as ownerless property.[45] And why is there a difference[46] between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un while the deaf woman should not be permitted to exercise the right of mi'un? — Because, if [the latter also were allowed to do] so,

---

(1) And not compelled; since it is the woman's fault that the levirate marriage cannot be contracted.

(2) Lit., ‘that all this’, i.e., that all her children as well as her husband would die, and that the death of the former would precede that of the latter.

(3) Which, referring to a case where the woman's intention was known, is altogether different from the previous one.

(4) Spoken of, where it is not definitely known whether the levirate marriage was or was not in her mind.

(5) That the levir is compelled to submit to halizah.

(6) Since no such distinction was drawn.

(7) Lit., ‘there is no difference’.

(8) ‘Deaf and dumb’, as is to be understood throughout by the term ‘deaf’. Marriages contracted by parties of whom one is a deaf-mute are only Rabbinically valid.

(9) By a letter of divorce.

(10) Which in the case of a deaf person take the place of the prescribed formulae.

(11) Though her marriage was Pentateuchally valid.

(12) By a letter of divorce, for the reason to be explained infra.

(13) This is a Rabbinic provision, and the reason is given in the Gemara.

(14) Because his marriage was Pentateuchally valid while his divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity.

(15) The Sages. divorce, being that of a deaf person, has no such validity. (8) The Sages.

(16) Such a marriage is Pentateuchally valid since her father is empowered to act on her behalf.

(17) Even after attaining her majority when she is no longer under her father's control.

(18) The Sages.

(19) R. Johanan b. Nuri.

(20) Lit., ‘this’, one of sound senses that became deaf, who formed the subject of R. Johanan b. Nuri's enquiry in the preceding paragraph.

(21) V. Git. 55a.

(22) As the marriages of both sisters are of equal invalidity in Pentateuchal, and of equal validity in Rabbinic law, their levirate obligations and degree of relationship are also on the same legal level. Each sister, therefore, exempts the other, as in the case of marriages between normal brothers and sisters, from both the levirate marriage and halizah.

(23) To one another; i.e., if they were not sisters or near of kin in any other way.

(24) Since no halizah is possible with a deaf-mute (v. supra p.788, n. 1) who cannot recite the formulae.

(25) After marriage.

(26) By gestures, as they did in the case of the marriages.

(27) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(28) Because the levirate bond with his sister-in-law, whose marriage (as one between normal persons) was Pentateuchally valid, causes his wife whose marriage with him (a deaf person) was only Rabbinically valid, to be forbidden to him as the sister of his zekukah (v. Glos.).

(29) Since, as a deaf man (cf. supra p.789. n. 8), he is incapable of participating in her halizah, while levirate marriage cannot be contracted because she is his wife's, or divorcee's sister.

(30) From levirate marriage and halizah.

(31) Cf. supra n. 1 mutatis mutandis.

(32) Since both he and his sister-in-law are normal persons.

(33) V. supra p.790. 2.

(34) His divorce, which has only Rabbinical, but not Pentateuchal validity, cannot sever the levirate bond between him and his sister-in-law, which arose out of the pentateuchally valid marriage of his brother.

(35) Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.

(36) Cf. supra p.789. n. 10.

(37) As is evident from our Mishnah. Since halizah was required it is obvious that the preceding marriage, without which the question of halizah could never have arisen, is recognized as valid despite the fact that a deaf-mute (cf. supra p.788. n. 1), owing to his inferior intelligence, is elsewhere ineligible to effect a kinyan.

(38) Supra 69b, 96b.

(39) Deaf-mutes might well lead a happy matrimonial life, not only when the husband or wife is deaf, but even where both are afflicted with deafness.

(40) proverb. There can be no happy or enduring matrimonial union between an imbecile and a sane person or between two imbeciles.
(41) As has been stated in the Baraitha just cited.
(42) And were not his marriage recognized as valid, at least in Rabbinic law, marriage for him would have become an impossibility.
(43) Wherein does she differ from the boy minor that she should be subject to a different law?
(44) The case of the girl minor.
(45) Take liberties with her.
(46) Since in the case of either, marriage is Pentateuchally invalid.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 113a

men would abstain from marrying her.[1]

And why is there a difference between a minor [and a deaf woman] that the former should be permitted to eat terumah[2] while a deaf woman[3] may not? For we learned, ‘R. Johanan b. Gudgada testified concerning a deaf girl whom her father gave in marriage[4] that she may be dismissed by a letter of divorce,[5] and concerning a minor, the daughter of an Israelite, who was married[6] to a priest, that she may eat [Rabbinical][7] terumah’,[8] while the deaf woman may not eat’![9] This[10] is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf man might feed a deaf woman [with such terumah]. Well, let him feed her, [since she is only in the same position] as a minor who eats nebelah![11] This[12] is a preventive measure against the possibility that a deaf [husband] might feed a wife of sound senses [with it]. But even a deaf husband might well feed his wife who was of sound senses with Rabbinical terumah![13] — A preventive measure was made against the possibility of his feeding her with Pentateuchal terumah.

And why is the minor different [from the deaf woman] that the former should be entitled to her kethubah while the deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — Because if [the latter also were] so [entitled] men would abstain from marrying her.[14]

Whence, however, is it inferred that a minor is entitled to a kethubah? — From what we learned: A minor who exercised the right of mi'un, a forbidden relative of the second degree,[15] and a woman who is incapable of procreation, are not entitled to a kethubah;[16] but [it follows[17] that one] released by a letter of divorce,[18] though a minor, is entitled to receive her kethubah.

And whence is it inferred that a deaf woman is not entitled to her kethubah? — From what was taught: If a man who was deaf or an imbecile married women of sound senses [the latter], even though the deaf man recovered his faculties or the imbecile regained his intelligence, have no claim whatsoever on [either of] them.[19] But if [the men] wished to retain them [the latter] are entitled to a kethubah of the value of[20] a maneh.[21] If, however, a man of sound senses married a woman who was deaf or an imbecile, her kethubah is valid, even if he undertook in writing to give her a hundred maneh,[22] since he himself had consented to suffer the loss.[23] The reason, then,[24] is because he himself consented; had he not consented, however, she would receive no kethubah,[25] since otherwise[26] men would abstain from marrying her.[27]

If so,[28] a kethubah should have been provided for a woman of sound senses who married a deaf man, since otherwise[29] [women] would abstain from marrying [deaf men]! — More than the man desires to marry does the woman desire to be taken in marriage.[30]

A deaf man once lived in the neighbourhood of R. Malkiu [and the latter] allowed him to take a wife to whom he had assigned in writing a sum of four hundred zuz out of his[31] estate. Raba remarked: Who is so wise as R. Malkiu who is indeed a great man. He[32] held the view: Had he wished to have a maid to wait upon him, would we not have allowed one to be bought for him?[33] How much more, [then, should his desire be fulfilled] here where there are two [reasons for complying with his request]![34]

R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man[35] no asham talui[22] is incurred.[36] It might be suggested that the following provides support to his[37] view: There are five who may not set apart terumah, and if they did so their terumah is not valid. These are they: A deaf man, an imbecile, a minor, he who gives terumah[38] from that which is not his own, and an idolater who gave terumah from that which belonged to an Israelite; and even [if the latter gave it] with the consent of the Israelite his terumah is invalid![39] — He[40] holds[41] the same view is R. Eleazar. For it was taught : R. Isaac stated in the name of R. Eleazar that the terumah of a deaf man must not be treated[42] as profane, because its validity is a matter of doubt.[43] If he[40] is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar,[44] an asham talui also should be incurred![45] — It is necessary[46] [that the offence should be similar to that of eating] one of two available pieces [of meat].[47] But does R. Eleazar require [a condition similar to that of eating] one of two pieces? Surely, it was taught : R. Eleazar stated: For [eating] the suet of a koy[48] one incurs the obligation of an asham talui![49] — Samuel is of the same opinion as R. Eleazar in one case[50] but differs from him in the other.[51]

Others read: R. Hiyya b. Ashi stated in the name of Samuel: For [unwitting intercourse with] the wife of a deaf man the obligation of an asham talui is incurred.[52] An objection was raised: There are five who may not set apart terumah![53] — He[54] holds the same view as R. Eleazar.[55]

R. Ashi asked: What is R. Eleazar's reason? Is he positive that the mind of a deaf man is feeble but in doubt whether that mind is clear[56]

(1) Because at any time throughout her life she could leave her husband by merely making her declaration of refusal. This does not apply to a minor who loses her right to mi'un as soon as she becomes of age.

(2) Even if only her mother or brother gave her in marriage to a priest.

(3) Who was not given in marriage by her father. V. infra.

(4) While she was in her minority.

(5) Even after she became of age, when it is she and not her father that receives it.

(6) By her mother or brothers after the death of her father.

(7) Cf. supra 902.

(8) ‘Ed. VII, 9, Git. 53b. Though such marriage is not Pentateuchally valid.

(9) Since only the minor, and not the deaf woman of whom the first clause speaks, was mentioned in this, the second clause.

(10) The prohibition against the eating of terumah by a deaf woman.

(11) V. Glos. Neither he nor she is subject to any punishment for the eating of forbidden food, v. infra 114a.

(12) The prohibition against the eating of terumah by the deaf woman.

(13) Since their marriage is at least Rabbinically valid.

(14) Cf. supra p.793, n. 5, mutatis mutandis. While deafness, as a rule, is an affliction for life, a minor does not forever remain in her minority.

(15) Who is forbidden in Rabbinic, though not in Pentateuchal law. Cf. supra 21a.

(16) Keth. 100b, B.M. 67a. The first mentioned, because her separation from her husband is effected even against his will; the second was penalized for contracting an unlawful marriage (cf. supra 85b); while in the case of the last the marriage is regarded as a contract under false pretenses.

(17) Since the Mishnah cited speaks only of a minor who has exercised the right of mi'un, and whose separation was, therefore, effected even without the husband's consent.

(18) Which is valid only if the husband had consented to the separation.

(19) Because, at the time the marriage had been contracted, the men were not in the possession of all their senses or faculties and were, in consequence, incapable of undertaking any monetary obligations.

(20) V. Bah. Cur. edd. omit to the end of the clause.

(21) V. Glos. [Their marriage is deemed to have taken place when the husband recovers his faculties, and at that time they were no longer virgins. Beth Joseph, Eben ha-Ezer LXVII].

(22) V. Glos.

(23) לזוק בנכסיו, lit., ‘to be damaged in his estate’. Bomb. ed. and others (cf. Bah) read לזון ‘to be maintained’.

(24) Why the deaf woman is entitled to her kethubah.

(25) Even according to Rabbinic law.

(26) Lit., ‘for if so’, i.e., if the Rabbis had entitled her to receive a kethubah.

(27) Cf. supra p.793, n. 5 mutatis mutandis.

(28) That eligibility to receive a kethubah is determined by the likelihood of the consent to marry the deaf person.

(29) Cf. supra n. 5, mutatis mutandis.

(36) Such an offering is due only when the offence is a matter of doubt (cf. infra p.796. n. 10). In this case, however, as the marriage is valid in Rabbinic law only but remains definitely invalid in Pentateuchal law, no offering could be incurred.

(39) Ter. I, 1 Shab. 153b. From this Mishnah, then, it follows, since the terumah of a deaf man is regarded as definitely invalid, that the incapacity of a deaf man is not a matter of doubt; and this apparently provides support to Samuel's view.

(47) One of which was definitely forbidden and the other definitely permitted, and it is unknown whether a person ate the one or the other. Only in such a case, where the doubt is due to the existence of two objects, is an asham talui incurred. Similarly in the case of intercourse with one of two women, when it is unknown whether the woman affected was his own wife or a forbidden stranger, an asham talui is incurred. If the doubt, however, relates to one object, it being unknown, for instance, whether a piece of fat one has eaten was of the permitted or forbidden kind, no asham talui is involved. Similarly, in the case of the deaf man's marriage, where the doubt relates to one woman, it being uncertain whether she has the status of a married woman or not, no asham talui is incurred.

or not clear,[1] though [in either case] it Is always in the same condition,[2] or is it possible that he has no doubt that the [deaf man's] mind is feeble and that it is not clear,[1] but [his doubt] here is due to this reason: Because [the deaf man] may sometimes be in a normal state[3] and sometimes in a state of imbecility? In what respect would this constitute any practical difference? — In respect of releasing his wife[4] by a letter of divorce.[5] If you grant that his mind is always in the same condition,[6] his divorce [would have the same validity] as his betrothal.[7] If, however, you contend that sometimes he is in a normal state[3] and sometimes he is in a state of imbecility, he would indeed be capable of betrothal; in no way, however, would he be capable of giving divorce.[8] What then is the decision? — This remains undecided.[9]

IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE etc. R. Isaac stated: According to the word of the Torah, an imbecile may be divorced,[10] since her case is similar to that of a woman of sound senses [who may be divorced] without her consent. What then is the reason why it was stated that she may not be divorced? — In order that people should not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.[11]

What kind [of imbecile, however, is here] to be understood? If it be suggested [that it is one] who is capable of taking care of her letter of divorce and who is also capable of taking care of herself, would people [it may be asked] treat her as if she were ownerless property! If, however, [she is one] who is unable to take care either of her letter of divorce or of herself, [how could it be said that] in accordance with the word of the Torah she may be divorced? Surely, it was stated at the school of R. Jannai, And giveth it in her hand[12] [only to her] who is capable of accepting her divorce,[13] but this one[14] is excluded since she is incapable of accepting her divorce; and, furthermore, it was taught at the school of R. Ishmael, And sendeth her out of his house,[15] only one who , when he sends her out, does not return, but this one[14] is excluded since she returns even if he sends her out! — This[16] was necessary[17] in respect of one who is capable of preserving her letter of divorce but is unable to take proper care of herself. Hence, in accordance with the word of the Torah , such an imbecile may well be divorced for, surely, she is capable of preserving her letter of divorce; the Rabbis, however, ruled that she shall not be dismissed in order that people might not treat her as a piece of ownerless property.

Abaye remarked: This[18] may also be supported by deduction. For in respect of her[14] it was stated, IF SHE BECAME AN IMBECILE HE MAY NOT DIVORCE HER, while in respect of him[19] [the statement was]. HE MAY NEVER DIVORCE HER. In what respect [it may be asked] does he[20] differ [from her] that the statement [concerning him] is NEVER while in respect of her ‘NEVER’ is not mentioned?[21] The inference, then, must be that the one is Pentateuchal, the other Rabbinical.

R. JOHANAN B. NURI ASKED etc. The question was raised: Was R. Johanan b. Nuri certain [of the law concerning] the man[22] and his question related to that of the woman , or is it possible that he was certain concerning that of the woman[23] and his question related to that of the man? — Come and hear: Since they answered him: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED. FOR WHILE A WOMAN MAY BE DIVORCED WITH HER CONSENT AS WELL AS WITHOUT IT, A MAN CAN GIVE A DIVORCE ONLY WITH HIS FULL CONSENT, it may be inferred[24] that his question related to the man .[25] On the contrary; since they said to him: THE OTHER ALSO IS IN A SIMILAR POSITION,[26] it may be inferred that his question related to the woman! — But [the fact is this]: R. Johanan b. Nuri was addressing [them[27] in the light] of their own statement. ‘According to my view’, [he argued], ‘as well as a man[28] is incapable of giving a divorce, so also is a woman[25] incapable of receiving a divorce;[29] but according to your view,[30] why should there be a difference between a man and a woman?’[31] [To this] they replied: A MAN WHO GIVES A DIVORCE IS NOT LIKE A WOMAN WHO IS DIVORCED.

R. JOHANAN . . . TESTIFIED etc. Raba stated: From the testimony of R. Johanan b. Gudgada[32] [it may be inferred that if a husband] said to witnesses, ‘See this letter of divorce which I am giving [to my wife]’, and to her he said,[33] ‘Take this bill of indebtedness’, she is nevertheless divorced. For did not R. Johanan b. Gudgada imply that [the woman's] consent was not required?[34] Here also, then, her consent is not required. Is not this obvious![35] — It might have been assumed that since he said to her, ‘Take this bill of indebtedness’[36] he has thereby cancelled [the letter of divorce], hence we were taught [that it remains valid, for] had he in fact cancelled it, he would have made his statement to the witnesses. Since, however, he did not make the statement to the witnesses he did not cancel it at all; and the only reason why he made that statement to her was[37] to conceal [his] shame.[38]

R. Isaac b. Bisna once lost the keys of the school house in a public domain[39] on a Sabbath.[40] When he came to R. Pedath[41] the latter said to him, ‘Go and lead forth some boys and girls [to the spot] and let them take a walk[1] there, for if they find [the keys] they will bring them back’. [From this] it is clearly evident that he[2] is of the opinion that if a minor eats nebelah,[3] it is not the duty of the Beth din to take it away from him.[4] May it be suggested that the following provides support for his view? A man must not say to a child, ‘Bring me[5] a key’, or ‘bring me[5] a seal’; but he may allow him to pluck or to throw![6] Abaye replied: ‘To pluck’ [may refer] to a non-perforated plant-pot,[7] and ‘to throw’ [may refer] to a neutral domain,[8] [acts which are no more than prohibitions] of the Rabbis.[9]

Come and hear: If an idolater came to extinguish [a fire],[10] he is not to be told either. ‘Put it out’ or ‘Do not put it out’, because it is not the duty of the Israelites present[11] to enforce his Sabbath rest. If a minor [Israelite], however, came to extinguish [the fire], he must be told, ‘Do not put it out’, since it is the duty of the Israelites present[11] to enforce his Sabbath rest![12] R. Johanan replied: [The child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval.[13]

Similarly, then, in respect of the idolater,[14] [it is a case] where he acts with the approval of an Israelite? Is this, however, permitted![15] — An idolater acts on his own initiative.[16]

Come and hear: If the child of haber[17] was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was an ‘am ha-rez,[18] there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with [levitically] unprepared foodstuffs;[19] and if fruit[20] was found in his[21] possession, it is not necessary [to take it from] him![22] — R. Johanan replied: The law was relaxed in respect of demai.[23]

The reason, then,[24] is because [the fruit was] demai,[23] but [had its prohibition been] certain[25] it would have been necessary to tithe it;[26] but, surely [it may be objected] R. Johanan said[27] that [a child is inhibited only] where he [appears to] act with his father's approval[28] — But [the fact is that] R. Johanan was in doubt. When, therefore, he dealt with the one subject[29] he rebutted the argument[30] and when he dealt with the other[29] he [again] rebutted the argument.[30]

Come and hear: If the child of a haber[31] who was a priest was in the habit of visiting his mother's father who was a priest and an ‘am ha-arez,[32] there is no need to apprehend that [the latter] might feed him with unclean terumah; and if fruit was found in his[33] possession it is not necessary [to take it away from] him![34] — [This refers only] to Rabbinical terumah.[35]

Come and hear: An [Israelite] child may be regularly[36] breast fed by an idolatress or an unclean beast, and there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing;[37] but he must not be directly fed with nebeloth,[38] terefoth,[39] detestable creatures or reptiles. From all these, however, he may suck, even on the Sabbath,[40] though this is forbidden to an adult.[41] Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival.[42] At any rate it was here stated that ‘there is no need to have scruples about his sucking from a detestable thing’![43] — [The permissibility] there is due to [the presence of] danger.[44]

If so, an adult also [should be permitted]![45] — [Permissibility for] an adult is dependent on medical opinion.[46] [Permissibility for] a child also should be made dependent on medical opinion![47] — R. Huna son of R. Joshua replied: The ordinary child is in danger when deprived of his[48] milk.

‘Abba Saul stated: It was our practice to suck from a clean beast on a festival’. How is one to understand this?[49] If danger was involved, [the sucking should be permitted] even on the Sabbath also; and if no danger was involved, it should be forbidden even on a festival! — This can only be understood as a case where[50] pain[51] was involved, [Abba Saul] being of the opinion [that sucking][52] is an act of indirect[53] detaching.[54] [In respect of the] Sabbath, therefore, where the prohibition[55] [is one involving the penalty] of stoning, the Rabbis have instituted a preventive measure;[56] [in respect of] a festival, however, where the prohibition[55] [is only that of] a negative precept,[57] the Rabbis have not instituted any preventive measure.

Come and hear: These ye shall not eat,[58] for they are a detestable thing[59] [is to be understood[60] as] ‘you shall not allow them to eat’,[61] this being a warning[62] to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this imply[63] that [minors] must be ordered, you shall not eat [such things’]![64] — No; that [adults] may not give them[65] with their own hands.[66]

Come and hear: No soul of you shall eat blood[67] implies[68] a warning[62] to the older men concerning the young children. Does not this signify[63] that [minors] must be told,[69] ‘Do not eat [blood]’![70] — No; that [adults] must not give them with their own hands.[66]

Come and hear: Speak . . . and say[71] conveys a warning[62] to the older [Priests] concerning the [priests who are] minors. Does not this imply that minors must be ordered not to defile themselves![72] — No; that [adults] must not defile them with their own hands.[66]

And [all the Scriptural texts cited are] required. For if we had been informed concerning detestable things only, it might have been assumed [that the law[1] applies to them], because their prohibition applies[2] to even the minutest [objectionable creature][3] but not to blood the minimum quantity of which[4] must be no less than[5] a quarter [of a log].[6] And if we had been informed concerning blood only, it might have been assumed [that the law[7] applies to this] because [the eating of it] involves the penalty of kareth, but not to reptiles. And if we had been informed concerning these two,[8] it might have been assumed [that the law[7] applies to these] because their prohibition applies equally to all but not to uncleanness.[9] And had we been informed concerning uncleanness it might have been assumed [that the law[7] applies only here because] priests are different [from other people], since more commandments have been imposed upon them,[10] but not to these.[8] [Hence the three Scriptural texts were] required.

Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES[11] AND THE OTHER DEAF WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS WHO WERE OF SOUND SENSES, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE SISTER OF SOUND SENSES, DO? — [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT AS BEING HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE MUST RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FORBIDDEN FOREVER [TO MARRY AGAIN]. Now, why should he RELEASE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE? Let her continue to live with him [since he is only like] a minor who eats nebelah.[12] — On account of the prohibition imposed upon her.

Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS OF SOUND SENSES WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES[13] AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER. DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? [NOTHING; SINCE HIS SISTER-IN-LAW] IS EXEMPT AS HIS WIFE'S SISTER. IF THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES. DIED, WHAT SHOULD THE BROTHER OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF THE DEAF SISTER, DO? — HE MUST DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, AND [RELEASE] HIS BROTHER'S WIFE BY HALIZAH. But why MUST HE DIVORCE HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE? Let her continue to live With him [since she is only like] a minor who eats nebelah![14] — Owing to the prohibition that is imposed upon him.

Raba said, Come and hear: IF TWO BROTHERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS DEAF AND THE OTHER OF SOUND SENSES, WERE MARRIED TO TWO SISTERS, ONE OF WHOM WAS OF SOUND SENSES[13] AND THE OTHER DEAF, AND THE DEAF BROTHER, THE HUSBAND

OF THE DEAF SISTER, DIED, WHAT SHOULD [THE BROTHER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, THE HUSBAND OF [THE SISTER WHO WAS] OF SOUND SENSES, DO? HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE, WHILE HIS BROTHER'S WIFE IS FOREVER FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. Now here, surely, no prohibition is involved either for him or for her, and yet it was stated, HE RELEASES HIS WIFE BY A LETTER OF DIVORCE![14] — R. Shemaia replied: This is a preventive measure against the possibility of allowing a sister-in-law to marry a stranger.[15]

Raba stated: What is the reason [why a wife is not believed in a time] of war? Because she speaks from conjecture. ‘Could it be imagined’ [she thinks][23] ‘that among all those who were killed he alone escaped!’ And should it be contended that since there was peace between him and her she would wait until she saw [what had actually happened to him]. it may sometimes happen [It may be retorted] that he was struck by an arrow or spear and she would think that he was certainly dead, while in fact someone night have applied an emollient[24] [to his wound] and he might have recovered

Raba was [at first] of the opinion[25] that famine is not like war, since [in the former case] she does not speak from conjecture. [Later. however]. Raba changed his opinion. stating that famine is like war. For a woman once appeared before Raba and said to him, ‘My husband died during a famine’. ‘You have acted well’, he remarked to her.[26] ‘in that you saved your own life,[27] since it could hardly be imagined that he would survive on the little remnant of flour that you left for him’. ‘The Master then’. she replied. ‘also understands that in such circumstances he could not survive’.[28] After this[29] Raba ruled: Famine[25] is worse than war; for whereas in the case of war it is only when the wife states, ‘My husband died in the war’, that she is not believed, but [if her statement is that]. ‘He died in his bed’, she is believed, in the case of famine she is not believed unless she states, ‘He died and I buried him’.

A ruin[25] is regarded as war, for [in this case also] she speaks from conjecture. A visitation of serpents or scorpions[25] is regarded as war, for [here also a wife] speaks from conjecture. As to pestilence. some hold that it is like war, while others hold that it is not like war. ‘Some hold that it is like war’, because a wife, they maintain. speaks from conjecture; while ‘others hold that it is not like war’ because, they maintain, a wife relies upon the common saying.[30] ‘A pestilence may rage for seven years but none dies before his time' ,[31]

The question was raised:[32] What is the law if it was she who established that there was a war in the world?[33] Do we apply the argument. 'What motive could she have for telling a lie?'[34]

since, if she wished, she could have said that there was peace in the world;[1] or, perhaps. since a war was established [by her] she speaks[2] from conjecture.[3] and the argument. 'What motive could she have for telling a lie'[4] cannot come and impair an established principle? — Come and hear: [If a woman states]. 'They[5] set our house on fire',[6] or 'They filled the cave wherein we sheltered[7] with smoke, and he[8] died while I escaped'. she is not believed![9] There it is different since she can be told,[10] 'As a miracle happened to you. so may a miracle have happened to him[8] also'.[11]

Come and hear: [If a woman states]. 'ldolaters fell upon us , or, 'robbers fell upon us,[12] and he[8] died while I escaped'. she is believed![13] -There[14] [her statement is believed] in accordance with the view of R. Idi. For R. Idi stated: A woman [carries] her weapons about her.[15] There was once a man whose bridal chamber caught fire at the close of his wedding feast, and his wife cried, 'Look at my husband, look at my husband!' When they came near they saw a charred body[16] that was prostrate [on the ground] and the hand [of a man][17] lying [by it]. R. Hiyya b. Abin intended to give his decision [that the law in this case] is the same as [that where a woman stated]. 'They set our house on fire', or 'they filled the cave wherein we sheltered with smoke'. Raba, however, said: Are [the two cases at all] similar? There, she did not say. 'Look at my husband, look at my husband'![18] while[19] here [those present actually saw] the charred body that was prostrate [on the ground] and the hand that was lying by it. And R. Hiyya b. Abin?[20] — As to the charred body[16] that was prostrate [on the ground]. it may be suggested that a stranger[21] came to the rescue of [the burning man] and was himself burned,[22] while the hand which was lying [nearby, might be that of the bridegroom who] having been caught by the fire was mutilated;[23] and[24] in order [to hide his] shame he may have left the place and fled into the wide world.

A question was raised: What is the law in respect of one witness[25] In time of war?[26] Is the reason why one witness is [elsewhere][27] believed because no one would tell a lie which is likely to be exposed[28] and, consequently. here also [the witness] would not tell a lie;[29] or is it possible that the reason why one witness [is believed][27] is because [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries again. here. therefore.[30] [he would not be believed since a woman][31] does not make sufficient enquiries before she marries again?

Rami b. Hama replied. Come and hear: R. Akiba stated: When I went down to Nehardea to intercalate the year. I met Nehemiah of Beth Deli who said to me, 'I heard that in the Land of Israel[32] no one with the exception of R. Judah b. Baba permits a [married] woman to marry again on the evidence of one witness'. 'That is so', I told him' 'Tell them', he said to me. 'in my name: You know that this country is infested[33] with raiders; I have this tradition from R. Gamaliel the Elder: That a [married] woman may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness'.[34] Now, what was meant by 'This country is infested with raiders'? Obviously that[35] 'although this country is in a state of confusion.[36] I have this tradition: That a [married woman] may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness'! Thus it is evident that one witness is believed.[37] Said Raba: If so,[38] why should 'this country[39] be different?[40] He should [have said]. 'Wherever raiders exist'!-Rather, said Raba, it is this that was meant: 'You know that this country is infested[41] with raiders and it is impossible for me to leave my family and to come before the Rabbis; I have this tradition from R. Gamaliel: That a [married] woman may be allowed to marry again on the evidence of one witness

Come and hear: Two learned men[42] once travelled with Abba Jose b. Simai on board a ship. which sank. And on the evidence of women, Rabbi[43] allowed their wives to marry again. [Now, evidence of death by] water is. surely. like [that of death in] war, and women, even a hundred of them, are legally equal to one witness,[44] and yet it was stated [that Rabbi] 'Allowed . . ' to marry'![45] — And do you understand this?[46] Those[47] were waters without [a visible] end,[48] and [when a man is drowned in] waters without [a visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]![49] How, then, is this to be understood? [Obviously] that they[50] stated, '[The drowned men] were cast up in our presence

(9) This proves that her statement that her husband is dead is not accepted although it was through her that it became known that there ever was a state of war.

(10) As she has not actually seen his death.

(11) It is for this reason, and not because she is suspected of lying. that her evidence is not regarded as sufficient proof for establishing the death of her husband. In the case of a war, however, it may well be assumed that she had actually seen the death of her husband, since, had she desired to deceive, she need not have disclosed the fact that there ever was a war.

(12) Circumstances similar to those of a war.

This, therefore, provides no proof that a wife is also believed if an actual state of war existed when her husband's death presumably occurred.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 115b

and we saw then, immediately [afterwards]',[1] and they also mention [his identification] marks. so that we do not rely upon them[2] but on the marks.[3]

A man once deposited some sesame with another, [and when in due course] he asked him, 'Return to me my sesame , the other replied. 'You have already taken it'. 'But, surely'. [the depositor remonstrated, 'the quantity] was such and such and it is [in fact still] lying [intact] in your jar'.[4] 'Yours', the other replied. 'you have taken back and this is different'. R. Hisda at first intended to give his decision [that the law in this case is] the same as that of the two learned men,[5] where we do not assume that those have gone elsewhere and these are others.[6] Raba, however, said to him: Are [the two cases] alike? There, the identification marks were given; but here, what identification marks can sesame have! And in regard to [the depositor's] statement [that their quantity] was such and such, it might be said that the similarity of quantities is a mere coincidence.

Said Mar Kashisha b. R. Hisda to R. Ashi: Do we ever [in such circumstances][7] take into consideration the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed?[8] Surely we learned: If a man found a vessel on which was inscribed a Kof it is korban;[9] if a Mem, it is ma'aser;[10] ' if a Daleth it is demu'a'a;[11] if a Teth, it is Tebel;[12] and if a Taw, It is terumah;[13] for in the period of danger[14] they used to write a Taw for terumah![15] — Said Rabina to R. Ashi: Do we not [in such circumstances][16] heed the possibility that [the contents of a vessel] may have been removed? Read, then, the final clause: R. Jose said, Even if a man found a jar on which 'terumah' was inscribed [the contents] are nevertheless regarded as unconsecrated, for it is assumed[17] that though it was in the previous year full of terumah it has subsequently been emptied![18] But the fact is, all agree that the possibility of [the contents] having been removed must be taken into consideration. Here, however, they differ only on the following principle: One Master is of the opinion that had the owner removed [the contents from the jar] he would undoubtedly have wiped [the mark] off, while the other [maintains that] it might be assumed that he may have forgotten [to remove the mark] or he may also intentionally have left it as a safeguard[19] .

Resh Galutha Isaac,[20] a son of R. Bebai's sister, once went from Cordova to Spain[21] and died there. A message was sent from there [in the following terms]. 'Resh Galutha Isaac, a son of R. Bebai's sister, went from Cordova to Spain and died there. [The question thus arose] whether [the possibility that there might have been] two [men of the name of] Isaac is to be taken into consideration[22] or not? — Abaye said: It is to be taken into consideration:[22] but Raba said: It is not to be taken into consideration.[23]

Said Abaye: How[24] do I arrive at my assertion? — Because in[25] a letter of divorce that was once found in Nehardea it was written, 'Near the town of Kolonia,[26] I, David son of Nehilais,[27] a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so', and when Samuel's father sent it to R. Judah Nesiah[28] the latter replied: 'Let all Nehardea be searched'.[29] Raba, however, said: If that were so[30] he[31] should [have ordered] the whole world to be searched![32] The truth is that it was only out of respect for Samuel's father[33] that he sent that message. Raba said: How[34] do I arrive at my assertion? Because in two notes of indebtedness that were once produced in court at Mahuza [the names of the parties] were written as Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi. and Rabbah[35] b. Abbuha ordered the collection of the debts on these bills. But,surely, there are many [men bearing the names of] Habi son of Nanai and Nanai son of Habi at Mahuza![36] And Abaye?[37]

What possibility can be taken into consideration![1] If that of loss,[2] one is surely careful with [a note of indebtedness];[3] if that of a deposit,[4] since the name of the one is like that of the other the former does not entrust the latter with such a deposit;[5] what then can be said?[6] That he[7] may only have delivered [the note] to him![8] 'Letters'[9] [it may be replied] are acquired by mesirah.[10]

A letter of divorce was once found at Sura, and in it appeared this entry: 'In the town of Sura, I, Anan son of Hiyya. a Nehardean, released and divorced my wife So-and-so.' Now when the Rabbis searched from Sura to Nehardea [they found that] there was no other Anan son of Hiyya save one Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra[11] who was at that time at Nehardea, and witnesses came and declared that on the day on which the letter of divorce was written Anan son of Hiyya of Hagra was with them.[12] Said Abaye: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is to be taken into consideration. no such possibility need be considered here,[13] for [even in respect of the only other man known to have that name] witnesses declared that he was at Nehardea;[14] how then could he [on the same day,] have been[15] at Sura![16] Raba said: Even according to me who hold that [the possibility of the existence of other men of the same name] is not to be taken into consideration. [such possibility] must be considered here,[17] since [the man in question] may have gone [to Sura] on a flying camel,[18] or[19] [got there] by a miraculous leap,[20] or[19] he may have given verbal instructions[21] [for the letter of divorce to be written[22] on his behalf], as, [in fact] Rab said to his scribes, and R. Huna, similarly, said to his scribes: When you are at Shili[23] write [in any deed] 'At Shili', although the instructions were given to you at Hini,[24] and when you are at Hini,[23] write, 'At Hini', although the instructions Were given to you at Shili.[25]

What is [the decision] in respect of the sesame?[26] — R. Yemar ruled: [The possibility that it was removed and replaced by another lot] is not to be taken into consideration; Rabina ruled: It is to be taken into consideration; and the law is that it is to be taken into consideration.

DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER etc. What is to be understood by DISCORD BETWEEN HIM AND HER?Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: When [a wife] says to her husband. 'Divorce me!' Do not all women[27] say this?[28] Rather [this is the meaning]: When she says to her husband. 'You have divorced me!' Then let her be believed on the strength of R. Hamnuna's ruling; for R. Hamnuna ruled: If a woman said to her husband, 'You have divorced me'. she is believed, for it is an established principle that no woman would dare [to make such a false assertion] in the presence of her husband! — [Here it is a case] where she said. 'You have divorced me in the presence Of So-and-so and So-and-so', who. when asked, stated that this had never happened .[29]

What is the reason in case Of DISCORD?[30] — R Hanina explained: Because she is likely to tell a lie.[31] R. Shimi b. Ashi explained: Because she speaks from conjecture.[32] What is the practical difference between them?[33]

— The practical difference between them arises in the case where [the husband] created[1] the discord.[2]

The question was raised: What [is the law in respect of] one witness in a case of discord? Is the reason why one witness is [elsewhere][3] believed[4] that he would not tell a lie which is likely to be exposed.[5] and consequently he would here also tell no lie;[6] or is it possible that the reason why one witness is believed elsewhere[7] is that [the woman] herself makes careful enquiries and [only then] marries again; here, therefore, [his evidence should not be accepted] since, as there was discord between husband and wife,[8] she would not make careful enquiries and yet would marry again? — This remains undecided .[9]

R. JUDAH SAID: SHE IS NEVER etc. It was taught: They[10] said to R. Judah: According to your statement, only a woman of sound senses[11] would be allowed to marry again while an imbecile[12] would never be allowed to marry again! But the fact is that[13] the one as well as the other may be allowed to marry again.

A woman[14] once came to Rab[15] Judah's Beth din. ‘Mourn’, they said to her, ‘for your husband, rend your garments and loosen your hair’. Did they teach her to simulate![16] — They themselves held the same view as the Rabbis,[17] but in order that he[18] also should allow her to marry they advised her to do so. MISHNAH. BETH HILLEL STATED: WE HAVE HEARD SUCH A TRADITION[19] ONLY IN RESPECT OF A WOMAN WHO CAME FROM THE HARVEST[20] AND [WHOSE HUSBAND DIED] IN THE SAME COUNTRY,[21] [THE CIRCUMSTANCES BEING THE SAME] AS THOSE OF A CASE THAT ONCE ACTUALLY HAPPENED. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: [THE LAW IS] THE SAME WHETHER THE WOMAN CAME FROM THE HARVEST OR FROM THE OLIVE PICKING, OR FROM THE VINTAGE, OR FROM ONE COUNTRY TO ANOTHER, FOR THE SAGES SPOKE OF THE HARVEST ONLY [BECAUSE THE INCIDENT TO WHICH THEY REFERRED] OCCURRED THEN.[22] BETH HILLEL, THEREFORE, CHANGED THEIR VIEW [THENCEFORWARD] TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE OPINION OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. It was taught: Beth Shammai said to Beth Hillel, According to your View,[23] one would only know the law concerning[24] the wheat harvest;[25] whence, however, [the law concerning] the barley harvest? And, furthermore, one would only know the law in the case where[24] one harvested; whence, however, [the law in the case where] one held a vintage, picked olives, harvested dates, or picked figs? But [you must admit] it is only the original incident that occurred at harvest time and that the same law is applicable to all [the other seasons]. So here also [we maintain that] the incident occurred with [a husband who died] in the same country. and the same law is applicable to all [other countries]. And Beth Hillel?[26] — In the case of the same country. where people freely [move about].[27] she is afraid;[28] [coming. however]. from one country to another, since people do not freely [move about].[29] she is not afraid.[30] And Beth Shammai?[31] — Here[32] also caravans frequently [move about].[33]

What was the original incident?[34] -[It was that of] which Rab Judah spoke in the name of Samuel: It was the end of the wheat harvest when ten men went to reap their wheat and a serpent bit one of them and he died [of the wound]. His wife, thereupon, came and reported the incident to Beth din, who, having sent [to investigate]. found her statement to be true. At that time it was ordained: If a woman stated, ‘My husband is dead’, she may marry again; [if she said] ‘My husband is dead [and left no issue]’, she may contract the levirate marriage.

Must it be suggested that R. Hanania b. Akabia[35] and the Rabbis differ on the same principle as that on which Beth Shammai and Beth Hillel differ? For it was taught: No man shall carry water of purification[36] and ashes of purification[36] across the Jordan on board a ship, nor may one stand on [the bank on] one side and throw them across to the other side, nor may one float them upon water nor may one carry them while riding[37] on a beast or on the back of another man unless his [own] feet were touching the [river] bed. He may, however, convey them across a bridge. [These laws are applicable] as well to the Jordan as to other rivers. R. Hanania b. Akabia[35] said: They[38] spoke[39] only of the Jordan and of [transport] on board a ship, as was the case in the original incident.[40] Must it, then, be assumed that the Rabbis[41] hold the same view as Beth Shammai[42] while R. Hanania b. Akabia holds the same view as Beth Hillel?[43] — The Rabbis can answer you: Our ruling agrees with the view[44] of Beth Hillel also; for Beth Hillel maintained their opinion[45] only there,[46] since [the woman is believed only because] she fears [to tell an untruth, and it is only] in a place that is near that she fears while in a distant one she does not fear. Here,[47] however, what matters it whether it is on the Jordan or on other rivers![48] R. Hanania b. Akabia can also answer you: I may uphold my view even according to Beth Shammai; for Beth Shammai maintained their opinion[49] only there[46] because [a woman] makes careful enquiries[50] and [only then] marries again. Hence, what matters it whether the locality was near or far. Here,[51] however, [the prohibition] is due to an actual incident; hence it is only [against transport] on the Jordan and on board a ship, where the incident occurred, that the Rabbis enacted their preventive measure, but against other rivers where the incident did not occur the Rabbis enacted no preventive measure.

What was the incident?[52] — [It was that] which Rab Judah related in the name of Rab: A man was once transporting Water of purification[53] and ashes of purification[53] across the Jordan on board a ship, and a piece of a corpse, of the size of an olive,[54] was found stuck in the bottom of the ship. At that time It was ordained: No man shall carry Water of purification and ashes of purification across the Jordan on board a ship.

MISHNAH. BETH SHAMMAI RULED: SHE[55] IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN AND SHE RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. BETH HILLEL, HOWEVER, RULED: SHE IS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN BUT SHE DOES NOT RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: YOU HAVE PERMITTED [WHAT MIGHT BE] THE GRAVE OFFENCE OF ILLICIT INTERCOURSE,[56] SHALL WE NOT PERMIT [THE TAKING OF HER HUSBAND'S] MONEY WHICH IS OF LESS IMPORTANCE![57] BETH HILLEL ANSWERED THEM: WE FIND

THAT ON HER EVIDENCE, THE BROTHERS MAY NOT ENTER INTO THEIR INHERITANCE.[1] SAID BETH SHAMMAI TO THEM: DO WE NOT LEARN THIS[2] FROM HER KETHUBAH SCROLL WHEREIN [HER HUSBAND] PRESCRIBES FOR HER, ‘IF THOU BE MARRIED TO ANOTHER MAN, THOU WILT RECEIVE WHAT IS PRESCRIBED FOR THEE’! THEREUPON BETH HILLEL WITHDREW THIS OPINION, THENCEFORTH TO RULE IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE VIEW OF BETH SHAMMAI.

GEMARA. R. Hisda stated: If she[3] is taken in levirate marriage the levir enters into the inheritance[4] on her evidence. If they[5] made an exposition on the kethubah, shall we not make an exposition on the Torah? The All Merciful said, Shall succeed in the name of his brother,[6] and he has surely succeeded.[7] R. Nahman ruled: If [a woman] came before Beth din and stated, ‘My husband is dead; permit me to marry again’. permission must be granted her to marry again. and she is given her kethubah. [If she demanded]. ‘Give me my kethubah’, she must not be permitted even to marry. What is the reason? Because she came with her mind intent on the kethubuh.[8]

The question was raised: What is the ruling [where she said], ‘Permit me to marry and give me my kethubah’? Has she come with her mind intent on the kethubah, since she specified her kethubah[9] or [is it assumed that] a person [naturally] lays before the Beth din all the claims he has![10] And[11] should you find [a reason for deciding in her favour because] a person submits whatever claim he has to the Beth din, [the question still remains as to] what [is the law where she stated]. ‘Give me my kethubah and permit me to marry’? [Is it assumed that] in this case[12] she has undoubtedly come with her mind bent on the kethubah. or is it possible [that she mentioned her kethubah] because[13] she did not know by what means she becomes permitted [to marry again].[13] — This is undecided.[14]

MISHNAH. ALL ARE REGARDED AS TRUSTWORTHY TO GIVE EVIDENCE[15] FOR HER[16] EXCEPTING HER MOTHER-IN-LAW. THE DAUGHTER OF HER MOTHER-IN-LAW, HER RIVAL, HER SISTER-IN-LAW[17] AND HER HUSBAND'S DAUGHTER.[18] WHEREIN LIES THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN [THE ADMISSIBILITY OF] A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND [THAT OF THE EVIDENCE OF] DEATH?[19] IN THAT THE WRITTEN DOCUMENT[20] PROVIDES THE PROOF.[21]

GEMARA. The question was raised: What [is the law in regard to the eligibility[22] of] the daughter of her father-in-law?[23] Is the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law because there is a mother[24] who hates her she[25] also hates her; here,[26] however, there is no mother who hates her?[27] Or is it possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-inlaw is because she[28] believes that the other squanders[29] the savings of her mother; there,[26] then, she also believes that she squanders[29] the savings of her father-in-law?[30] Come and hear: ‘All are regarded as trustworthy to give evidence for her[31] excepting five women’; but if that were so[32] [the number should] be six![33] — It is possible that the reason [for the ineligibility] of the daughter of her mother-in-law is because she[34] believes that the other squanders the savings of her mother[35] [and, therefore] there is no difference between the daughter of her mother-in-law and the daughter of her father-in-law.[36] But, surely. it was taught.[37] ‘Excepting seven women’![38] — This is the view of R. Judah. For it was taught:[39] R. Judah adds[40] also a father's wife[41] and a daughter-In-law. They[42] said to him: A father's wife[41] is, in fact, included in the expression ‘a husband's daughter’,[43] and a daughter-in-law is obviously included in the expression ‘her mother-in-law’.[44]

And R. Judah?[45] - Because one can well understand why a mother-in-law should hate her daughter-in-law, since the former believes that the latter squanders her Savings,[46] but why should a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law![47] Similarly one may well understand why a husband's daughter hates her father's wife, since the former believes that she is squandering her mother's savings, but why should a father's wife hate her husband's daughter![47]

Why, then, does he[48] add the two?[49] — But [this is the true explanation]: Why does a daughter-in-law hate her mother-in-law? Because the latter reports[50] to her son all that she[51] does. [Similarly] a father's wife also hates her husband's daughter because the latter reports[50] to her father all that she[52] does. And the Rabbis?[53] — As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man.[54] And R. Judah? — The text[55] applies[56] to [the study of] the words of the Torah.[57]

R. Aha b. ‘Awya said: In the West[58] they asked: What is the ruling in respect of a potential[59] mother-in-law?[60] Does it occur to her that [this woman's][61] husband might die [without issue] and she[62] would thereby be subject to the levir, and therefore. she[62] hates her;[63] or does it not?

(1) Though inheritance is a monetary affair, Only in order to save her from a life-long widowhood was a woman allowed on her own evidence to marry again. In monetary matters, however, the evidence of two eligible witnesses (cf. Deut. XIX. 15) is a sine qua non.
(2) That she is entitled to her kethubah.
(3) A woman who reported the death of her husband.
(4) Of the deceased. Cf. supra 40a.
(5) Beth Shammai, and later also Beth Hillel, in our Mishnah.
(6) Deut. XXV, 6, explained Rabbinically to refer to the levir.
(7) Hence he is also entitled to the inheritance.
(8) She probably knows that her husband is alive and she has no intention of marrying again. All she aims at is the acquisition of the money.
(9) And even marriage should, therefore, be forbidden to her,
(10) But her main purpose was matrimony. Hence both her requests should be granted.
(11) Reading of Rashal, inserted in cur. edd, within square brackets.
(12) Since she mentioned her kethubah first,
(13) She may have thought that it was the kethubah that releases her from her dead husband and it is for this reason that she mentioned it first. Cf. supra note 3’
(14) Teku. v. Glos,
(15) That her husband died.
(16) Any woman.
(17) The wife of her husband's brother, who becomes her rival if levirate marriage is contracted.
(18) All these are assumed to be, for one reason or another, hostile to her and are therefore suspected of giving false evidence (cf. supra n. 8) in the expectation that she will marry again and thereby become forever forbidden to their relative, her first husband.
(19) I.e., why are the relatives mentioned accepted as qualified bearers of her letter of divorce, (v. Git, 23b) and not as eligible witnesses to testify to the death of her husband?
(20) The letter of divorce,
(21) It is mainly the document itself that constitutes the validity of the divorce and not the eligibility of its bearer.
(22) To give evidence that her husband was dead,
(23) From another wife who is not her mother-in-law.
(24) I.e., her mother-in-law.
(25) The daughter of that mother-in-law.
(26) In the case of the daughter of her father-in-law,
(27) The daughter of her father-in-law is therefore eligible as a witness.
(28) The daughter.
(29) Lit,, ‘eats’.
(30) Lit.,’wife's family’. In consequence of which she hates her and is, therefore, ineligible to be her witness.
(31) Cf. supra p. 824. nn. 8 and 9.
(32) That the daughter of a father-in-law is also ineligible as witness.
(33) Since our Mishnah had enumerated five others. From this then it may be inferred that the daughter of a father-in-law is eligible.
(34) The daughter.
(35) So Bah. Cur. edd., ‘of the father-in-law’.

(36) Both, therefore, may be regarded as one. Hence the number five,
(37) Cur. edd., ‘we learned’.
(38) While our Mishnah enumerates only five.
(39) Cur. edd., ‘we learned’.
(40) To the number of women who are ineligible to testify to the death of another woman's husband.
(41) The stepmother of the woman in question.
(42) The Sages.
(43) Since a husband's daughter is ineligible as witness for a husband's wife it is obvious that the latter also, since both stand in the same relationship to one another, is equally ineligible as witness for the former. V. infra n. 6.
(44) As a mother-in-law is precluded from giving evidence for her daughter-in-law so,it is obvious, is the latter (cf. supra n. 5) precluded from giving evidence for the former. There was no need, therefore, to enumerate all the four. The mention of two of these embraces the four.
(45) Why in view of the explanation of the Rabbis does he enumerate seven?
(46) As the wife of her son and heir she would in due course become mistress of her possessions.
(47) Her ineligibility, therefore, cannot be inferred from the other. Hence it was necessary specifically to mention her.
(48) R. Judah.
(49) Who, as was just explained, are not hostile to the others, and should, therefore, be eligible to give evidence for them!
(50) Lit., ‘reveals’, ‘discloses’.
(51) Her daughter-in-law.
(52) Her father's wife; her stepmother.
(53) Why, in view of R. Judah's explanation, do they omit the two from their list?
(54) prov. XXVII, 19. Hatred is mutual. As a husband's daughter hates her father's wife so does the latter hate the former; and the same reciprocity exists between a mother-in-law and her daughter-in-law. There was no need, therefore, to mention them all. The four are covered by the two.
(55) Lit., ‘this’.
(56) Lit.. ‘is written’.
(57) Effort and success are interdependent as in water face answereth face. Or: The successful achievement of the student is dependent on the sympathy and understanding (the cheerful countenance) of the Master.
(58) Palestine, which lay on the West of Babylon.
(59) Lit.. ‘that comes afterwards’. i.e., the mother of the levir and stepmother of the husband of the woman in question. who might become her mother-in-law if her husband died childless and she had to contract the levirate marriage with the levir.
(60) Is she eligible as witness if she testifies that her stepson is dead in consequence of which the wife of the deceased must either marry her son or perform halizah with him and marry a stranger (Rashi). [R. Hananel (v. Lewin B. M. Ozar ha-Geonim, Yebamoth p. 334) explains the problem differently. viz., can a woman give evidence on behalf of her potential mother-in-law? Where. for instance, Jacob had two wives, Leah and Rachel, the former of whom bore him a son, Reuben, and the latter, Joseph; and the question arises whether the wife of Reuben may testify as to the death of Jacob, her father-in-law, permitting the remarriage of Rachel, her potential mother-in-law. For should her own husband Reuben die, she would have to contract levirate marriage with his brother Joseph. Rachel thus becoming her mother-in-law].
(61) For whom she tenders evidence.
(62) As her future mother-in-law.
(63) Hence she is ineligible as a witness for her.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 117b

Come and hear: If a woman stated. ‘My husband died first and my father-in-law died after him’. she may marry again and she also receives her kethubah. but her mother-in-law is forbidden.[1] Now, why is her[2] mother-in-law forbidden? Is it not because it is assumed that neither her[2] husband died nor did her father.in.law die[3] and that by her statement[4] she intended to damage the position of her mother-in-law.[5] hoping that [as a result][6] she[7] would not in the future[8] come to torment her![9] —

There[10] it may be different because she[11] has experienced her annoyance.[12]

MISHNAH. IF ONE WITNESS STATED, [‘THE HUSBAND[13] IS] DEAD’, AND THEREUPON HIS WIFE MARRIED AGAIN, AND ANOTHER CAME AND STATED ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’. SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED. IF ONE WITNESS SAID. ‘HE[13] IS DEAD AND TWO WITNESSES SAID. ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MUST, EVEN IF SHE MARRIED AGAIN, BE DIVORCED. IF TWO WITNESSES STATED, ‘HE[13] IS DEAD’, AND ONE WITNESS STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD’, SHE MAY, EVEN IF SHE HAD NOT YET DONE SO,[14] MARRY AGAIN.[15]

GEMARA. The reason[16] then is because [the woman][17] MARRIED AGAIN; had she, however, not married would she[18] not have been permitted to marry? But Surely. ‘Ulla stated: Wherever the Torah declared one witness credible,[19] he is regarded[20] as two witnesses, and the evidence of one man[21] against that[22] of two men[23] has no Validity![24] — It is this that was meant: IF ONE WITNESS STATED [‘THE HUSBAND IS] DEAD’ and after his wife had been permitted to marry again ANOTHER CAME AND STATED ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’, she is not to be deprived of[25] her former status of permissibility.[26]

IF ONE WITNESS SAID, ‘HE IS DEAD’, Is this not obvious?[27] For the evidence of one man against that Of[28] two men[29] has no validity! — [This ruling’ is] required only in the case of ineligible witnesses[30] [this being] in accordance with the view of R. Nehemiah. For it was taught: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible,[31] the majority of statements is to be followed,[32] and [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is given the same validity as that of two men against one man’.[33]

And if you prefer I might reply: Wherever one eligible witness came first, even a hundred women[34] are regarded as one witness.[35] But [here it is such a case] as, for example, where a woman witness came in the first instance;[36] and [the statement] of R. Nehemiah is to be explained thus: R. Nehemiah stated, ‘Wherever the Torah declares one witness credible, the majority of statements is to be followed, and [the evidence of] two women against one woman is given the same validity as that of two men against one man; but [the evidence of] two women against that of one man is regarded as half[37] and half[38] .

IF TWO WITNESSES STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’ etc. What does this teach us?[39] [A ruling] in respect of ineligible witnesses, [the principle being the same] as that of R. Nehemiah who follows the majority of statements[40] . But is not this exactly the same [as the previous clause]![41] — It might have been assumed that the majority is followed only when the law is thereby made more stringent ,[42] but not [where it leads] to a relaxation of the law;[43] hence we were taught [the final clause] ,[44]

MISHNAH. IF ONE WIFE[45] SAID [‘HER HUSBAND IS] DEAD’ AND THE OTHER WIFE[46] SAID, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD , THE ONE WHO SAID, ‘HE IS DEAD’ MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, WHILE THE ONE WHO SAID, ‘HE IS NOT DEAD, MAY NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR IS SHE TO RECEIVE HER KETHUBAH. IF ONE WIFE[47] STATED, ‘HE IS DEAD’ AND THE OTHER STATED. ‘HE WAS KILLED’, R. MEIR RULED: SINCE THEY CONTRADICT ONE ANOTHER THEY MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. R. JUDAH AND R. SIMEON RULED: SINCE BOTH[48] ADMIT THAT HE[49] IS NOT ALIVE, BOTH MAY MARRY AGAIN.

IF ONE WITNESS STATED, ‘HE[50] IS DEAD’, AND ANOTHER WITNESS STATED.[51] ‘HE IS NOT DEAD’,

---

(1) To marry again; infra 118a. The evidence as to the death of her husband is not admissible though the witness. since her own husband was dead at the time she gave her evidence, was no longer her daughter.in.law.

(2) The witness's.

(3) And both women are still related to one another as mother-in-law and daughter-in-law.

(4) Lit., ‘and what she said thus’.

(5) Who if she married again would not any longer be able to live with her first husband, the father-in-law of the witness.

(6) Cf. supra p. 827. n. 14.

(7) Her mother-in-law.

(8) When her husband and son returned from their foreign travels.

(9) By reporting to her son all the doings of his wife. It is thus obvious that a daughter-in-law is not believed as a witness for her mother-in-law, though the cause of her hatred (the return of her husband and his mother's gossip) is still a thing of the future and at the time her evidence is given, potential only. From this it follows that a potential mother-in-law also is equally ineligible as a witness for her potential daughter. in-law.

(10) Since in that case the woman for whom evidence is given was already her mother-in-law.

(11) The daughter-in-law.

(12) This case, therefore, provides no proof that a woman hates one who had never been her mother-inlaw and whose annoyances she had never experienced.

(13) Who had gone to a country beyond the sea.

(14) prior to the appearance of the one witness.

(15) Even after he tendered his evidence.

(16) Why the woman in the first clause of our Mishnah may live with the man she married.

(17) Whose husband's death was reported by the first witness.

(18) Since our Mishnah only states that SHE NEED NOT BE DIVORCED and does not state that she may marry again.

(19) As is the case here, where one witness testifies to the death of a husband (cf. supra 88b).

(20) Lit., ‘behold here’.

(21) In our case, that of the second witness.

(22) Lit., ‘in the place of’.

(23) In the first instance, the first witness whose evidence had been accepted as valid as that of two.

(24) Sot. 31b, Keth. 22b, supra 88b. Why then should not the woman be directly permitted to marry again?

(25) The original לא תצא lit.,’she shall (or need) not go out’, may bear this meaning as well as that given in our Mishnah.

(26) Because the decision of Beth din had been issued before the second witness appeared. Had he arrived prior to the issue of the decision, the evidence of the first witness, as it had not yet been accepted. would have had no greater validity than his,

(27) That the woman MUST ... BE DIVORCED,

(28) Lit., ‘in the place of’,

(29) As is the case in the second clause of our Mishnah.

(30) Where the two witnesses were, e.g.. relatives or slaves.

(31) As in the case, e.g.. spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah.

(32) As the accepted law of valid evidence is in such cases suspended, the evidence of any ineligible witnesses (cf. supra n. 7) is admitted,

(33) Hence the necessity for the ruling of our Mishnah. In the absence of such a ruling it would have been assumed that the evidence of ineligible witnesses is here also inadmissible.

(34) I.e., ineligible witnesses who, after the woman had married again, stated that her husband was not dead,

(35) As the evidence of a single witness when it is opposed to that of a previous witness whose evidence had already been accepted (cf. supra p. 828, n. 18) is completely disregarded, so is the evidence of the hundred women if it conflicts with that of the first eligible witnesses.

(36) And, on her evidence, the widow was permitted to marry again. As two women subsequently opposed the statement of the one, the marriage must be annulled by a letter of divorce.

(37) Of a valid evidence, i.e., as that of one witness.

(38) The evidence of two women against that of one man would, therefore, have the same validity as that of one witness against another, spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah. and the widow would have retained her first status of permissibility. v. supra 88b.

(39) Is it not obvious that two witnesses are relied upon when they are opposed by one witness only!

(40) Though the two witnesses are ineligible. their evidence against that of the one witness, since they form the majority, is accepted, and the widow is permitted to marry again.
(41) The ruling in the second clause of our Mishnah which, as has just been explained, teaches this very principle.
(42) As in the second clause where, owing to the majority principle, the woman is forbidden to marry again.
(43) As in the final clause under discussion, where, by following the majority. the woman is allowed to marry again.
(44) Of our Mishnah, to indicate that in all cases the majority is to be followed.
(45) Of a man who has gone to a country beyond the sea.
(46) Her rival.
(47) V. p. 830. n. 9'
(48) Lit.. 'this and this'.
(49) Their husband.
(50) V. p. 830. n. 9'
(51) Before the Beth din, on the evidence of the first witness, had allowed the woman to marry again.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 118a

OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED. 'HE[1] IS DEAD', AND ANOTHER WOMAN[2] STATED,[3] 'HE IS NOT DEAD', SHE[4] MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN.

GEMARA. The reason. then,[5] is because she said, 'HE IS NOT DEAD'; had she, however, kept silent she would presumably have been allowed to marry again; but [it may be objected], no rival may give evidence on behalf of her associate![6] — It was necessary [to teach the case where the OTHER WIFE SAID], 'HE IS NOT DEAD.[7] Since it might have been assumed that [their husband] was really dead and that by stating[8] 'HE IS NOT DEAD' she evidently[9] intended to inflict injury upon her rival in the spirit of[10] Let me[11] die with the Philistines,[12] we are informed [that she is nevertheless forbidden to marry again].

IF ONE WIFE STATED, 'HE IS DEAD' etc. R. Meir should have expressed his disagreement in the first clause also![13] R. Eleazar replied: [The first clause] is a subject[14] in dispute and it[15] represents the opinion of R. Judah and R. Simeon.[16] R. Johanan. however. stated that it[17] may be said [to represent even the view of] R. Meir, for in such a case even R. Meir agrees,[18] since in the case of testimony relating to a woman[19] the evidence [of the nature of] 'He is not dead' is not [regarded as a valid] contradiction,[20]

We learned: IF ONE WITNESS STATED, HE IS DEAD' AND ANOTHER WITNESS STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD', OR IF ONE WOMAN STATED, 'HE IS DEAD AND ANOTHER WOMAN STATED, HE IS NOT DEAD', SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN. Now according to R. Eleazar[21] it may well be explained that the anonymous statement [in the final clause][22] is in agreement with R. Meir. According to R. Johanan,[23] however, there is a difficulty! — This is a difficulty.

MISHNAH. IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND SHE RETURNED AND STATED, MY HUSBAND IS DEAD'. SHE MAY BE MARRIED AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH. HER RIVAL, HOWEVER, IS FORBIDDEN.[24] IF [HER RIVAL] WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [WHO WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST, SHE IS PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH;[25] SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS[26] IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD HER OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS [IT BE ENACTED THAT] SHE SHALL BE FORBIDDEN BOTH TO MARRY AND TO EAT TERUMAH.

IF SHE STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED FIRST AND MY FATHER-IN-LAW DIED AFTER HIM, SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN AND SHE ALSO RECEIVES HER KETHUBAH, BUT HER MOTHER-IN-LAWS[27] IS FORBIDDEN.[28] IF [THE LATTER] WAS THE DAUGHTER OF AN ISRAELITE [WHO WAS MARRIED] TO A PRIEST, SHE IS PERMITTED TO EAT TERUMAH; SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID.. THIS[29] IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD HER OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS [IT BE ENACTED THAT] SHE SHALL BE FORBIDDEN BOTH TO MARRY AGAIN AND TO EAT TERUMAH.

GEMARA. And [both statements[30] were] necessary. For If the first only had been stated, it might have been assumed that only in that did N. Tarfon maintain [his view],[31] since the grievance is personal.[32] but that in respect of a mother-in-law, the grievance against whom is merely general,[33] he agrees with N. Akiba.[34] And had the latter only been stated it might have been assumed that R. Akiba maintained [his view] there only, but that in the former case he agrees with R. Tarfon. [Hence both statements were] necessary.

Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: The halachah is in agreement with R. Tarfon. Said Abaye: We also learned the same: [If a woman[35] states],[36] ‘A son was given to me in a country beyond the sea, and my son died first while my husband died after him’, she is believed.[37] [If, however, she states]. ‘My husband [died first] and my son died after him’, she is not believed,[38] though note must be taken of her statement, and she must, therefore, perform halizah[39] but may not[40] contract the levirate marriage.[41] [From which it follows that] ‘note must be taken of her statement’, but that no note need be taken of the statement of a rival. Thus our point is proved.

(2) Even if she is the rival of the woman concerned.

(3) V. supra note 5.

(4) Even the first.

(5) Why the second wife MAY NEITHER MARRY AGAIN.

(6) Her rival.

(7) There was no need to mention the case where she remained silent, which is obvious.

(8) Lit., ‘and that which she said’.

(9) Since she went out of her way to contradict her rival and was not content to remain silent.

(10) Lit.. ‘she said’.

(11) נפשי v. marg. note. Cur. edd.. נפשה

(12) Judges XVI, 30. She is prepared herself to lose the right of marrying again in order that her rival also may thereby be deprived of her right.

(13) Where. as in the second clause, one woman contradicts the other.

(14) Lit.. ‘it was taught’.

(15) The view expressed in the first clause.

(16) [According to R. Eleazar. R. Meir would forbid in the second clause remarriage to both women, because he admits a rival's contradictory evidence, whereas R. Judah and Simeon hold that a rival's contradiction is not admitted and hence they rule that both are permitted to marry. Similarly in the first clause, on R. Meir's view the first woman would not be allowed to marry, regard being had to the contradiction of her rival. On this assumption, the reason stated in the second clause for R. Judah's and R. Simeon's ruling, that neither denied the fact of the man's death, will have been advanced by them as an argument on the hypothesis that R. Meir's view, admitting the rival's contradiction, is accepted. תום״ ישנים].

(17) The view expressed in the first clause.

(18) That the assertion of the second wife is not regarded as valid contradiction of the evidence of the first.

(19) [In connection with the death of her husband in regard to which the laws of evidence have been considerably relaxed. Var. lec. ‘the testimony of a rival’].

(20) But as a mere outburst of malice, intended to injure her rival. The first evidence is, therefore, accepted.

(21) Who explained that the first clause represents the view of those who differ from R. Meir, while R. Meir maintains that the first wife also is forbidden to marry again, because a rival's contradiction is admitted, v. p. 831, n. 21.

(22) Which forbids remarriage, even where the contradictory evidence was given by the rival (v. supra p. 831. n. 7.)

(23) Who stated that R. Meir agrees with the ruling in the first clause that a rival's contradiction is admitted.
(24) To marry again; since a woman may not tender evidence for her rival.
(25) As during the lifetime of her husband. The evidence of the other which is regarded as invalid to enable the rival to marry again (v. supra n. 1) is equally invalid to deprive her of her right to the eating of terumah.
(26) To forbid the rival to marry and to allow her to eat terumah.
(27) For whom a daughter-in-law is ineligible to tender evidence.
(28) To marry; though. at the time the evidence in her favour was given. the witness, according to whose evidence her husband died before her father-in-law, was no longer her daughter-in-law. The reason is explained supra 117b.
(29) Cf. supra n. 3 mutatis mutandis.
(30) The first (relating to a rival) and the second (relating to a mother-in-law).
(31) That the evidence of a rival is not accepted.
(32) The deprivation of marital intercourse caused by a rival. Only 10 such circumstances, it is possible, did R. Tarfon discredit the evidence of a rival who might indeed be actuated by malice.
(33) Lit,, 'things in the world'.
(34) That a daughter-in-law need not be suspected of deliberate lying because of some general grievance against her mother-in-law; and that consequently. though her evidence is not accepted in respect of relaxing the laws of marriage. it may be accepted in respect of enforcing the laws of terumah.
(35) Who went to a country beyond the sea with her husband before any issue was born from their union.
(36) On her return.
(37) And may contract levirate marriage. Her evidence merely confirms the status in which she was already at the time of her departure. At that time as well as now she had no children to exempt her from the levirate obligations.
(38) To be permitted to marry a stranger without previous halizah with the levir. The evidence of a woman is accepted only in respect of the death of her husband, where it is assumed that she takes all possible care to ascertain the fact of his death. it is not, however, accepted in respect of liberating her from a levir against whom she might have been nursing a personal hatred, so that she would, without making the necessary enquiries, be ready on the flimsiest of proofs to testify anything which enables her to get rid of him.
(39) Owing to the status in which she has been confirmed.
(40) Since note must be taken of her allegation.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 118b

MISHNAH. IF A MAN BETROTHED ONE OF FIVE WOMEN AND HE DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS BETROTHED, AND EACH STATES, 'HE HAS BETROTHED ME. HE GIVES A LETTER OF DIVORCE TO EVERY ONE OF THEM,[1] AND, LEAVING THE KETHUBAH[2] AMONG THEM, WITHDRAWS;[3] SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, SAID: THIS IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD TAKE ONE OUT OF THE POWER OF TRANSGRESSION, UNLESS ONE GIVES TO EACH OF THEM BOTH A LETTER OF DIVORCE AND HER KETHUBAH.[2]

IF A MAN ROBBED ONE OF FIVE PERSONS AND DOES NOT KNOW WHICH OF THEM HE HAS ROBBED, AND EACH ONE STATES. 'HE HAS ROBBED ME', HE LEAVES THE [AMOUNT OF] THE ROBBERY AMONG THEM AND WITHDRAWS;[4] SO R. TARFON. R. AKIBA, HOWEVER, STATED: THIS IS NOT A WAY THAT WOULD LEAD ONE OUT OF THE POWER OF SIN, UNLESS ONE PAYS [THE FULL AMOUNT OF THE ROBBERY] TO EVERY ONE [OF THE PERSONS INVOLVED].

GEMARA. Since BETROTHED was stated. and not[5] 'cohabited'. and since ROBBED was stated and not 'bought'. whose [view, it may be asked, is represented in] our Mishnah? Neither. [apparently. that of] the first Tanna[6] nor that of R. Simeon b. Eleazar![6] For it was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated that R. Tarfon and R. Akiba did not differ [on the ruling that] where a man betrothed one of five women, and he does not know which of them he betrothed, he leaves the kethubah[2] among them and withdraws;[3] they differ only in the case where cohabitation occurred, R. Tarfon ruling that the man leaves the kethubah[2] among them and withdraws, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exempt from transgression] unless he pays[7] everyone of them. R. Tarfon and R. Akiba. furthermore, did not differ on [the ruling that] where a person bought something from five men and does not know from which of them he bought, he may leave the price of the purchase among them and depart; they differ only in the case where a person robbed one of five men, R. Tarfon ruling that the man must deposit the amount of the robbery among them and may then depart, while R. Akiba ruled [that the man is not exonerated] unless he pays [the amount of the] robbery to everyone.[8] Now, since R. Simeon b. Eleazar said that they[9] do not differ in the case where a man betrothed or purchased, it may be inferred that the first Tanna is of the opinion that they[9] did differ. Whose [view then, is presented in our Mishnah]? If it is that of the first Tanna 'betrothal' and purchase should have been mentioned,[10] and if [it is that of] R. Simeon b. Eleazar cohabitation and 'robbery' should have been mentioned![11] — [Our Mishnah represents] in fact [the view of] N. Simeon b. Eleazar, but the meaning of[12] BETROTHED is betrothal through cohabitation'. BETROTHED was used in order to acquaint you how far R. Akiba is prepared to go[13] , as he imposes a penalty[14] even where one transgressed a Rabbinic prohibition[15] only; and ROBBED was taught in order to acquaint you how far N. Tarfon is prepared to go, as he imposes no penalties[16] even where one had transgressed a Pentateuchal prohibition.[17]

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHO WENT WITH HER HUSBAND TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, HER SON ALSO [GOING] WITH THEM, AND WHO CAME BACK AND STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY SON DIED', IS BELIEVED.[18] [IF, HOWEVER, SHE STATED.] 'MY SON DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED'.[19] SHE IS NOT BELIEVED,[20] BUT NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION[21] AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH[22] AND MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[23]

[IF A WOMAN[24] STATES].[25] 'A SON WAS GIVEN TO ME [WHILE I WAS] IN A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA' AND SHE ALSO ASSERTS, 'MY SON DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED', SHE IS BELIEVED.[26] [IF, HOWEVER, SHE STATES]. 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY SON DIED .[27] SHE IS NOT BELIEVED,[28] BUT NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION[29] AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH[30] BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[31]

[[19] F A WOMAN[32] STATES]. 'A BROTHER-IN-LAW WAS GIVEN TO ME [WHILE I WAS] IN A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA',[33] AND SHE ALSO STATES, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY BROTHER-IN-LAW DIED OR 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND DIED', SHE IS BELIEVED.[34] IF A WOMAN AND HER HUSBAND AND HER BROTHER-IN-LAW WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND SHE [ON RETURNING HOME] STATED, 'MY HUSBAND DIED AND AFTERWARDS MY BROTHER-IN-LAW [DIED]' OR 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW [DIED] AND AFTERWARDS MY HUSBAND [DIED]'. SHE IS NOT BELIEVED; FOR A WOMAN IS NOT TO BE BELIEVED WHEN SHE ASSERTS 'MY BROTHER-IN-LAW IS DEAD', IN ORDER THAT SHE MAY MARRY AGAIN. NOR [WHEN SHE STATES THAT] HER SISTER IS DEAD. IN ORDER THAT SHE MAY ENTER HIS[35] HOUSE.[36] A MAN ALSO IS NOT BELIEVED WHEN HE ASSERTS 'MY BROTHER IS DEAD', SO THAT HE MAY CONTRACT LEVIR' ATE MARRIAGE WITH HIS WIFE, NOR [WHEN HE ASSERTS THAT] HIS WIFE IS DEAD, IN ORDER THAT HE MAY MARRY HER SISTER.[37]

GEMARA. Raba enquired of R. Nahman: What [is the legal position] if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent][38] the possession of a letter of divorce, where a brother-in-law[39] is in existence?[40] [Is the divorce], since she [usually] hates her brother. in-law, an advantage to her and [consequently valid, because] a privilege may be conferred upon a person in his absence; or is it possible [that the divorce], since she sometimes loves her brother-in-law, is a disadvantage to her and [consequently invalid because] no disadvantage may be imposed upon a person in his absence? The other replied. We have learned this: NOTE IS TAKEN OF HER ASSERTION AND SHE MUST, THEREFORE, PERFORM HALIZAH. BUT MAY NOT CONTRACT THE LEVIRATE MARRIAGE.[41] Said Rabina to Raba: What [is the legal decision] if a husband transferred to his wife [through an agent][42] the possession of a letter of divorce at a time[43] when a quarrel [raged between them]? [is the divorce], since she has a quarrel with her husband, an advantage to her or [is it a disadvantage, since] the gratification of bodily desires is possibly preferred by her?[44] — Come and hear what Resh Lakish said: ‘It is preferable to live in grief[45] than to dwell in widowhood’ .[46]

Abaye said: ‘With a husband [of the size of an] ant her seat is placed among the great’.[47]

R. Papa said: Though her husband be a carder[48] she calls him to the threshold and sits down [at his side].[49]

R. Ashi said: If her husband is only a cabbage-head[50] she requires no lentils[51] for her pot.[52]

A Tanna taught: All such women[53] play the harlot and attribute the results[54] to their husbands. [

(15) It is only Rabbinically that betrothal through cohabitation is forbidden. Pentateuchally it constitutes a proper kinyan.
(16) Maintaining as he does that one single sum equal to the amount of the robbery exonerates the robber from all further liability.
(17) Prohibition of robbery was specifically mentioned in the Pentateuch,
(18) And is exempt from levirate marriage and halizah. Her statement is accepted since thereby she is merely confirming the status in which she found herself before her departure. At that time she had a son who exempted her from the levirate bond; and now that her husband died before that son she is still entitled to the same exemption. Her admission of her son's death does not affect her status, since she is the only source of the information, and as her word is accepted in respect of the death it must be similarly accepted in respect of its date.
(19) So that she is in consequence subject to the levirate bond.
(20) Because her assertion would alter the status in which she was confirmed prior to her departure. Such alteration cannot be authorized in view of the possibility that her report might be due to a desire to marry the levir.
(21) Since, at any rate, her statement has impaired her former status.

(39) To whom she would be subject in the absence of a letter of divorce.
(40) Lit., ‘in the place of’.
(41) Since this is the ruling in our Mishnah both in the case where It is assumed that she loves the levir (cf. supra p. 837, n. 2) and in that where she is assumed to hate him (cf. supra p. 837. n. 10). it is obvious that it is uncertain whether a divorce given in the circumstance described by Raba is an advantage or a disadvantage to the woman. The legal position in such a case would consequently be that the woman would have to perform halizah but would not be permitted levirate marriage.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 119a

CHAPTER XVI

MISHNAH. A WOMAN WHOSE HUSBAND AND RIVAL WENT TO A COUNTRY BEYOND THE SEA, AND TO WHOM PEOPLE CAME AND SAID, ‘YOUR HUSBAND IS DEAD’, MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN[1] NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE[2] UNTIL SHE HAS ASCERTAINED WHETHER HER RIVAL IS PREGNANT.[3] IF SHE HAD[4] A MOTHER-IN-LAW[5] SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON];[6] BUT IF SHE DEPARTED WHILE PREGNANT [SUCH POSSIBILITY]

MUST BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION.[7] R. JOSHUA RULED; SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [SUCH A POSSIBILITY].[8]

GEMARA. What is implied by[9] ‘HER RIVAL’?[10] — It is this that we are told: {The possibility of a birth in respect] of that rival[11] need be apprehended; in respect of another rival, however, it need not be apprehended.[12]

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. It is quite proper that she shall not contract levirate marriage since it is possible that [her rival] is pregnant and that she would in consequence cause an infringement[13] [of the prohibition against marriage] of a brother's wife, which is Pentateuchal; but why should she not marry [a stranger]? The majority of women should be taken as a criterion[14] and the majority of women conceive and bear children! Must it then[15] be assumed that [the ruling is that of] R. Meir who takes a minority also into consideration?[16] — It may even be said [to represent the view of] the Rabbis; for the Rabbis follow[17] the majority principle only where the majority is actually present[18] as, for instance, in the case of ‘nine shops’[19] and ‘Sanhedrin’ ,[20] but in respect of a majority that is not actually present[21] the Rabbis were not guided by the majority principle.

Behold the case of a minor boy and a minor girl, where the majority is one that is not actually present and the Rabbis nevertheless follow the majority principle; for it was taught: A minor, whether male or female, may neither perform nor submit to halizah, nor may he contract levirate marriage; so R. Meir. They said to R. Meir: You spoke well [when you ruled] that ‘He may neither perform nor submit to halizah’, since in the Pentateuchal section[22] man was written,[23] and we draw a comparison between ‘woman’ and man.[24] What, however, is the reason why he may not contract levirate marriage? He replied: Because a minor male might be found to be a saris;[25] a minor female might be found to be incapable of procreation; and thus the law of incest would be violated. The Rabbis, however, maintain, ‘Follow the majority of male minors’; and the majority of male minors are not sarisin;[26] ‘Follow the majority of female minors’ and the majority of female minors are not incapable of procreation![27] — But, clearly, [it must be admitted], our Mishnah represents the view of R. Meir.

How have you explained it?[28] That it is in agreement with the view of[29] R. Meir? Read, then, the final clause: IF SHE HAD A MOTHER-IN-LAW SHE NEED NOT APPREHEND [THE POSSIBILITY OF THE BIRTH OF ANOTHER SON]; but why? One should be guided by the majority of women, and the majority of women conceive and bear while a minority miscarry, and, since all those who bear [produce] a half of males and a half of females, the minority of those who miscarry should be added to the half [of those who bear] females, and so the males would constitute a minority which[30] should be taken into consideration![31] — It is possible that since the woman was confirmed[32] in her status of permissibility to strangers[33] [the possibility of the birth of a levir] was not taken by him[34] into consideration. In the first clause, then,[35] where she was confirmed in the status of eligibility for the levirate marriage,[36] let her contract the levirate marriage! — R. Nahman replied in the name of Rabbah b. Abbuha: In the first clause where a prohibition which is subject to the penalty of kareth [is involved, the possibility of the birth of a son][37] had to be provided against; in the final clause, however, where a prohibitory law [only is involved][38] no [such possibility][39] was taken into consideration. Said Raba: Consider: The one [prohibition] is Pentateuchal and the other also is Pentateuchal;[40] what matters it, then, whether the prohibition is one involving kareth or whether it is only a mere prohibitory law? — Rather, said Raba;

(1) Since her husband, when he departed, was known to have had no issue.

(2) It being possible that her rival had a child from their husband.

(4) Overseas.
(5) Who, at the time of her departure, had no other son but the one who is now dead.
(6) To her mother-in-law. It is only in respect of a rival that the possibility of a birth must be taken notice of, since a child, whatever its sex, exempts the woman from the levirate obligations. In the case of a mother-in-law, however, the birth of a female would not affect the woman's freedom to marry again, since it is only a male that subjects her to the levirate obligations. There is no need to apprehend that the mother-in-law had not only (a) given birth to a child but also (b) that that child was not a female but a male.
(7) Since the only doubt is whether the child was a male. Cf. supra n. 6.
(8) Because here also two possibilities must be postulated: (a) that the mother-in-law did not miscarry and (b) that the child born was not a female but a male.

(10) Emphasis on HER.
(11) Who went with her husband to a country beyond the sea.
(12) If witnesses testified that the known rival (v. supra n. 11) was not pregnant there is no need to apprehend the possibility of a marriage with another wife who may have given birth to a child.
(13) Lit., ‘meet’.
(14) Lit., ‘go’.
(15) Since the majority principle is not followed.
(16) Hul. 6a; and since some women do not conceive and bear, the possibility that the rival belonged to this minority must be provided against by forbidding levirate marriage. Would then our anonymous Mishnah represent the view of an individual!
(17) Lit., ‘when do they go’.
(18) Lit., ‘which is before us’.
(19) Which were selling permitted meat, while one shop in their vicinity was selling forbidden meat. If between these shops a piece of meat was found and it is not known from which shop it came, it is assumed to be permitted meat, since the majority of the shops were selling meat of such a character. V. Hul. 95a.
(20) A majority of whom (twelve against eleven) are in favour of a certain decision. V. Sanh. 40a.
(21) The majority of women in general who are assumed to conceive and bear.
(22) Dealing with halizah.
(23) V. Deut. XXV, 7.
(24) As the male must be of mature age and not a minor, so must also be the female.

(27) Bek. 19b. Cf. supra 61b, 105b. The majority spoken of here is, surely, one which is not actually present, and the Rabbis are nevertheless guided by it!
(28) Lit., ‘in what did you place it’, sc. the first clause of our Mishnah.
(29) Lit., ‘like’.
(30) According to R. Meir.
(31) And, contrary to the ruling in our Mishnah, the woman should, as in the first clause, be forbidden marriage.
(32) When her mother-in-law departed.
(33) Lit., ‘to the market’; because there was no known levir.
(34) R. Meir.
(35) If a woman's confirmed status at a certain period is a determining factor.
(36) Since her husband when he departed, had no issue.
(37) By the rival.
(38) The marriage of a yebamah to a stranger.
(39) That a son was born by the mother-in-law.
(40) Neither is a mere Rabbinically preventive measure.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 119b

in the first clause the woman's confirmed status[1] [would subject her] to the levirate marriage while the majority principle[2] [would enable her] to marry any stranger;[3] and, though ‘confirmed status’ is not as important a factor as a majority, the minority of women who miscarry must be added to the ‘confirmed status’ so that the factors on either side are equally balanced;[4] hence[5] she MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE. In the final clause, however, the woman's confirmed status[6] as well as the majority principle[7] [points] to [the permissibility of marriage with] any stranger,[3] so that [viable] males[8] constitute a minority of a minority;[9] and a minority of a minority is not taken into consideration even by R. Meir.

MUST NEITHER MARRY AGAIN NOR CONTRACT LEVIRATE MARRIAGE etc. For ever?[10] — Ze'iri replied: [She waits] on account of herself three months[11] and on account of her associate nine,[12] and then she may, at all events,[13] perform halizah. R. Hanina said: On account of herself [she must wait] three months, but on account of her associate[14] for ever.[15] But let her perform halizah[16] at all events![17] — Both Abaye b. Abin and R. Hanina b. Abin replied: This[18] is a preventive measure against the possibility that the child[19] might be viable[20] as a result of which[21] you would have to subject her to the necessity of a public announcement[22] in respect of the priesthood.[23] Well, let her be subjected to the necessity! — It may happen that someone would be present at the halizah and not at the announcement,[24] and he would form the opinion[25] that a haluzah was permitted to a priest.

We learned: [If a woman states], ‘A son was given to me [while I was] in a country beyond the sea’ and she also asserts, ‘My son died and afterwards my husband died’, she is believed. [If she states, however], ‘My husband died and afterwards my son died’, she is not believed, but note is taken of her assertion and she must, therefore, perform halizah but may not contract levirate marriage.[26] Let it, however, be apprehended that witnesses might come and confirm her statement and that, as a result, you would subject her to the necessity of an announcement in respect of the priesthood! — R. Papa replied: [This refers to] a woman divorced.[27] R. Hiyya son of R. Huna replied: [It refers to one] who stated ‘I and he[28] were hidden in a cave’.[29] MISHNAH. [IN THE CASE OF] TWO SISTERS-IN-LAW[30] ONE OF WHOM[31] STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, AND THE OTHER ALSO STATED, ‘MY HUSBAND IS DEAD’, THE FORMER[31] IS FORBIDDEN[32] ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE LATTER,[33] AND THE LATTER IS FORBIDDEN[34] ON ACCOUNT OF THE HUSBAND OF THE FORMER.[33] IF THE ONE HAD WITNESSES[35] AND THE OTHER HAD NO WITNESSES,[35] SHE WHO HAD THE WITNESSES IS FORBIDDEN,[36] WHILE SHE WHO HAD NO WITNESSES IS PERMITTED.[37] IF THE ONE HAD CHILDREN AND THE OTHER HAD NO CHILDREN,[38] SHE WHO HAD CHILDREN[39] IS PERMITTED[34] AND SHE WHO HAD NO CHILDREN[40] IS FORBIDDEN.[34] IF THEY[41] CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES,[42] AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY[43] ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].[44] R. ELEAZAR[45] RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO MARRY THE LEVIRS[46] THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN.

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: If the one[47] had witnesses[48] and also children, and the other had neither witnesses nor children, both are permitted [to marry again].[49]

IF[50] THEY CONTRACTED LEVIRATE MARRIAGES, AND THE LEVIRS DIED, THEY ARE FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN]. R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIRS THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Raba inquired: What is R. Eleazar's reason? Is it because he is of the opinion that a rival[51] is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate or is it because [he holds that] she would not[51] cause injury to herself?[52] What practical difference is there [between the two assumptions]?

---

(1) It was an established fact that her husband had no issue and that a levir was in existence.

(2) Most women bear viable children and her rival's child would exempt her from the levirate obligations.

(3) Lit., ‘to the market’.

(4) Lit., ‘and it is a half and a half’, ‘confirmed status’ plus minority pointing to the levirate marriage while the majority principle points to permissibility to marry any stranger.

(5) Since neither consideration can be regarded as more weighty than the other.

(6) As one who had no brother-in-law.

(7) Miscarriages and the births of females constitute a majority against the minority of births of viable males.

(8) Only a viable male child exempts a woman from the levirate obligations.

(9) I.e., besides the fact that viable males are in a minority (v. supra n. 10) the possibility of the birth of a viable male is still less to be taken note of in view of the confirmed status of the woman (v. supra note 9).

(10) But why! Let her perform halizah and thus at all events procure her freedom. V. infra p. 844, n. 5.

(11) As any other woman whose husband died. V. supra 42b.

(12) Since should her rival be pregnant, her levirate bond could not be severed by halizah but by the actual birth of a viable child.

(13) Whether the rival gave birth to a child or not. V. infra note 5.

(14) Her rival who might he pregnant.

(15) Until it is definitely ascertained whether her rival had given birth to a viable child.

(16) After a period of nine months (v. supra p. 843, n. 15), and so procure her freedom to marry again.

(17) Since either she is exempted altogether from the levirate obligations by the birth of her rival's child (if one was horn) or (if no viable child was born) she gains her freedom by the halizah.

(18) That no halizah must be performed; v. supra n. 3.

(19) Of the rival.

(20) In consequence of which the halizah would become null and void as if it had never taken place.

(21) Lit., ‘it is found’.

(22) That the halizah was unnecessary and consequently null and void.

(23) I.e., that she is permitted to marry a priest.

(24) V. supra note 10.

(25) Should she eventually be married to a priest.

(26) Supra 118b, q.v. for notes.

(27) From a former husband; before she was married to the one now deceased. As a divorcee she remains forbidden to marry a priest even if the halizah is subseqeuntly found to have no validity.

(28) She and her husband together with their son.

(29) When death occurred. Since no one was present there is no need to provide against the possibility of the appearance of witnesses.

(30) The wives of two brothers.

(31) Lit., ‘this’.

(32) To marry a stranger.

(33) Who might, in fact, he alive and with whom halizah or levirate marriage must he performed. A woman is eligible to tender evidence on the death of her husband in so far only as to enable herself to marry again. She is ineligible, however, to give evidence enabling her sister-in-law to marry again.

(34) To marry again.

(35) That her husband was dead.

(36) To marry a stranger; since there are no witnesses to testify to the death of the levir. The evidence of his wife alone (cf. supra n. 4) is not sufficient for the purpose.

(37) To marry any stranger; since she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband while in respect of the death of the levir the evidence of the witnesses is available.

(38) And neither had witnesses.

(39) Who exempt their mother from the levirate bond.

(40) And who is consequently subject to the levirate bond of a man whose death is attested only by her sister-in-law whose word cannot he accepted (cf. supra n. 4).

(41) The two sisters-in-law spoken of in the first clause of our Mishnah, neither of whom had children nor was able to produce witnesses to attest her husband's death.

(42) With the levirs other than the absent husbands.

(43) V. supra note 12.

(44) Any stranger. Though the evidence of each woman was valid to enable herself to contract levirate marriage, it is not valid to exempt her sister-in-law- from the levirate bond (cf. supra note 4), and the possibility that their absent levirs (the first husbands) were still alive must he taken into consideration.
(45) Var. lec. R Eliezer.
(46) On the assumption that their husbands were dead.
(47) Of two sisters-inlaw who stated that their husbands were dead.
(48) To confirm her statement.
(49) The former because of her children who exempt her from the levirate bond; and the latter, because witnesses had testified to the death of her levir while she herself is believed in respect of the death of her husband.
(50) Cur. edd. do not indicate by the usual stops that this passage is derived from our Mishnah. Cf. however, Bomb. ed.
(51) By a statement whereby she injures her associate.
(52) Her evidence here would injure herself as it would her associate. Where, however, her associate alone would be the sufferer a rival's evidence is not accepted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 120a

That of allowing[1] her rival to marry before herself. If it is granted that a rival may give evidence in favour of her associate, her rival may be permitted to marry even if she herself did not remarry. If, however, it be maintained that the reason is because she would not cause injury to herself, the rival would be permitted to marry only if she herself had married again, but if she herself did not remarry, her rival also would not be permitted to remarry. Now, what [is the decision]? — Come and hear: R. ELEAZAR RULED: SINCE THEY WERE ONCE PERMITTED TO THE LEVIR THEY ARE PERMITTED TO MARRY ANY MAN. Now, if it be granted that [the reason is because] she would not cause injury to herself one can well see the reason why only when the one married again is the other permitted to remarry. If it be maintained, however, that the reason is because a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, [the associate should be permitted to marry again] even if the rival did not remarry. Consequently it must be concluded[2] that R. Eleazar's reason is: Because she[3] herself had married again and she would not cause injury to herself! — R. Eleazar may have argued on the basis of the view of the Rabbis.[4] ‘According to my view [he may have said in effect] a rival is eligible to tender evidence in favour of her associate, and even if she herself did not remarry the other may be allowed to marry again. According to your view, however, you must at least agree with me that where she herself’ remarried the other also should be allowed to marry again, since she[3] would naturally not injure herself!’ And the Rabbis?[5] — She might be acting [in the spirit of] let me die with the Philistines.[6]

Come and hear: If a woman and her husband went to a country beyond the sea, and she returned and stated, ‘My husband is dead’, she may be married again and she also receives her kethubah. Her rival, however, is forbidden. R. Eleazar[7] ruled: Since she becomes permitted her rival also becomes permitted![8] — Read: Since she was permitted and she married again. Let it, however,[9] be apprehended that she[3] may have returned with a letter of divorce and that the reason why she made her statement[10] is because it was her intention to injure her rival![11] — If she was married to an Israelite, this would be so indeed;[12] but here we are dealing with one who married a priest.[13]

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE [OF IDENTITY][14] MAY BE LEGALLY TENDERED[15] ONLY ON [PROOF AFFORDED BY] THE FULL FACE[16] WITH THE NOSE, THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS ON THE MAN'S BODY OR CLOTHING. NO EVIDENCE [OF A MAN'S DEATH][15] MAY BE TENDERED BEFORE HIS SOUL HAS DEPARTED; EVEN THOUGH THE WITNESSES HAVE SEEN HIM WITH HIS ARTERIES CUT[17] OR CRUCIFIED OR BEING DEVOURED BY A WILD BEAST.[18] EVIDENCE [OF IDENTIFICATION] MAY BE TENDERED [BY THOSE] ONLY [WHO SAW THE CORPSE] WITHIN[19] THREE DAYS [AFTER DEATH].[20] R. JUDAH B. BABA, HOWEVER, SAID: NEITHER ALL MEN, NOR ALL PLACES, NOR ALL SEASONS[21] ARE ALIKE.[22]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: Evidence [of identification][23] may be tendered[24] only on [proof afforded by] the forehead without the face[25] or the face without the forehead — Both together with the nose must[19] be present.[26]

Abaye, or it might be said, R. Kahana, stated: What is the Scriptural proof?[27] — The shew of their countenance[28] doth witness against them.[29]

Abba b. Martha, otherwise[30] Abba b. Manyumi, was being pressed for the payment of some money by the people of the Exilarch's house. Taking some wax he smeared it on a piece of rag and stuck it upon his forehead. He passed before them and they did not recognize him.[31]

THOUGH THERE WERE ALSO MARKS etc. Does this imply that identification marks are not valid Pentateuchally? A contradiction, surely, may be pointed out: If he[32] found it[33] tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring[34] or if it was found among his furniture,[35] even after a long time, it[33] is valid![36] — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one is the view of[37] R. Eliezer[38] b. Mahebai while the other is that of[37] the Rabbis. For it was taught: No evidence [of identification] by a mole may he legally tendered. R. Eliezer[38] h. Mahebai ruled: Such evidence may be legally tendered. Do they not differ on the following principle,[39] that one Master[40] is of the opinion that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally[41] while the other Master[42] is of the opinion that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid? — Said Raba: All[43] agree that identification marks are valid Pentateuchally; but here they differ on the question whether it is common for the same kind of mole to he found on persons of simultaneous birth.[44] One Master[42] is of the opinion that it is common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth,[45] and the other Master[46] is of the opinion that it is not common for the same kind of mole to be found on persons of simultaneous birth.[47]

Others say: Their[48] point of difference here is whether a mole usually undergoes a change after one's death — One Master[49] is of the opinion that it usually undergoes a change after one's death[50] and the other Master[46] is of the opinion that it does not usually undergo a change after one's death.

Others maintain that Raba said: All[51] agree that identification marks are only Rabbinically valid; but here [it is on the question] whether a mole constitutes a distinct[1] identification mark[2] that they differ. One Master is of the opinion that it constitutes a distinct identification mark,[2] and the other Master is of the opinion that it does not constitute a distinct identification mark.

With reference to the version according to which Raba stated that ‘identification marks are valid Pentateuchally’ [the objection might be raised:] Surely it was taught, THOUGH THERE WERE

ALSO MARKS ON THE MAN'S BODY OR CLOTHING![3] — As to the BODY [the marks indicated by the witnesses were only that the corpse was] long or short;[4] and as to one's CLOTHING [no reliability can be placed upon their identification] since borrowing might be apprehended.[5] If, however, borrowing is to be apprehended how could we allow the return of an ass[6] on [the strength of] the identification marks of a saddle![7] — People do not borrow a saddle because it makes the back of the ass sore.[8] Where one 'found it tied to a bag, a purse or a seal-ring',[9] how do we allow its return![10] — As to a seal-ring one is afraid of forgery;[11] as to one's bag and purse, people are superstitious[12] and do not lend such objects.[13] And if you prefer I might say [that the identification marks of one's] CLOTHING [consisted in a statement] that they were white or red.[14]

EVEN THOUGH THE WITNESSES HAVE SEEN HIM WITH HIS ARTERIES CUT etc. This then implies that a man whose arteries have been cut may live; but this is inconsistent with the following: A person does not cause defilement[15] before his soul has departed, even though his arteries had been cut and even though he is in a dying condition.[16] [Thus it follows that] it is only defilement that he does not cause but that it is impossible for him to live![17] — Abaye replied: This is no difficulty. The one represents the view of[18] R. Simeon b. Eleazar; the other that of[18] the Rabbis. For it was taught: Evidence may be legally tendered on [the death of a person] whose arteries were cut,[19] but no such evidence may be tendered concerning one crucified. R. Simeon b. Eleazar ruled: No such evidence may be legally tendered even concerning one whose arteries were cut, because [the wounds] might be cauterized and [the man] may survive.[20] Can this,[21] however, be reconciled[22] with the views of R. Simeon b. Eleazar? Surely in the final clause[23] it was taught: It once happened at Asia that a man[24] was lowered into the sea and Only his leg was brought up,[25] and the Sages ruled: [If the recovered leg contained the part] above the knee [the man's wife] may marry again,[26] [but if it contained only the part] below the knee she may not remarry![27] — Waters are different since they irritate the wound.[28] But, surely, Rabbah b. Bar Hana related: I myself have seen an Arab merchant who took hold of a sword and cut open the arteries of his camel, but this did not cause it to cease its cry![29] — Abaye replied: That [camel] was a lean animal.[30]

Raba replied: [The operation was performed] with a glowing hot knife,[31] and this is in agreement with the opinion of all.[32]

OR BEING DEVOURED BY A WILD BEAST etc. Rab Judah stated In the name of Samuel: This has been taught only in the case [where the attack was] not on a vital organ,[33] but where it was on a vital organ, evidence may be legally tendered.

Rab Judah further stated in the name of Samuel: If a person whose two organs[34] or the greater part of them were cut[35] escaped, evidence [of his death] may be legally tendered.[36] But this cannot be! For, surely, Rab Judah stated in the name of Samuel: If a man whose two [organs][34] or the greater part of them were cut[35] indicated by gestures, 'Write a letter of divorce for my wife', [such document] is to be written and delivered [to his wife]![37] — He is alive[38] but will eventually die.[39] If this is so[40] one[41] should go into exile[42] on account of him; while, in fact,[43] it was taught: If a man cut [unwittingly] the two, or the greater part of the two [organs[44] of another man] he is not to go into exile! — Surely in connection with this it was stated that R. Hoshaia explained: The possibility must be taken into consideration that the wind might have aggravated the wound[45] or that he himself[46] also may have brought on his death,[1] What is the practical difference between these [two explanations]? —

The case where one cut [another man's organs] in a house of marble[2] and the latter made some convulsive movements,[3] or also where he cut his organs out of doors and the latter made no convulsive movements.[4]

R. JUDAH . . . SAID: NOT ALL etc. The question was raised: Does R. Judah b. Baba differ [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law[5] or does he differ from him in imposing a greater restriction?[6] — Come and hear: A man was once drowned at Karmi and after three days he was hauled up at Be Hedya, and R. Dimi of Nehardea allowed his wife to remarry. And again, it happened that a man was drowned in the Tigris[7] and after five days he was hauled up to the Shebistana bridge[8] and, on the evidence of the shoshbinim,[9] Raba permitted his wife to marry again — Now, if you grant that he[10] differs [from the first Tanna] in relaxing the law, they[11] might well have acted in accordance with the ruling of R. Judah b. Baba. If you should contend, however, that he[10] differed in imposing a greater restriction, in accordance with whose view [it may be asked] did they[11] act? — Waters are different because they cause contraction.[12] But, surely, you said that ‘waters [are different since they] irritate the wound’! — That applies only where a wound exists, but where no wound exists waters cause contraction. This, furthermore, applies only where the witnesses saw the body as soon as it was brought up, but if it remains some time, it swells.[13]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN FELL INTO THE WATER, WHETHER IT HAD [A VISIBLE] END[14] OR NOT, HIS WIFE IS FORBIDDEN [TO MARRY AGAIN].[15] SAID R. MEIR: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN FELL INTO A LARGE CISTERN AND ROSE TO THE SURFACE[16] AFTER THREE DAYS.[17] SAID R. JOSE: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A BLIND MAN DESCENDED INTO A CAVE.[18] TO PERFORM RITUAL ABLUTION WHILE HIS GUIDE WENT DOWN AFTER HIM; AND AFTER WAITING LONG ENOUGH FOR THEIR SOULS TO DEPART, PERMISSION WAS GIVEN TO THEIR WIVES TO MARRY AGAIN.[19] ANOTHER INCIDENT OCCURRED AT ASIA[20] WHERE A MAN WAS LOWERED INTO THE SEA, AND ONLY HIS LEG WAS BROUGHT UP,[21] AND THE SAGES RULED: [IF THE RECOVERED LEG CONTAINED THE PART] ABOVE THE KNEE [THE MAN'S WIFE] MAY MARRY AGAIN,[22] [BUT IF IT CONTAINED ONLY THE PART] BELOW THE KNEE, SHE MAY NOT MARRY AGAIN.[23]

GEMARA. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into water, whether it had [a visible] end[24] or not, his wife is forbidden [to marry again];[25] so R. Meir. But the Sages ruled: [If he fell into] water that has [a visible] end,[24] his wife is permitted [to marry again],[26] but [if into water] that has no [visible] end[27] his wife is forbidden [to marry again].[28]

What is to be understood by ‘has [a visible] end’? — Abaye replied: [An area all the boundaries of which] a person standing [on the edge] is able to see in all directions.[29]

Once a man was drowned in the swamp of Samki, and R. Shila permitted his wife to marry again. Said Rab to Samuel: ‘Come, let us place him under the ban’.[30] ‘Let us first’, [the other replied,] ‘send to [ask] him [for an explanation]’. On their sending to him the enquiry: ‘[If a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end. is his wife forbidden or permitted [to marry again]’? he sent to them [in reply], ‘His wife is forbidden’ — ‘And [they again enquired] is the swamp of Samki regarded as water that has [a visible] end or as water that has no [visible] end?’ — ‘It is’, he sent them his reply, ‘a water that has no [visible] end’. ‘Why then did the Master [they asked] act in such a manner?’[31] — ‘I was really mistaken’, [he replied]; ‘I was of the opinion that as the water was gathered and stationary it was to be regarded as "water which has [a visible] end", but the law is in fact not so; for owing to the prevailing waves it might well be assumed that the waves carried [the body] away’.[32] Samuel thereupon applied to Rab the Scriptural text, There shall no mischief befall the righteous,[33] while Rab applied to Samuel the following text: But in the multitude of counsellors there is safety.[34]

It was taught: Rabbi related how it once happened that while two men were casting nets in the Jordan one of them entered a subterranean fish pond[35] and when the sun had set he could not find the entrance of the cave. His companion, after waiting long enough for his soul to depart, returned and reported the accident to his household. On the following day when the sun rose [the first man] discovered the entrance of the cave, and on returning he found his household in deep mourning[36] ‘How great’, exclaimed Rabbi, ‘are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end his wife is permitted [to marry again, but if into water] which has no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden’.If so,[37] then also in the case of water which has [a visible] end the possibility of having remained in a subterranean fish pond should be taken into consideration! — It is not usual for a subterranean fish pond to be found with water which has [a visible] end.[38]

R. Ashi said: The ruling of the Rabbis [that where a man has fallen into] water which has no [visible] end his wife is forbidden [to marry again]. applies only to an ordinary person but not to a learned man for, should he be rescued.[39] the fact would become known.[40] This, however, is not correct; for there is no difference between an ordinary man and a learned man. Ex post facto, the marriage[41] is valid; ab initio, it is forbidden.

It was taught: R. Gamaliel related, ‘I was once travelling on board a ship when l observed a shipwreck and was sorely grieved for [the apparent loss of] a scholar[42] who had been travelling on board that ship. (And who was he? — R. Akiba.) When I subsequently landed, he[43] came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", I asked him, "who rescued you?" "The plank of a ship", he answered me, "came my way, and to every wave that approached me I bent my head" —[44] Hence the Sages said that if wicked persons attack a man let him bend his head to them.[45] At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Stages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden’.

It was taught: R. Akiba related, ‘l was once travelling on board a ship when I observed a ship in distress,[46] and was much grieved on account of a scholar who was on it.(And who was it? — R. Meir.) When l subsequently landed in the province of Cappadocia[47] he came to me and sat down and discussed matters of halachah. "My son", l said to him, "who rescued you?" — "One wave" he answered me, "tossed me to another, and the other to yet another until [the sea] cast me[48] on the dry land". At that hour I exclaimed: How significant are the words of the Sages who ruled [that if a man fell into] water which has [a visible] end, [his wife] is permitted [to marry again; but if into] water which has no [visible] end, she is forbidden’. Our Rabbis taught: If a man fell into a lion's den, no evidence[49] may be legally tendered concerning him;[50] but if into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, evidence[49] may legally be tendered concerning him.[50] R. Judah b. Bathyra ruled: Even [if he fell] into a pit full of serpents and scorpions, no evidence[49] may legally be tendered concerning him,[50] since the possibility must be taken into consideration

(1) So that the man who inflicted the wounds was not the direct cause of death. Hence he is not to be exiled, though the wife of the victim may well be allowed to marry again on the evidence of the infliction of such mortal wounds.

(2) Where no wind can penetrate.

(3) According to the first explanation. since no aggravation could have resulted from wind, the offender must be condemned to exile. According to the second explanation he is exonerated, since it is possible that the convulsive movements of the victim brought on his death.

(4) Aggravation by wind is possible, while the bringing on of death by the victim himself cannot be assumed.

(5) While the first Tanna requires the evidence to be based on an examination of the corpse within three days of death, R. Judah allows it, in certain circumstances, even after three days.

(6) Disregarding the evidence under certain conditions even within three days.

(19) R. Jose is of the opinion that no human being can survive so long (v. p. 854, n. 8) in water, and death may, therefore, be regarded as a certainty. In the case of water ‘that has no visible end’, however, he agrees with R. Meir, since it is possible that the body was thrown up on a distant shore where it was restored to life.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 121b

that he might be a charmer.[1] But the first Tanna?[2] — Owing to the pressure[3] they[4] injure him.[5]

Our Rabbis taught: [If a man] fell into a burning furnace, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him, [and also if he fell] into a boiler that was full of [boiling][6] wine or oil, evidence may be legally tendered concerning him. In the name of R. Aha It was stated: [If the man fell into a hot boiler] of oil, evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it[7] adds fuel to the fire;[8] [but if into one] of wine, no evidence may legally be tendered concerning him, because it[9] extinguishes [the fire].[10] They,[11] however, said to him: At first it[9] extinguishes [the fire to a certain extent] but eventually it causes it to burn [with greater vehemence].[12]

SAID R. MEIR: IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN FELL INTO A LARGE CISTERN etc. It was taught: They said to R. Meir, ‘Miracles cannot be mentioned [as proof]’.[13] What [did they mean by] ‘miracles’?[14] If it be suggested because he neither eats nor drinks, surely [it may be pointed out], It is written in Scripture, And fast ye for me, and neither eat nor drink [three days]![15] — Rather because he does not sleep. For R. Johanan stated: [A man who said]. ‘I take an oath that I will not sleep for three days’ is to be flogged[16] and he may sleep at once.[17] What then is R. Meir's reason?[18] — R. Kahana replied: There were[19] arches above arches.[20] And the Rabbis?[21] — They[22] were of marble.[23]

And R. Meir? — It is hardly possible that the man did not hang[24] on to [the arches] and doze a while.

Our Rabbis taught: It once happened that the daughter of Nehonia the well[25] -digger[26] fell into a large cistern, and people went and reported [the accident] to R. Hanina b. Dosa.[27] During the first hour he said to them, ‘All is well’.[28] In the second hour he again said, ‘All is well’.[28] In the third he said to them, ‘She is saved’.[29] ‘My daughter’, he asked her, ‘who saved you?’ — ‘A ram[30] came to my help[31] with an aged man[32] leading it’. ‘Are you’, the people asked him, ‘a prophet?’ — ‘I am’, he replied, ‘neither prophet nor the Son of a prophet; but should the [beneficent] work in which the righteous is engaged[33] be the cause of disaster[34] to his seed!’ R. Abba stated: His[35] son nevertheless died of thirst; for it is said in Scripture, And round about Him it stormeth mightily,[36] which teaches that the Holy One, blessed be He, deals strictly with those round about Him even to a hair's[37] breadth. R. Hanina said, [Proof[38] may be adduced] from here: A God dreaded in the great council of the holy ones, and feared of all them that are round about Him.[39]

MISHNAH. EVEN [A MAN ONLY] HEARD WOMEN SAYING, ‘SO-AND-SO IS DEAD’, THIS SHOULD SUFFICE FOR HIM.[40] R. JUDAH SAID: EVEN IF HE ONLY HEARD CHILDREN SAY, ‘BEHOLD WE ARE GOING TO MOURN FOR A MAN NAMED SO-AND-SO AND TO BURY HIM’ [IT IS SUFFICIENT].[40] WHETHER [SUCH STATEMENT WAS MADE] WITH THE INTENTION [OF TENDERING EVIDENCE] OR WAS MADE WITH NO SUCH INTENTION [IT IS VALID]. R. JUDAH B. BABA SAID: WITH AN ISRAELITE [THE EVIDENCE IS VALID] EVEN IF THE MAN HAD THE INTENTION [OF ACTING AS WITNESS]. IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER, THE EVIDENCE IS INVALID IF HIS INTENTION WAS [TO ACT AS WITNESS].

GEMARA. Is it not possible that they[41] did not go?[42] — Rab Judah replied in the name of Samuel: [Our Mishnah deals with a case] where they[41] Say, ‘Behold we are returning from the mourning for, and the burial of So-and-so’.Is it not possible that a mere ant[43] had died and that the children gave it the man's name?[44] — [It is a case] where they[45] say, ‘Such and such Rabbis were there’ or ‘such and such funeral orators were there’.

IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER . . . IF HIS INTENTION WAS etc. Said Rab Judah in the name of Samuel: This[46] was taught only in the case where it was his[47] intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,[48] but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid. How could this[49] be ascertained? — R. Joseph replied: If he came to Beth din and stated. ‘So-and-so is dead, allow his wife to marry again’, such evidence is one where his intention was to enable [the woman] to be permitted,[48] [but if he stated], ‘He is dead’, and nothing more, his intention was merely to give evidence.

So It was also stated:[50] Resh Lakish said, This[46] was taught only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted,[48] but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid.

Said R. Johanan to him:[51] Did it not happen with Oshaia Berabbi,[52] that he opposed[53] eighty-five elders saying to them that, ‘This[46] was taught Only in the case where it was his intention to enable [the woman] to be permitted[48] but if his intention was merely to give evidence his testimony is valid’, but the Sages did not agree with him![54]

But according to the ruling in our Mishnah, that[55] IN THE CASE OF AN IDOLATER, HOWEVER, THE EVIDENCE IS INVALID IF HIS INTENTION WAS [TO ACT AS WITNESS],[56] how is it possible [for the idolater's testimony ever to be accepted]?[57] — Where he makes a statement at random;[58] as was the case where one went about saying, ‘Who of the family of Hiwai is here? Who is here of the family of Hiwai? Hiwai is dead!’, and R. Joseph allowed his[59] wife to marry again.

A man[60] once went about saying, ‘Alas for the valiant rider who was at Pumbeditha, for he is dead’; and R. Joseph, or it might be said, Raba, allowed his wife to marry again.

A man once went about saying, ‘Who of the family of Hasa is here? Hasa is drowned!’ [On hearing this] R. Nahman exclaimed, ‘By God, the fish must have eaten Hasa up!’ Relying on R. Nahman's exclamation, Hasa's wife went and married again, and no objection was raised against her action.[61]

Said R. Ashi: From this[62] it may be inferred that the ruling of the Rabbis[63] that [if a man had fallen into] water which had no [visible] end, his wife is forbidden [to marry again] applies only ab initio, but if someone had already married her, she is not to be taken away from him.

Others read: R. Nahman allowed his[64] wife to marry again; for he said, ‘Hasa was a great man, and had he come up [out of the water] his rescue would have become known’. The law, however, is not so. For there is no difference between a great man and one who is not great — [In either case] it is permitted[65] ex post facto and forbidden[66] ab initio.

A certain idolater ‘once said to an Israelite, ‘Cut some grass[67] and throw it to my cattle on the Sabbath; if not, I will kill you as I have killed So-and-so, that son of an Israelite, to whom I said, "Cook for me a dish on the Sabbath", and whom, as he did not cook for me, I killed’. His wife[68] heard this and came to Abaye.[69] As he kept her waiting

(2) Why, in view of R. Judah b. Bathyra's reason, does he admit evidence of death in the latter case?

(3) Of the falling body.

(4) The serpents and scorpions.

(5) In a lion's den, however, there is much more space, and the body might sometimes fall to one side and the animals, if they happened to be full, would leave it untouched.

(6) Standing over the fire.

(7) The oil when, owing to the fall of the body, it flows over the sides of the boiler into the fire beneath it.

(8) Lit., ‘it causes to burn’.

(9) The wine (cf. supra n. 9).

(10) And, owing to the cooling caused by the liquid, the man might be saved from actual death.

(11) The Rabbis, represented by the view of the first Tanna.

(12) Hence the ruling that evidence of death may be accepted in the case of a fall into a hot boiler whether the contents be oil or wine.

(13) In the natural course of events the man could not survive long in a cistern. If his death were not caused by the water, some other causes would inevitably bring it about. V. infra.

(14) I.e., why should not the man be able to survive if he could keep his head above the water?

(16) Malkoth (v. Glos.); for taking a false oath, It is impossible for a human being to live for three days without sleep.

(17) In three days’ time, accordingly, a man who had fallen into a cistern would inevitably succumb to fatigue and the physical necessity for sleep, and would in the natural course of events be drowned.

(18) If no one can withstand the necessity for sleep. why does not R. Meir, in the circumstances mentioned, admit the evidence?

(19) In the cistern mentioned in our Mishnah.

(20) Where the man might have slept in comparative safety.

for three festivals,[1] R. Adda b. Ahabah said to her, ‘Apply[2] to R. Joseph, whose knife is sharp’.[3] When she came to him he decided[4] [her case by deduction] from the following Baraitha:[5] If an idolater who was selling fruit in the market declared, ‘These fruits are of ‘orlah,[6] of a newly broken field,[7] or of a plantation in its fourth year’,[8] his statement is disregarded,[9] for his intention was merely to raise the value[10] of his fruit.[11]

Abba Judah of Zaidan[12] related: It once happened that an Israelite and an idolater went on a journey together and when the idolater returned he said, ‘Alas for the Jew who was with me on the journey, for he died on the way and I buried him’, and [the Israelite's] wife [on this evidence] was allowed to marry again. And, again it happened that a group[13] of men were going to Antiochia[14] and an idolater came and stated, ‘Alas for that group[13] of men, for they died and I buried them’, and [on this evidence] their wives were permitted to marry again. Moreover, it happened that sixty men were going to the camp[15] of Bether,[16] and an idolater came and stated, ‘Alas for sixty men who were on the way to Bether, for they died and I buried them’, and [on the basis of this statement] their wives were permitted to marry again.

MISHNAH. EVIDENCE[17] MAY BE TENDERED [EVEN IF THE CORPSE WAS SEEN BY THE WITNESSES] IN CANDLE LIGHT OR IN MOONLIGHT; AND A WOMAN MAY BE GIVEN PERMISSION TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF A MERE VOICE.[18] IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A MAN WAS STANDING ON THE TOP OF A HILL AND CRIED, SO-AND-SO SON OF SO-AND-SO OF SUCH-AND-SUCH A PLACE IS DEAD’, BUT WHEN THEY WENT [TO THE TOP OF THE HILL] THEY FOUND NO ONE THERE. HIS WIFE, HOWEVER, WAS PERMITTED TO REMARRY.[19] AGAIN, IT HAPPENED AT ZALMON[20] THAT A MAN DECLARED, ‘I AM SO-AND-SO SON OF SO-AND-SO; A SERPENT HAS BITTEN ME, AND I AM DYING’; AND THOUGH WHEN THEY WENT [TO EXAMINE THE CORPSE] THEY DID NOT RECOGNIZE HIM, THEY NEVERTHELESS PERMITTED HIS WIFE TO REMARRY.

GEMARA. Rabbah b. Samuel stated: A Tanna taught that Beth Shammai ruled that a woman may not be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice[19] and Beth Hillel ruled that she may be permitted to marry again on the evidence of a mere voice.[21] What does he[22] teach us?[23] This,[24] surely, is the ruling in our Mishnah![25] — It is this that he teaches us: Should an anonymous statement be found that a woman [in such circumstances] is not permitted to marry again, that [statement would represent the view of] Beth Shammai.

BUT WHEN THEY WENT . . . THEY FOUND NO ONE. Is it not possible that it was a demon [that cried]?[26] — Rab Judah replied in the name of Rab: [This is a case] where they[27] saw in him the likeness of a man! But they[28] also are in the likeness of men! — They[27] saw his shadow. But these[28] also have a shadow! They[29] saw a shadow of his shadow. Is it not possible that these[28] also cast a shadow of a shadow? — R. Hanina replied: The demon Jonathan[29] told me that they[28] have a shadow but not a shadow of a shadow. Is it not possible that it was a rival [that cried]?[30] — A Tanna at the school of R. Ishmael taught that at a time of danger[31] [a letter of divorce] may be written and delivered [to the woman][32] even if [the husband who gave the instructions][33] is unknown [to the witnesses].[34]

MISHNAH. R. AKIBA STATED: WHEN I WENT DOWN TO NEHARDEA TO INTERCALATE[35] THE YEAR, I MET NEHEMIAH OF BETH DELI[36] WHO SAID TO ME, ‘I HEARD THAT IN THE LAND OF ISRAEL NO ONE, WITH THE EXCEPTION OF R.[37] JUDAH B. BABA, PERMITS A [MARRIED] WOMAN TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS’. ‘THAT IS SO’, I TOLD HIM. TELL THEM’, HE SAID TO ME, ‘IN MY NAME: (YOU KNOW THAT THIS COUNTRY[38] IS IN CONFUSION BY REASON OF RAIDERs);[39] I HAVE THIS[40] TRADITION FROM R. GAMALIEL THE ELDER: THAT A [MARRIED] WOMAN MAY BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS'.[41] AND WHEN I CAME AND RECOUNTED THE CONVERSATION IN THE PRESENCE OF R. GAMALIEL[42] HE REJOICED AT MY INFORMATION AND EXCLAIMED, 'WE HAVE FOUND A COLLEAGUE[43] FOR R. JUDAH B. BABA!' AS A RESULT OF THIS TALK[44] R. GAMALIEL RECOLLECTED THAT SOME MEN WERE ONCE KILLED AT TEL ARZA,[45] AND THAT R. GAMALIEL [THE ELDER] HAD ALLOWED THEIR WIVES TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS.[46] AND THE LAW WAS ESTABLISHED THAT [A WOMAN] SHALL BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN [ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE] WITNESS [WHO STATES THAT HE HAS HEARD THE REPORT] FROM[47] ANOTHER WITNESS, FROM[47] A SLAVE, FROM[47] A WOMAN OR FROM[47] A BONDWOMAN. R. ELIEZER AND R. JOSHUA RULED: A WOMAN MAY NOT BE ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN ON THE EVIDENCE OF ONE WITNESS.[48] R. AKIBA RULED: [A WOMAN IS NOT ALLOWED TO MARRY AGAIN] ON THE EVIDENCE OF[49] A WOMAN, ON THAT OF[50] A SLAVE, ON THAT[50] OF A BONDWOMAN OR ON THAT OF RELATIVES.

GEMARA. Is R. Akiba then[51] of the opinion that on the evidence of[50] a woman,[52] [a wife is] not [permitted to marry again]? Surely, It was taught: R. Simeon b. Eleazar stated in the name of R. Akiba, '[That] a woman is eligible[53] to bring her own letter of divorce[54] is Inferred a minori ad majus: If those women concerning whom the Rabbis ruled that they[55] are not believed when they state, "Her husband[56] is dead"[57] are nevertheless eligible[53] to bring[58] her a letter of divorce,[59] how much more reasonable is it that this woman, who is believed when she states that her own husband is dead, should be eligible[53] to bring her own letter of divorce.' [Thus it follows that only] those women of whom the Rabbis have spoken[57] are not believed[60] but any other[61] woman is believed![62] — This is no difficulty. One ruling[63] was made[64] before the law,[65] had been established; the other,[64] after the law[65] had been established.

MISHNAH. THEY[66] SAID TO HIM:[67] 'IT ONCE HAPPENED THAT A NUMBER OF LEVITES WENT TO ZOAR,[68] THE CITY OF PALMS, AND ONE OF THEM WHO FELL. ILL WAS TAKEN BY THEM INTO AN INN. WHEN THEY RETURNED THEY ASKED THE INNKEEPER[69] WHERE IS OUR FRIEND?" AND SHE REPLIED, HE IS DEAD AND i BURIED HIM". [AND IT WAS ON THIS EVIDENCE THAT] HIS WIFE WAS PERMITTED TO MARRY AGAIN. SHOULD NOT THEN A PRIEST'S WIFE[70] [BE BELIEVED AT LEAST AS MUCH] AS THE INNKEEPER!'[71] HE ANSWERED THEM, WHEN SHE WILL BE [GIVING SUCH EVIDENCE] AS THE INNKEEPER SHE WILL BE BELIEVED. THE INNKEEPER [AS A MATTER OF FACT] HAD BROUGHT OUT TO THEM HIS[72] STAFF, HIS BAG[73] AND THE SCROLL OF THE LAW WHICH HE HAD WITH HIM.[74]

(1) ריגלי, when the scholars and students who were assembled for the purpose of listening to the festival discourses, were also asked to decide difficult points of law that had arisen during the preceding months. During these gatherings the woman had an opportunity of making enquiries about her vanished husband. According to תשובות בגאונים cited by Rashi, the ריגלי were the anniversaries of the deaths of distinguished men, when scholars from the surrounding localities as well as the general public assembled round the respective graves for study and for discussions of matters of law.

Josh. X, 10), that was famous for its choice fruit, the point in doubt being whether the fruit had originally belonged to an Israelite and whether It had been tithed. If this interpretation is to be followed the sale of the fruit mentioned presumably took place outside Palestine, where locally grown produce is free from tithe. For other interpretations cf. XLI, 45, ps. CX, 4) as רבא ‘great man’, ‘prince’. ‘Should not the lady enjoy the status of the innkeeper!’ Another interpretation applies כהנת to all Jewish women since any of them might become a כהנת by marrying a priest. (74) It was on this proof, and not on the evidence of the innkeeper, that they acted.

Talmud - Mas. Yevamoth 122b

GEMARA. What was the inferiority of the innkeeper?[1] R. Kahana replied: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random,[2] ‘This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him’. So it was also recited by Abba the son of R. Manyumi b. Hiyya: She was an innkeeper who was an idolatress and she said at random,[2] ‘This is his staff, and this is his bag and this is the grave wherein I buried him’. But, surely, they had asked her, ‘Where is our friend?’[3] — When she saw them she began to cry, and when they asked her, ‘Where is our friend?’ she replied, ‘He died and l buried him’,[4]

Our Rabbis taught: It once occurred that a man came to give evidence on behalf of a woman[5] before R. Tarfon. ‘My son’, [the Master] said to him, ‘what[6] do you know concerning the evidence for this woman?’ — ‘I and he’, the other replied, ‘were going on the same road and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped[7] the branch of an olive tree, pulled it down, and made the gang turn back. "Lion", I said to him, "I thank you".[8] "Whence did you know [he asked] that my name was Lion? So in fact I am called in my home town: Johanan son of R. Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya",[9] and after some time he fell ill and died’. And [on this evidence] R. Tarfon permitted his[10] wife to marry again.

Does not R. Tarfon, however, hold that inquiry and examination[11] are necessary? Surely it was taught: It once happened that a man came before R. Tarfon to give evidence on behalf of a woman.[5] My son’, he said to him, ‘What[6] do you know concerning this evidence?’ ‘I and he’, the other replied, ‘were going on the same road, and when a raiding gang pursued us he grasped the branch of a fig tree, pulled it down, and drove[12] the gang back. "I thank you,[13] Lion", I said to him, and he replied, "You have correctly guessed my name, for so I am called in my home town: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya", and after some time he died’. The Master said to him: Did you not tell me thus, ‘Johanan son of Jonathan of Kefar Shihaya the Lion’?[14] — ‘No’, the other replied, ‘but it is this that I told you: Johanan son of Jonathan, the Lion of Kefar Shihaya’. Having examined him closely[15] two or three times and the man's replies invariably agreeing, R. Tarfon permitted his[16] wife to marry again![17] — This [is a point in dispute between] Tannaim. For it was taught: Witnesses on matrimonial matters[18] are not to be subjected[19] to enquiry and examination.[20] These are the words of R. Akiba;[21] R. Tarfon, however, ruled: They are to be subjected.[22] And they[23] differ [in respect of a ruling] of R. Hanina. For R. Hanina stated: Pentateuchally both monetary, and capital cases must be conducted with enquiry and examination,[20] for it is said, Ye shall have one manner of law,[24] what then is the reason why they have ordained that monetary cases do not require enquiry and examination?[20] In order that you should not lock the door in the face of borrowers —[25] And it is on this principle that[26] they[23] differ: One Master is of the opinion that since the woman has[27] a kethubah to receive[28] [such cases[29] are] on a par with those of monetary matters,[30] while the other Master is of the opinion that since we are thereby permitting a married woman to marry a stranger[31] [such cases[32] are] on a par with capital cases.[33]

R.Eleazar said in the name of R. Hanna: Scholars[34] increase peace in the world, for it is said in the Scriptures, And all thy children shall be to taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.[35]

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 2a

C H A P T E R I

MISHNAH. A MAIDEN IS MARRIED[1] ON THE FOURTH DAY [OF THE WEEK] AND A WIDOW ON THE FIFTH DAY, FOR TWICE IN THE WEEK THE COURTS OF JUSTICE[2] SIT IN THE TOWNS, ON THE SECOND DAY [OF THE WEEK] AND ON THE FIFTH DAY, SO THAT IF HE [THE HUSBAND] HAD A CLAIM AS TO THE VIRGINITY [OF THE MAIDEN-BRIDE] HE COULD GO EARLY [ON THE MORNING OF THE FIFTH DAY OF THE WEEK] TO THE COURT OF JUSTICE.

GEMARA. R. Joseph said: Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: Why did they [the Rabbis] Say. A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY? Because we have learned:[3] 'If the time [appointed for the marriage] arrived and they[4] were not married,[5] they[4] eat of his [food][6] and they eat[7] of terumah'[8] — you might think that if the time arrived on the first day in the week he would have to supply her with food, therefore have we learned, A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY.[9] Said R. Joseph: Lord of Abraham![10] He [Samuel] attaches a Mishnah which was taught, to a Mishnah which was not taught! Which was taught and which was not taught? This was taught and this was taught! — But [put it this way]: he attaches a Mishnah, the reason of which was explained,[11] to a Mishnah, the reason of which was not explained.[12] But if it was said,[13] it was said thus; Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: Why did they say, A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY? Because IF HE HAD A Claim AS TO THE VIRGINITY HE COULD GO EARLY [NEXT MORNING] TO THE COURT OF JUSTICE — well, let her be married on the first day in the week, so that if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [on the morning of the second day of the week] to the court of justice! [The answer is:] The Sages watched over the interests[14] of the daughters of Israel so that [the bridegroom] should prepare for the [wedding.] feast three days, [namely] on the first day in the week, the second day in the week, and the third day in the week, and on the fourth day he marries her. And now that we have learned 'shakedu',[15] that [Mishnah] which we have learned: If the time arrived and they were not married, they eat of his [food] and they eat of terumah, [is to be understood as implying that if] the time arrived on the first day in the week, since he cannot marry [her, on the first day of the week, on account of the ordinance], he does not give her food [on the three days, from the first day of the week to the fourth day]. Therefore[16] [R. Joseph concludes], if he became ill or she became ill, or she became menstruous,[17] he does not give her food.

Some [scholars] there are who put this as a question: If he became ill, what is [the law]?[18] [Shall I say:] There.[19] the reason [he need not support her,] is because he is forced,[20] and here, he is also forced?[21] Or shall I say] perhaps, there.[22] he is forced[23] by an ordinance which the Rabbis ordained,[24] [but] here, [he is] not?[25] And if you will say:[26] If he became ill he supplies her with food, [then the question would still be:] if she became ill, what is [the law]? Can he say unto her, 'I am here ready to marry you'? Or, perhaps, she can say unto him, 'His field[27] has been flooded'?[28] And if you will say [that] she can say to him [when she falls ill], 'His field has been flooded.' [then the question is,] if she became menstrous, what is [the law]? During her regular time there is no question

(9) And thus to teach that it is not his fault that he does not marry her on the first day in the week, because the Rabbis ordained that he has to wait with the marriage till the fourth day (in the case of a maiden), or the fifth day (in the case of a widow).

(22) When the appointed date of the marriage falls on the first day of the week.
(23) To postpone the marriage.
(24) And therefore he need not support her.
(25) I.e., in this case he would have to support her since the postponement of the marriage is due to his illness.
(26) Lit., ‘And if you may be able (or, find it possible) to say.’
(27) Another reading is ‘thy field’. The sense is, of course, the same.
(28) I.e., it is his bad luck that she became ill, and consequently he must support her.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 2b

that she cannot say to him, ‘His field has been flooded’. When is the question asked? [If she became menstruous] not during her regular time, what is [the law]? Since it is not during her regular time, she can say unto him, ‘His field has been flooded’? Or, perhaps, since there are women who change their periods. It is as if it was her regular time? R. Ahai explained:[1] [We learnt:] When the time came and they were not married, they eat of his food and they eat of terumah.’[2] It does not state. ‘They [the men] did not marry them [the women]’ but [it says] ‘They [the women] were not married.’ In what case? If they prevent,[3] why do they eat of his food and eat of the terumah? Hence, you must say [must you not].[4] that they were forced as in this case,[5] and it states ‘they eat of his food and they eat of terumah’? — R. Ashi said: Indeed I can say[6] [that] in the case of an accident[7] she does not eat [of his].[8] And [here][9] they [the men] prevented.[10] And by right he ought to have stated, ‘they [the men] did not marry [the women].’[11] But since the first clause[12] speaks of them [the women] the latter clause also speaks of them [the women]?[13]

Raba said: And with regard to divorce[14] it is not so.[15] Accordingly Raba holds [that] accident is no plea in regard to divorce.[16] Whence does Raba get this [rule]? Shall I say, from what we have learned: ‘Behold this is thy bill of divorce if I come not [back] from now until twelve months,’[17] and he died within the twelve months, there is no divorce.[18] [And we would conclude from this that only if] he died there is no divorce,[19] but if he became ill[20] there is a divorce![21] But perhaps indeed I might say [that] if he became ill there would also he no divorce.[22] and [the Mishnah][23] lets us hear just this [rule], that there is no divorce after death.[24] [That] there is no divorce after death, a previous Mishnah[25] teaches: ‘Behold, this is thy bill of divorce if I die,’ [or] ‘behold, this is thy bill of divorce from this illness,’[26] [or] ‘behold, this is thy bill of divorce after [my] death,’ he has not said anything.[27] [But] perhaps [that[28] is] to exclude from that[29] of our teachers, for it has been taught: Our teachers allowed her to marry again.[30] And we said: Who are ‘our teachers’? Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: The court that allowed the oil [of the heathen]:[31] they[32] hold like R. Jose who said, ‘the date of the document shows it.’[33] But from the later clause:[34] ‘[This is thy bill of divorce][35] from now if I come not [back] from now [and] until twelve months’, and he died within the twelve months, it is a divorce. [And we may deduce] ‘if he died’, and the same rule applies if he became ill.[36] [But] perhaps [the divorce is effective] only when he died, because it was not pleasing to him that she should become subject to[37] the yabam![38] — But [the deduction can be made] from this: There was a certain [man][39] who said unto them:[40] ‘If I do not come [back] from now until thirty days it shall be a divorce.’[41] He came [back] at the end of thirty days but the ferry stopped him.[42] He said unto them,[43] ‘Look, I have come [back]; look, I have come [back]!’[44] Said Samuel: This is not regarded as having come back.[45] But perhaps an accident which is frequent[46] is different,[47] for since he ought to have stipulated it[48] and he did not stipulate it, he injured himself![49] — But [we must say] Raba expressed an opinion of his own:[50] On account of the chaste women and on account of the loose women.[51] On account of the chaste women,[52] because if you will say that it should not be a divorce.[53]

(10) The marriage from taking place now’.

(11) And not ‘they (the women) Here not married’.

(12) Of the Mishnah, quoted by R. Ahai: V. infra 57a.

(13) I.e., since that Mishnah speaks in the first clause of ‘maiden’ and ‘widow’, it uses in the clause that follows the passive ‘they were not married’ the subjects of which are the ‘maiden and the ‘widow’ to use the active ‘they did not marry’, referring to the men, would have required more words in that clause.

(14) Lit., ‘deeds (of divorce).’

(15) I.e., an accident, as explained infra, does not invalidate a divorce.

(16) Lit. , ‘there is no accident with divorce’.

(17) These words the husband says to the wife. ‘From now until twelve months, means ‘within twelve months,.

(18) Lit., ‘it is not a Get,’ (v. Glos.) that is, the divorce does not take effect: v. Git. 76b.

(19) Because there can be no divorce after death.

(20) And he could not come back within the twelve months through his illness.

(21) Which proves that we do not admit a plea of force majeure to invalidate a Get.

(22) For the plea of accident does apply to divorce.

(23) Git. 76b.

(24) And no other deduction, e.g.. as to illness, is to be made from that Mishnah.

(25) Git. 72a. Lit., ‘beginning’, ‘first clause’, denoting here a previous Mishnah.

(26) This phrase is not clear. V. Rashi here and Git. 72a. The phrase seems to mean, ‘If I die from this illness.’ v. Tosaf. a.l.

(27) I.e., his words have no effect.

(28) I.e., the Mishnah of Git. 76b quoted above.

(29) I.e., from the view of our teachers. If this is the object of (the first clause of) the Mishnah of Cit. 76b, Raba cannot deduce from this Mishnah that if he (the husband) became ill the divorce took effect: v. supra, also note 9.

(30) ‘Our teachers’ regard her as divorced (against the Mishnah) and allow her to marry again without halizah. If she is regarded as a widow and she has no children she requires halizah before she can re-marry. As to halizah v. Deut. XXV. 5-10. and Glos.

(31) V. A.Z. 36a and 37a.

(32) I.e., the members of the court of justice.

(33) [B.B. 136a: and so here the date inserted for the Get is intended to make it effective from the time of the delivery thereof. For further notes v. Git. (Sonc. ed.) p. 136].

(34) I.e., Raba deduces the rule that the plea of accident does not apply to divorce from the second clause of the Mishnah, cf. Git. 76b.

(35) v. Git. 76b.

(36) And he could not come back on account of his illness.

(37) Lit. , 'that she should fall before' (the yabam).

(38) The husband's brother, who, if she was regarded as a widow (and not as divorced), would have to marry her or let her perform halizah.

(39) A husband.

(40) Certain persons who might be witnesses.

(41) I.e., the bill of divorce given now shall become effective.

(42) The ferry was on the other side of the river and he could not get across, and he was thus prevented (by this accident) from arriving in his town within the thirty days.

(43) To persons standing near by.

(44) The divorce should therefore not take effect.

(45) Lit., 'Its name is not come back"' — the divorce, therefore, takes effect. This proves that force majeure is no plea in regard to Get.

(46) I.e., an accident which is likely to occur, as the ferry being on the other side of the river.

(47) Does not bar the divorce from becoming effective.

(48) That if the ferry should be on the other side of the river and he could not get across and come into his town, it should be regarded as if he had arrived in the town and come hack within the meaning of his condition, which would thus be regarded as not fulfilled, and the divorce would, consequently, not take effect.

(49) He has himself to blame. The attempted deduction from the ferry case is therefore refuted.

(50) Since the rule of Raba, that an accident is no bar to the effectiveness of the divorce, cannot be derived from any Mishnah or from the ferry case, it is attributed to himself that is to his own reasoning.

(51) By 'loose women' are meant women who would not be particular about marrying again even if the validity of the divorce was not established.

(52) The divorce should be effective.

(53) That the divorce should not become effective because of the accident.

sometimes [it may happen] that he was not held back by an accident,[1] and she would think that he was held back by an accident[2] and she would be tied, and sit.[3] And on account of the loose women, because if you will say [that] it should not be a divorce, sometimes [it may happen] that he was held back by an accident[4] and she would say[5] that he was not held back by an accident[6] and she would go and get married, and the result would be[7] [that] the divorce was invalid[8] and her children [from the second marriage] would be bastards.[9] But is it possible[10] that according to the law of the Bible it would not be a divorce[11] and on account of 'the chaste women' and on account of the 'loose women' we should allow a married woman[12] to the world?[13] — Yes, every one who betroths in accordance with the sense of the Rabbis he betroths,[14] and the Rabbis have annulled his betrothal.[15] Said Rabina to R. Ashi: This might be well[16] [if] he betrothed her with money,[17] [but if] he betrothed [her] by act of marriage, what can one say [then]? — The Rabbis have made[18] his act of marriage non-marital.[19]

Some, [however,] say[20] [as follows]: Raba said: And so [also] with regard to divorce. Accordingly Raba holds [that the plea of] accident applies to divorce.[21] An objection was raised: 'Behold this is thy bill of divorce if I come not [back] from now [and] until twelve months,' and he died within the twelve months, there is no divorce. [Now] if he dies there is no divorce, but if he became ill there would be a divorce! — Indeed l might say [unto thee] that if he became ill there would be no divorce either, and [the Mishnah] lets us hear just this [rule]: that there is no divorce after death. [That] there is no divorce after death a previous Mishnah teaches! — Perhaps [that is] to exclude from that of our teachers. Come and hear:[22] From now if I have not come [back] from now [and] until twelve months,' and he died within the twelve months.it is a divorce. Would not the same rule apply if he became ill? No, Only if he died, because it was not pleasing to him that she should become subject to the yabam. Come and hear: A certain [man] said unto them: ‘If I do not come [back] from now [and] until thirty days it shall be a divorce.’ He came [back] at the end of thirty days but the ferry stopped him. And he said unto them, ‘Look, I have come [back]; look, I have come [back]!’ And Samuel said: This is not regarded as having come back! — An accident which is frequent is different, for since he ought to have stipulated it and he did not stipulate it, he injured himself.

R. Samuel b. Isaac said: They have only taught[23] since the institution of Ezra[24] and after, [according to which] the courts of justice sit[25] only on the second day and on the fifth day [of the week]. But before the institution of Ezra, when the courts of justice sat every day, a woman[26] could be married on any day. Before the institution of Ezra, what there was there was![27] — He means it thus: If there are courts of justice that sit now as before the institution of Ezra,[28] a woman may be married on any day. But what of shakedu?[29] [We suppose] that he[30] had [already] taken the trouble.[31]

(1) Lit. ‘that he was not forced.’ The divorce would therefore certainly be effective.

(2) And the divorce would, in her view, not take effect (if the rule would have been that an accident is a bar to the divorce becoming effective).

(3) Lit. , ‘and she will be tied’. I.e., she would regard herself as tied to her absent husband and would not marry again. An ‘agunah is a woman tied to an absent husband’. The Rabbis endeavoured to prevent the state of ‘agunah; v. Git. 33a.

(4) And the divorce would not take effect.

(5) The use of ‘she would say’ here in contradistinction to ‘she would think’ in the case of the ‘chaste women’ is no doubt intentional. She (the loose woman) would say this, although she would not think so in her heart.

(6) In which case the divorce would become effective.

(7) Lit ‘and it is found.’

(8) If the divorce should not become effective because of an accident.

(9) The children of a married woman and a man who is not her husband are bastards, mamzerim; v. Yeb. 49a. This would be the case if the divorce would not become effective because of an accident and the first husband should turn up and say that he was held back by an accident. To prevent such evil results Raba established the rule that an accident should not be a bar to the divorce taking effect.

(10) Lit., ‘and is there anything?’

(11) [The Plea of force majeure as recognized in the Bible, v. Deut. XXII, 26.]

(12) Lit., ‘the wife of a man.’

(13) I.e.,to marry another man.

(14) Lit., ‘he sanctifies.’ ‘he consecrates.’ To sanctify, to consecrate a woman to oneself means to marry her. Kiddushin ‘sanctifications’ means ‘betrothal,’ ‘marriage.’ I.e every one who marries a woman marries her on the basis that the marriage is sanctioned by the law of the Rabbis.

(15) Lit. , ‘and the Rabbis have caused the betrothal to be released from him,’ that is retrospectively. As the marriage is subject to the sanction of the Rabbis, the Rabbis can, if the necessity arises, annul the marriage. Such a necessity has arisen when an accident would be a bar to the divorce becoming effective.

(16) The answer just given might be regarded as satisfactory.

(17) V. Kid. 2a.

(18) I.e., have declared it to be, or regard it.

(19) Lit ‘an intercourse of prostitution.’ The Rabbis have in either case the power to annul the marriage. The argument that Raba arrived at his views through his own reasoning stands.

(20) Lit., ‘There are some who say.’

(21) According to this version. Raba holds that an accident is a bar to the divorce becoming effective.

(22) From here till ‘he injured himself’ the text is practically identical with the corresponding text on folio 2b. There are only one or two omissions and one or two slight variations. For interpretation, v. notes on the translation of 2b. The difference of the arguments is obvious.

(23) That a maiden marries on the fourth day of the week.

(24) V. B.K. 82a.

(25) Lit., ‘are fixed. ,

(26) Even a maiden.

(27) That is past and does not matter!

(28) Every day.

(29) Lit., ‘we require they watched"’. V. supra 2a.

(30) The bridegroom.

(31) Of preparing for the wedding.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 3b

What is [the reference to] shakedu? [For] it has been taught: Why did they say that a maiden is married on the fourth day? ‘Because if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [next morning] to the court of justice. But let her be married on the first day in the week and if he had a claim as to virginity he could go early [on the morning of the second day in the week] to the court of justice? — The Sages watched over the interests of the daughters of Israel so that [the man] should prepare for the [wedding-]feast three days, the first day in the week, and the second day in the week, and the third day in the week, and on the fourth day he marries her. And from [the time of] danger and onwards the people made it a custom to marry on the third day and the Sages did not interfere with them. And on the second day [of the week] he shall not marry; and if on account of the constraint[1] it is allowed. And one separates the bridegroom from the bride on the nights of Sabbath at the beginning,[2] because he makes a wound.[3]

What [was the] danger? If I say that they[4] said, ‘a maiden that gets married on the fourth day [of the week] shall be killed’, [then how state] ‘they made it a custom’? We should abolish it entirely! — Said Rabbah: [That] they said, ‘a maiden that gets married on the fourth day [of the week] shall have the first sexual intercourse with the prefect.’[5] [You call] this danger? [Surely] this [is a case of] constraint![6] — Because there are chaste women who would rather surrender themselves to death and [thus] come to danger. But let one expound to them[7] that [in a case of] constraint [it] is allowed?[8] — There are loose women[9] and there are also priestesses.[10] But [then] let one abolish it?[11] A decree[12] is likely to cease, and [therefore] we do not abolish an ordinance of the Rabbis on account of a decree. If so, on the third day he [the prefect] would also come and have intercourse [with the bride]? — Out of doubt he does not move himself.[13]

[It is stated above:] ‘And on the second day [of the week] he shall not marry; and if on account of the constraint it is allowed.’ What constraint [is referred to]? Shall I say [that it is] that which we have said?[14] There,[15] one calls it ‘danger’ ‘and here, one calls it [mere] ‘constraint’! And further, there [it states], ‘they made it a custom’, [whilst] here, ‘it is allowed’![16] — Said Raba: [it is that] they say ‘a general has come to town.[17] In what case? If he comes and passes by,[18] let it be delayed![19] — It is not necessary [to state this but] that he came and stayed. Let him, [then], marry on the third day [of the week]![20] — His[21] vanguard arrived on the third day. And if you wish I may say: What is [the meaning of] ‘on account of the constraint’? As it has been taught: If his bread was baked and his meat prepared and his wine mixed[22] and the father of the bridegroom[23] or the mother of the bride died,[24] they bring the dead [person] into a room and the bridegroom and the bride into the bridal chamber,[25] and he performs the dutiful marital act[1] and [then] separates [himself from her].[2] And [then] he keeps the seven days of the [wedding-]feast[3] and after that he keeps the seven days of mourning.[3] And [during] all these days he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women.[4] And they do not withhold ornaments[5] from the bride all the thirty days.[6] [But that is] only [if] the father of the bridegroom or the mother of the bride [died], because there is [then] no one who should prepare for them [for the wedding], but not [in case of] the reverse.[7] Rafram b. Papa said [that] R. Hisda said: They taught [this] only when water had [already] been put on the meat, but if water had not [yet] been put on the meat, it is to be sold. Raba said: And in a city, although water had been put on the meat, it is sold.[8] R. Papa said: And in a village, although water had not been put on the meat, it is not sold.[9] But where [then] will you find [the rule] of R. Hisda [to apply]? Said R. Ashi: For instance, [in] Matha Mehasia,[10] which is neither a city nor a village.[11]

It has been taught according to R. Hisda: If his bread was baked and his meat prepared and his wine mixed and water had been put on the meat and the father of the bridegroom or the mother of the bride died, they bring the dead [person] into a room and the bridegroom and the bride into the bridal chamber, and he performs the dutiful marital act and [then] separates [himself from her]. And [then] he keeps the seven days of the [wedding-]feast and after that he keeps the seven days of mourning. And all these days he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women. And so [also] if his wife became menstruous does he sleep among the men and she sleeps among the women. And they do not withhold ornaments from the bride all the thirty days. In any case he must not perform the [first] marital act on the eve of Sabbath or in the night following the Sabbath.

The Master said [above]: ‘He sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women.’ This supports R. Johanan, for R. Johanan said: Although they said [that] there is no mourning on a festival, yet matters of privacy he keeps.[12] R. Joseph the son of Raba lectured in the name of Raba: They taught[13] only if he had yet no intercourse [with her],[14] but if he had [already] intercourse, his wife may sleep with him.[15] But here we deal with a case when he had intercourse, and still it teaches [that] he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women? — When did he[16] say [it]? With regard to his wife becoming menstruous. But it says. ‘And so [also if his wife became menstruous]'![17]

[17] And this would seem to show that there is no difference between the time of mourning and the period of menstruation.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 4b

— Thus he[1] means to say:[2] And so [also], if his wife became menstruous and he had not yet had intercourse [with her] he sleeps among the men and she sleeps among the women. Is this [then] to say that he treats mourning more lightly than menstruation?[3] Surely. R. Isaac the son of Hanina said that R. Huna said: All kinds of work[4] which a wife performs for her husband, a menstruant[5] may perform for her husband, except the mixing of the cup[6] and the making[7] of the bed and the washing of his face, his hands and his feet;[8] while with regard to mourning it has been taught: Although they[9] said: No man has a right to force his wife[10] to paint [her eyes] or rouge [her face], in truth[11] they said: She mixes him the cup[12] and she makes him the bed and she washes his face, his hands and his feet?[13] — [This is] not difficult; here[14] [it speaks] of his mourning,[15] there[16] [it speaks] of her mourning.[17] But it says:[18] 'The father of the bridegroom or the mother of the bride [died]'?[19] — This refers to the rest.[20] But is there a difference between his mourning and her mourning? Surely it has been taught: If a man's father-in-law or mother-in-law died,[21] he cannot force his wife to paint [her eyes] and to rouge [her face]. but he lowers his bed[22] and keeps mourning with her. And so [also] if a woman's father-in-law or mother-in-law died[23] she is not allowed to paint [her eyes] and to rouge [her face], but she lowers her bed and keeps mourning with him![24] — Teach with reference to his mourning 'he sleeps among the men and his wife sleeps among the women'.[25] But it says: 'And so [also]'?[26] — This refers to painting and rouging.[27] But it says 'with him'! Does this not mean,[28] with him in one bed? — No, [it means] with him in one house, and as Rab said to his son Hiyya: In her presence[29] keep mourning, in her absence do not keep mourning.[30] R. Ashi said: Can you compare this mourning[31] with ordinary mourning?[32] Ordinary mourning is strict and one would not deal lightly[33] with it. [But] this mourning, since the Rabbis were lenient [about it], one might deal lightly with it. What is the leniency? Shall I say. because it says he performs the dutiful act of marriage and separates [himself from her]? That is[34] because the mourning has not rested upon him[35] yet; [namely] if according to R. Eliezer, [the mourning does not begin] until the body has been taken out of the house,[36] and if according to R. Joshua, [the mourning does not begin] until the golel[37] has been closed![38] — But [the leniency is this,] because it says: He keeps [first] the seven days of the [wedding-]feast and after that he keeps the seven days of mourning.

The Master said: ‘In any case he must not perform the [first] marital act on the eve of Sabbath or in the night following the Sabbath. It is right [that he may not perform it] on the eve of Sabbath, because of a wound.[39] But in the night following the Sabbath, why not? — Said R. Zera:

(1) The Tanna of the cited Baraitha.

(2) Lit., ‘thus he says.’

(3) Lit., ‘that mourning is lighter to him (the husband) than menstruation’. The case of menstruation is limited to where no intercourse had taken place.

(4) Lit., ‘all works’.

(5) I.e., the wife during menstruation.

(15) And she might be tempted.

(16) Lit., ‘here.’ In the Baraitha just quoted.

(17) And she would resist temptation.

(24) Since it does not state in the latter case that he has to sleep among the men etc., it shows that there is no difference between his mourning and her mourning.

(25) And so there would be a difference between his mourning and her mourning. In his mourning there would be the precaution just stated, while in her mourning that precaution would not be required.

(26) This would show that there is no difference between his mourning and her mourning.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 5a

Because of accounts.[1] Said Abaye to him: And are accounts of a religious nature forbidden?[2] Surely R. Hisda and R. Hamnuna both said: Accounts of a religious nature, one is allowed to calculate them on Sabbath; and R. Eleazar said: One may assign charity to the poor on Sabbath; and R. Jacob said [that] R. Johanan said: One may go to synagogues and to schoolhouses to watch over public affairs[3] on Sabbath; and R. Jacob the son of Idi said [that] R. Johanan said: One may do any work to save a life[4] on Sabbath; and R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said [that] R. Jonathan said: One may go to theatres and circuses[5] to watch over public affairs on Sabbath; and [a scholar] of the school of Menashia taught: One may negotiate about the girls to be betrothed on Sabbath[6] and about a boy to teach him the book[7] and to teach him a trade? — But, said R. Zera, it has been prohibited[8] lest he might slaughter a fowl.[9] Said Abaye to him: But if this were so, then the Day of Atonement which fell on the second day of the week should be postponed[10] for fear[11] lest he might slaughter a fowl?[12] — There,[13] that [he has to prepare only] for himself he is not troubled [so much],[14] [but] here,[15] that [he has to prepare] for others,[16] he is troubled.[17] Or: there, he has an interval,[18] [but] here, he has no interval.[19] Now that you have come so far,[20] the eve of Sabbath[21] also is prohibited[22] for fear lest he might slaughter a fowl.[23]

The question was asked:[24] [Does the Mishnah mean:] A maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week], and the intercourse takes place on the fourth day, and we are not afraid that he might be pacified?[25] Or perhaps [the meaning is] a maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week], and the intercourse takes place on the fifth day[26] because we are afraid that he might be pacified? — Come and hear: Bar-Kappara taught: A maiden is married on the fourth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the fifth day[26] because on it [the fifth day] the blessing for the fishes was pronounced.[27] A widow is married on the fifth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the sixth day[28] because on it [the sixth day] was pronounced the blessing for man.[29] [We thus see that] the reason is on account of the blessing, but as to [his] being pacified we are not afraid. If so,[30] [in the case of] a widow also the intercourse should take place on the fifth day [of the week], because on it [the fifth day] was pronounced the blessing for the fishes?[31] — The blessing for man is better for him.[32] Or on account of 'they have watched,'[33] for it has been taught: Why did they[34] say [that] a widow is married on the fifth day [of the week] and the intercourse takes place on the sixth day? Because, if you will say that the intercourse should take place on the fifth day, in the morning[35] he will rise and go to his work;[36] therefore the Sages watched over the welfare[37] of the daughters of Israel that he should rejoice with her[38] three days, [namely] on the fifth day of the week,[39] on the eve of Sabbath[40] and [on] Sabbath.[41] What is the difference between 'the blessing' and 'they have watched'?[42] The difference is this:[43] [in the case of] a man of leisure,[44] or [in the case] when a festival falls on the eve of Sabbath.[45]

Bar-Kappara expounded: The work of the righteous[46] is greater than the work[47] of heaven and earth, for in [regard to] the creation of heaven and earth it is written, Yea, My hand hath laid the foundation, of the earth, and My right hand hath spread out the heavens,[48] while in [regard to] the work of the hands of the righteous it is written, The place which Thou hast made for Thee to dwell in, O Lord, the sanctuary, O Lord, which Thy hands have established.[49] Replied[50] one Babylonian, and R. Hiyya [was] his name: [It is written.] And the dry land his hands formed?[51] — It is [to be] written, 'His hand'.[52] But it is written, they formed?[53] — Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: 'His fingers formed,'[54] as it is written. When I behold Thy heavens, the work of Thy fingers, the moon and the stars which Thou hast established.[55]

An objection was raised: [It is written,] The heavens declare the glory of God, and the work of His hands the firmament shows?[56] — Thus he said:[57] The handiwork[58] of the righteous, who shews [it]?[59] The firmament. And what is it? Rain.[60]

Bar-Kappara [also] expounded: What [is the meaning of what] is written. And thou shalt have a peg among thy implements?[61] Do not read,[62] thy implements,[63] but ‘upon thy ear’;[64] [this means to say] that if a man hears an unworthy thing[65]

(3) Lit., ‘the affairs of many’.

(4) Lit., ‘one removes a person’ from under debris. The meaning is: One may do any work on Sabbath to save a life.

(5) Theatres and circuses were also places of general assemblies. in the same way public meetings were also held in synagogues and schoolhouses.

(6) I.e., one may negotiate the betrothal of them on Sabbath.

(7) I.e., the book, the Bible.

(8) Lit., ‘a preventive measure’. To have the first intercourse in the night following the Sabbath.

(9) Lit ‘the child of a fowl’, that is a young fowl. There is also the reading בו ‘on it’ i.e., on Sabbath for בן. He would be so busy thinking of the festive meal on Sabbath night that he might forget that it was Sabbath and slaughter a fowl for the dinner in the evening.

(10) For one day; v. Rashi.

(11) ‘As a preventive measure’.

(12) On Sabbath, since he would be busy thinking of the preparations for the meal on Sunday, which would be the eve of the Day of Atonement. On the eve of the Day of Atonement it is a religious duty to have a festive meal.

(13) In the case of the Day of Atonement.

(14) And he will not forget that it is Sabbath and he will not slaughter a fowl on Sabbath.

(15) In the case of the wedding-feast on Sabbath night.

(16) For the guests of the evening.

(17) And he might forget that it is Sabbath and he might slaughter a fowl on Sabbath.

(18) Sabbath night and Sunday morning. He does not have the important meal before midday or later on the day of the eve of the Atonement Day.

(19) The wedding-dinner would take place on Sabbath night as soon as Sabbath is out.

(20) To this result, namely that he must not perform the first intercourse in the night following the Sabbath because he might profane the Sabbath by slaughtering a fowl on Sabbath.

(21) Friday night.

(22) To have the first intercourse.

(23) On Friday evening, after Sabbath had already begun.

(24) Lit ‘it was asked by them’.

(25) Lit ‘cooling off to the (his) mind.’ That is, if he has intercourse on Wednesday and he has reason to complain as to virginity, his anger might cool off by Thursday morning and he might not go on Thursday to the court of justice; v. supra 2a.

(26) I.e., Wednesday evening, which belongs to the fifth day.

(27) Lit., said (by God).’ Cf. Gen. I, 20-23, especially 22.

(28) Thursday evening. v. n. 13.

(29) Cf. Gen. I, 26-28, especially 28.

(30) If the reason is on account of the blessing.

(31) It means this: If the reason is the blessing, why should not intercourse, in the case of a widow, take place on the same day as the marriage, namely on the fifth day? And on the fifth day there was the blessing for the fishes. And if that blessing is good enough for a maiden it should be good enough for a widow.

(32) For Bar Kappara. He considered the blessing for man a stronger reason. In the case of a maiden it is different, as, if her intercourse should take place on Friday, we should he afraid that he might be appeased by Monday, the first court-day after Friday. ‘Therefore the blessing for the fishes has to suffice in the case of the maiden.

(33) Shakedu, v. supra pp. 2 and 8. The ordinance that in the case of a widow the intercourse should take place on Friday was made in the interests of the daughters of Israel.

(34) The Sages.

(35) The next morning. In case of a widow the marriage festivities last only one day. V. infra 7a bottom.

(36) Lit., ‘he rises unto his trade (work) and goes his way. That is, he walks out of the house and leaves the whole wedding atmosphere behind him. This had to be prevented.
(37) Lit., ‘ordinance (for the welfare).’
(38) With the widow-bride.
(39) The day of the marriage.
(40) Friday, the day of the intercourse.
(41) The religious day of rest.
(42) What is the difference between these two reasons?
(43) Lit., ‘there is between them.’
(44) Lit., ‘an idle man.’ ‘They have watched’ would not apply to a man of leisure, as he need not go to work next day. But the intercourse would have to take place on Friday if the reason was ‘the blessing’.
(45) In which case Friday is a religious day of rest, and he would not go to work. But the reason of ‘the blessing’ would still operate for intercourse on Friday.
(46) Pious men.
(47) The creation.
(48) Isa. XLVIII, 13. There ‘My hand’ is written.
(49) Ex. XV, 17. In regard to the sanctuary, which is the work of the hands of pious men, ‘Thy hands’ is written.
(50) I.e., objected.
(51) Ps XCV, 5.
(52) [The kethib in some texts is ידו (‘his hand’).]
(53) [In the plural. so that the subject ‘hand’ must also be in the plural.]
(54) ‘Fingers’ is implied as subject.
(55) Ps. VIII, 4.
(56) Ps. XIX, 2. [Thus we have ‘hands’ written also in connection with creation.]
(57) Thus the Psalmist meant.
(58) Lit., ‘the work of their hands.’
(59) Who tells them, announces them?
(60) Rain comes because the pious pray for it. The handiwork of the righteous is called the ‘work of His hands’, because in the rain the work of God and the work of the righteous meet. The rain is the work of God, but it comes as the result of the good deeds of the pious, whose prayers God fulflls.
(61) Deut. XXIII, 14.
(62) [In the sense of ‘render’.]
(63) From אזן azayn ‘implement, tool’.
(64) As if from אזן ozen ‘ear’.
(65) Lit ‘a thing (or, a word) that is not worthy’, not fit to be heard.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 5b

he shall plug his finger[1] into his ears. And this is the same that R. Eleazar said: Why do the fingers of man resemble pegs? Why?[2] Shall I say because they are divided?[3] [Surely] each one has been made for its own purpose![4] For a Master said: This one[5] [Is used for measuring] the span;[6] this one[7] [is used for] taking a fistful of the meal-offering,[8] this one[9] [is used for defining] the cubit measure,[10] this one[11] [is used for taking the measure of] ‘a finger’,[12] [and] this one[13] [is used for service with] the thumb![14] — But [the question is] why[15] [are the fingers] pointed like pegs? [The reason is] that if a man hears an unworthy thing he shall plug his fingers into his ears. [A member] of the school of R. Ishmael taught: Why is the whole ear hard and the ear-lap soft? [So] that if a man hears an unworthy thing he shall bend the ear-lap into it.[16]

Our Rabbis taught: A man shall not let his ears hear idle things,[17] because they are burnt first of [all] the organs.[18]

The question was asked: Is it allowed[19] to perform the first marital act on Sabbath?[20] Is the blood [in the womb] stored up,[21] or is it the result of a wound?[22] And if you will say[23] [that] the blood is stored up [in the womb, then the question arises:] is he concerned about the blood,[24] and it is allowed: or is he concerned with the opening,[25] and it is forbidden?[26] And if you will say [that] he is concerned with the blood and the opening comes of itself, [then the question arises:] Is the halachah[27] according to R. Simeon who says: A thing which is not intended[28] is allowed; or is the halachah according to R. Judah who says: A thing which is not intended is forbidden?[29] And if you will say [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah [then the question arises], does he do damage in regard to the opening, or does he improve in regard to the opening?[30] Some say:[31] And if you will say that the blood is the result of a wound [then the question arises], is he concerned about the blood and it is forbidden,[32] or is he concerned with his own pleasure, and it is allowed? And if you will say [that] he is concerned with his own pleasure and the blood comes out of itself,[33] [then the question arises] is the halachah according to R. Judah or is the halachah according to R. Simeon? And if you will say [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah, [then the question arises,] does he do damage by [making] the wound, or does he improve by [making] the wound? And if you will say [that] he does damage by [making] the wound, [then the question arises,] with regard to one who does damage, is the halachah according to R. Judah,

---

(1) The finger is pointed like a peg.

(2) Lit., ‘what is the reason?’ I.e., what is the meaning of the question? With regard to what are the fingers of man like pegs?

(3) I.e., shall I say that the question is: Why are the fingers divided? They might have been joined together.

(4) Lit., ‘for its thing.’

(5) The little finger.

(6) I.e the distance from the little finger to the thumb of a spread hand.

(7) The finger next to the little finger.

(8) קמיצה the taking of a fistful of the meal-offering. v. Lev II, 2.

(9) The middle finger.

(10) The cubit is a measure equal to the distance from the elbow to the tip of the middle finger.

(11) The fourth from the little finger.

(12) And also for priestly service with the ‘finger’; cf. Lev. IV, 6.

(13) The fifth from the little finger.

(14) V. Lev. VIII, 23, 24; XIV, 14, 17, 25, 28. We thus see that every finger has a definite purpose. They therefore had to be divided and function as separate fingers!

(15) Lit., ‘what is the reason (that)?’

(16) Into the ear. He will thus close the ear and not hear the unworthy thing.

(17) Not only unworthy things. but even idle things a man should not hear, e.g tittle-tattle.

(18) Lit., ‘of the limbs.’ ‘Because they are burnt first of (all) the organs’ seems to have a figurative meaning. From hearing unworthy or idle things he may proceed to speak unworthy or idle things and then to do unworthy or idle things. The ear is thus the first organ to ‘be burnt’, to ‘catch fire’. c.f. Prov. VI, 27-28. If. the English phrase, ‘to burn one's fingers.’

(19) Lit ‘How is it?

(20) When the intercourse could not take place here Sabbath, (Tosaf.)

(21) And the intercourse would he allowed, since the blood flows out of its own accord, no wound having been made.

(22) Lit ‘or is it wounded?’ And the intercourse would be forbidden.

(23) Lit ‘And if you should he able to say.’

(24) Is his aim to release it? Lit., ‘is it the blood he requires?’ [According to Tosaf.: In order to see whether she is a virgin.

(25) Or is his aim to make an opening?

(26) It is forbidden to make an opening on Sabbath. [Such an act comes under the category of ‘building’.]

(27) ‘Adopted opinion’, ‘rule’.

(28) An act which is in itself forbidden but is the unintended though unavoidable result of an act which is permitted. Thus one may, according to R. Simeon, push a couch on the floor, on Sabbath, if one has not the intention to make a rut in the floor, although, as a matter of fact, such a rut is made as the unavoidable result of pushing the couch.

(29) R. Judah's view is opposed to that of R. Simeon; v. n. 4.

(30) Is the making of the opening considered to be to the advantage or disadvantage of the woman? If it is to her disadvantage it would he allowed even according to R. Judah. [Based on the principle that an act of damage does not constitute labour in regard to Sabbath. V. Shab. 106a.]

(31) Lit., 'there are who say', that the questions were with regard to the assumption that the blood is the result of a wound.

(32) To have the intercourse on Sabbath.

(33) The coming of the blood is therefore an unintended but unavoidable result of an act, the intended object of which is the pleasure.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 6a

or is the law according to R. Simeon?[1] In the school of Rab[2] they said: Rab allowed[3] and Samuel forbade.[3] In Nehardea[4] they said: Rab forbade and Samuel allowed. Said R. Nahman b. Isaac: And your [mnemotechnical] sign [is]: These make it lenient for themselves, and these make it lenient for themselves.[5] But does Rab allow it? Surely R. Shimi b. Hezekiah said in the name of Rab: [As regards] that stopper of the brewing boiler, it is forbidden to squeeze it in[6] on a festival day![7] — In that [case][8] even R. Simeon admits [that it is forbidden], for Abaye and Raba, both of them say: R. Simeon admits [that it is forbidden] in [a case of] 'Let his head be cut off, and let him not die!'[9] [But] R. Hiyya the son of Ashi said [that] Rab said: The halachah is according to R. Judah,[10] and R. Hanan the son of Ammi [said that] Samuel said: The halachah is according to R. Simeon.[11] And R. Hiyya the son of Abin taught it without [naming the] men:[12] Rab said [that] the halachah is according to R. Judah. and Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to R. Simeon? — Still, Rab holds like R. Judah, [but] according to that version that says, 'the blood is stored up [in the womb],' he does damage in regard to the opening,[13] [and] according to that version that says, 'the blood is the result of a wound,' he does damage in [making] the wound.[13]

R. Hisda objected: If a girl, whose period[14] to see [blood] had not arrived yet, got married, Beth Shammai[15] say: One gives her four nights,[14] and the disciples of Hillel say: Until the wound is healed up.[16] If her period to see [blood] had arrived[17] and she married, Beth Shammai say: One gives her the first night,[18] and Beth Hillel say: Until the night following the Sabbath [one gives her] four nights.[19]

---

(1) According to R. Simeon he who does damage by making a wound had to bring a sin-offering; v. Shab. 106a.

(2) In Sura. Before the words 'in the school of Rab', some texts have the word 'it has been said (that)'.

(3) To have the first intercourse on Sabbath.

(4) The place of Samuel.

(5) In Sura they said that Rab allowed it, and in Nehardea they said that Samuel allowed it.

(6) Into the bottle. The stopper is made of soft material, and, if it is squeezed, the liquid absorbed in the material would come out.

(7) This shows that Rab, like R. Judah, holds that a permitted action which results in a prohibited action, though the latter was not intended, is forbidden; v. p. 19, on. 4 and 5.

(8) Of the stopper in the brewing bottle.

(9) 'Let his head be cut off, and let him not die!' is a dialectic term for an absolutely unavoidable result of an act. V. Jast., s.v. פסק. In such a case R. Simeon admits that the act leading to the forbidden act is prohibited. This applies to the stopper. Intercourse, however, is different; v. infra 6b.

(10) V. p. 19. n. 5.

(11) V. p. 19. n. 4.

(12) I.e., without naming the authorities.

(13) V. supra p. 19, n. 6.

(14) Lit., 'time'.

(15) Lit., ‘the house’, i.e., the school, of Shammai. (15) In which she can have intercourse with her husband.

(16) The blood that comes out is attributed to the wound and not to menstruation. Ordinarily, after the first intercourse further intercourse is forbidden until the coming out of blood, i.e menstruation, is over. But in this case, in which the young bride had never yet had any menstruation, it is assumed that the blood is not due to menstruation but to the wound caused by the intercourse. According to Beth Shammai this assumption holds good for four nights, and according to Beth Hillel it holds good ‘until the wound is healed up.’ As to the definition of this phrase, v. Nid. 64b. V. also Nid. 65b, where it is finally decided that after the first coition no further intercourse must take place until the flowing of blood has stopped, even in the case of a young bride who had not yet had any menstruation. V. also Eben ha-’Ezer, 63, and Yoreh De'ah, 193.

(17) But she had in fact not yet seen blood; that is, she had the maturity for it, but the maturity had not yet manifested itself. A girl has reached the period of maidenhood (puberty) when she is twelve years and one day old. When she is twelve and a half years old she has reached the state of bogereth, (v. Glos.), full maturity, womanhood. V. infra 39a.

(18) He may repeat the intercourse during the first night.

(19) Mishnah in Nid. 64b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 6b

[Now] does it not[1] mean that if he had [yet] no intercourse [with his wife] he may have intercourse [with her] even on Sabbath?[2] — Said Raba: No, except Sabbath. Said Abaye to him: But it says, ‘until the night following the Sabbath [one gives her] four nights’?[3] — Only, said Raba, when he already had intercourse [with her].[4] If [it were, as you say,] after he already had intercourse, what does he let us hear?[5] — He lets us hear that it is allowed to have intercourse on Sabbath, as that [statement] of Samuel [teaches], for Samuel said: One may enter into a narrow opening on Sabbath,[6] although[7] he causes pebbles to break loose.[8]

R. Joseph objected: A bridegroom is free from the reading of Shema’[9] in the first night[10] until the night following the Sabbath, if he has not performed [yet] an act.[11] Is it not[12] because he is anxious to perform the marital act?[13] — Said Abaye to him: No; he is anxious because he has not had intercourse.[14] Said Raba to him: And on account of anxiety [only][15] he is free [from reading Shema’]? If this were so, then [if] his ship sank in the sea, he would also be free [from the reading of Shema’]! And should you say [that] it is really so, surely, R. Abba b. Zabda said [that] Rab said: A mourner is bound to observe all the precepts that are stated in the Torah except [that] of the Tefillin[16] because it is said with regard to them an ornament’?[17] — But, said Raba, this[18] is a dispute of Tannaim,[19] for one [Baraitha] teaches: If he[20] did not do an act [of coition] in the first [night],[21] he is free [from reading Shema’] also in the second [night]; in the second [night],[22] he is free [from reading Shema’] also in the third [night].[23] And another [Baraitha] teaches: [In] the first and second [night] he is free, [but in] the third [night] he is obliged [to read Shema’].[24] And Abaye [holds that] there[25] also they][26] differ with regard to anxiety.[27] And these Tannaim [are] like those Tannaim,[28] for it has been taught [in a Baraitha]: He who marries a maiden shall not perform the first intercourse[29] on Sabbath, and the Sages allow [it]. Who are the Sages? Said Rabbah: It is R. Simeon, who says: A thing which is not intended is allowed.[30] Said Abaye to him: But R. Simeon admits (that it is forbidden] in [a case of] ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’[31] Said he to him: Not like those Babylonians who are not skilled in moving aside,[32] but there are some who are skilled in moving aside.[33] If so,[34] why [give the reason of] ‘anxious’?[35] — For one who is not skilled. [Then] let them say: One who is skilled is allowed [to perform the first intercourse on Sabbath], one who is not skilled is forbidden? — Most [people] are skilled.[36] Said Raba the son of R. Hanan to Abaye: If this were so, then why [have] groomsmen,[37] why [have] a sheet?[38] — He [Abaye] said to him: There [the groomsmen and the sheet are necessary] perhaps he will see and destroy [the tokens of her virginity].[39]

R. Ammi objected:[40] He who pierces[41] an abscess on Sabbath, if [in order] to make an opening[42] to it, he is guilty,[43] but if [in order] to cause pus to come out of it

---

(1) Lit., ‘is it not?’ Having quoted the Mishnah from Nid. 64b, R. Hisda proceeds to ask his question, which is based on the last statement of Beth Hillel.

(2) The question presumes that ‘until the night following the Sabbath (one gives her) four nights’ may also mean any one of the four nights, and thus the intercourse may be first consummated on the night of Sabbath, (v. Rashi). This shews that one may have the first intercourse on Sabbath.

(3) Sabbath must, therefore, be included!

(4) One night before Sabbath. The intercourse on Sabbath was thus not the first.

(5) What new law does the Tanna teach us? Why should he (the husband) not be allowed to have intercourse on Sabbath?

(6) Lit., ‘a narrow opening (or breach). one may enter into it on Sabbath.’

(7) Lit , ‘and although.’

(8) He may have, say the second intercourse on Sabbath, v. Rashi, ad loc.

(9) The verses, Deut. VI, 4-9, XI, 13-21; Num. XV, 37-41 which are recited daily, morning and evening.

(10) Following the marriage.

(11) I.e the first intercourse. Mishnah Ber. 16.

(12) That he is free from the reading of Shema’, even on Sabbath night.

(13) Lit., ‘because he is anxious, because he wants to have intercourse.’ Being preoccupied with a duty (mizwah) he is free from another duty (mizwah).

(14) [Before Sabbath, and forbidden to have it on Sabbath.]

(15) Mental agitation, worry.

(16) Phylacteries, v. Glos.

(17) Cf. Ezek. XXIV, 17. [The reference being there to the Tefillin which Ezekiel was charged not to lay aside despite his mourning for his wife. V. M.K. 15a.] A mourner, though very much troubled, is nevertheless not free from observing the precepts. We thus see that anxiety does not exempt one from fulfilling the various religious commandments. And so in the case of the Mishnah quoted by R. Joseph it cannot be that the bridegroom is free from the reading of Shema’ only because of his anxiety.

(18) With regard to the first intercourse on Sabbath.

(19) Lit ‘this is (of) Tannaim.

(20) The bridegroom.

(21) After the marriage.

(22) If he did not do an act in the second night either.

(23) The third night (after the fourth day in the week) is Sabbath, and he is free from reading Shema’ as he is allowed to perform the marital act for the first time.

(24) The teacher of this Baraitha holds that he is not allowed to perform it first on Sabbath, and therefore he is obliged to read Shema’.

(25) In the Baraithas just quoted.

(26) The Tannaim.

(27) According to the first Baraitha his anxiety caused by the fact that he is not allowed to perform the act on Sabbath frees him from reading Shema’. And according to the second Baraitha this anxiety does not free him from reading Shema’. According to the first Baraitha the case of the mourner would be different. Since anxiety is no part of the mourning observances (Rashi. a.l.).

(28) I.e., the dispute of the Tannaim just quoted by Raba is the same as the dispute of the Tannaim of the Baraitha to be quoted now.

(29) Lit., ‘shall not have intercourse at the beginning.’

(30) V. supra p. 19, n. 4.

(31) V. supra p. 20, n. 8.

(32) I.e., having intercourse with a virgin without causing a bleeding.

(33) Thus no blood need come out, and ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’ does not apply.

(34) If the bridegroom is skilled in ‘moving sideways’.

(35) He need not be anxious about the intercourse and should not be free from reading Shema’ on account of such anxiety.

(36) Therefore the principle regarding ‘Let his head be cut off and let him not die!’ does not, as a rule, apply.
(37) The groomsmen testify in case of need to the virginity of the bride. V. infra 12a. If the bridegroom will act in a manner that will cause no bleeding, the groomsmen will not be able to testify on the question of virginity.
(38) To provide evidence of the virginity of the bride. Cf. Deut. XXII, 17.
(39) It may happen that he will act in the normal manner and cause bleeding but he will destroy the tokens and maintain that the bride was not a virgin; for this reason the above mentioned provisions are necessary. Where however he moved aside and made a false charge as to her virginity, the bride can plead that she is still a virgin (Rashi).
(40) V. ‘Ed. (Sonc. ed.) p. 12 nn. 5-6.
(41) Lit., ‘loosens.’ Jast.: ‘manipulates.’
(42) Lit., ‘mouth’.
(43) Of Sabbath-breaking.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 7a

he is free from punishment]?[1] — There[2] it is[3] stored up[4] and is [entirely] loose,[5] here[6] it[7] is stored up[8] but is not [entirely] loose.[9] R. Ammi allowed to have first intercourse[10] on Sabbath. Said the Rabbis to him: But her kethubah[11] is not written yet! — He said to them: Let her seize movable goods.[12] R. Zebid permitted to have the first intercourse on Sabbath. Some say: R. Zebid himself had the first intercourse on Sabbath. Rab Judah allowed to have the first intercourse on a festival. R. Papi said in the name of Raba: You shall not say [that] on a festival it[13] is allowed, but [that] on Sabbath it is forbidden. It is just as well allowed on Sabbath; only it happened so.[14] R. Papa said in the name of Raba: On a festival it is allowed, on Sabbath it is forbidden. Said R. Papi to R. Papa: What is your opinion? Since a wound[15] has been permitted [on a festival] for a necessity. it has been permitted also when there is no necessity? If that were so, it should be permitted to put spices on coals[16] on a festival, for since the kindling of fire has been allowed [on a festival] for a necessity, it should be allowed also when there is no necessity![17] Said he to him.[18] Concerning this[19] the Biblical verse said, save that which every man must eat,[20] [this means] a thing which is useful[21] for every man.[22] R. Aha, the son of Raba, said to R. Ashi: If this were So,[23] then if a deer happened to come to the hands of a person[24] on a festival, [shall we say that] since it is not of equal usefulness for every person,[25] is it really so that it would be forbidden to kill it? Said he[26] to him:[27] I say, ‘a thing that is needful for every person,’[28] [and] a deer is needful for every person.[29] R. Jacob, the son of Idi, said: R. Johanan gave a decision[30] in Zaidan:[31] It is forbidden to perform the first intercourse on Sabbath. — And is there an instructive decision for a prohibition?[32] — Yes, we have learned in a Mishnah:[33] The school of Hillel gave a decision regarding her[34] that she[35] should be a Nazirite yet another seven years. Or indeed it is as that which has been taught: If the cord of the spinal column is severed in its larger portion [the animal is trefa],[36] [this is] the view of Rabbi.[37] R. Jacob Says: Even if it[38] is [only] perforated [the animal is trefa]. Rabbi gave a decision[39] according to R. Jacob.[40]

R. Huna said: The halachah is not as stated by R. Jacob. R. Nahman b. Isaac taught thus: R. Abbahu said: R. Ishmael b. Jacob, from Tyre asked R. Johanan in Zaidan, and I heard [it]: Is it allowed[41] to have the first intercourse on Sabbath? And he[42] said to him:[43] It is forbidden. — And the law is: It is allowed to have the first intercourse on Sabbath.[44]

R. Helbo said [that] R. Huna said [that] R. Abba, the son of Zabda, said [that] Rab said: A maiden as well as a widow requires a benediction.[45] — But did R. Huna say so? Did not R. Huna say: A widow does not require a benediction? — It is not difficult.[46] Here[47] [it speaks] of a young man[48] who marries a widow, there[49] of a widower who marries a widow. And when a widower marries a widow [a benediction] is not required? Did not R. Nahman Say: Huna b. Nathan said to me: A Tanna taught: Whence [is it derived that] the benediction of the bridegrooms[50] [has to be said] in the presence of ten [persons]? Because it is said, And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said: ‘Sit ye down here’. And they sat down.[51] And Boaz was a widower, who married a widow![52] — What is [the meaning of the words] ‘she does not require a benediction’ which R. Huna said? She does not require a benediction during all the seven days. but on one day[53] she requires a benediction. But that which has been taught:[54] 'The Sages were anxious for the welfare of the daughters of Israel, that he[55] may rejoice with her[56] three days' — how is this to be understood?[57] If [it speaks] of a young man, did you not say — seven;[58] if of a widower, did you not say — one day?[59] — If you wish, you may say [that it speaks] of a widower [and in this case] one day is for the benediction and three days are for rejoicing. And if you wish, you may say [that it speaks] of a young man [and in this case] seven [days] are for the benediction and three [days] for rejoicing.

(1) And permitted: v. Shab. 107a and 3a. Intercourse should thus be permitted on Sabbath for the first time, even when the aim is the bleeding!

(2) In the case of the abscess.

(3) The blood.

(4) In the abscess.

(5) From the flesh.

(6) In the case of the virgin. bride.

(7) The blood.

(8) In the womb.

(9) From the walls of the womb. [Read with MS.M. 'It is neither stored up nor loose,' but the result of a wound, hence forbidden.]

(10) Lit., 'to perform in the beginning'.

(11) The marriage contract; lit., 'a written deed' (v. Glos.). Marital union is forbidden before the kethubah is written.

(12) And the movable goods will be a pledge in her hand with regard to the kethubah until the marriage contract will be written, when all his real estate is mortgaged with regard to kethubah.

(13) The first intercourse.

(14) Lit., 'and the event that was was thus'. [The question was put to him on a festival and he declared it permissible.]

(15) I.e., the making of a wound.

(16) To perfume the room after dinner; v. Ber. 43a.

(17) The meaning of the question of R. Papi to R. Papa is as follows: If a distinction is to be made, regarding the first intercourse, between Sabbath and a festival and it is to he held, as R. Papa holds in the name of Rab, that it is forbidden in Sabbath and allowed on a festival, then R. Papa must hold that, since certain work was allowed on a festival for a necessity, work should be allowed on a festival even when there is no necessity for it. It is, e.g. allowed to make a wound on a festival by slaughtering an animal for the need of food. It would, therefore, according to R. Papa, be allowed to make a wound (v. supra 3b, 4b, 5b) by performing the first intercourse on a festival, although there is no necessity for it, since the first intercourse can wait until after the festival. If this view were correct, then it should have been allowed to burn spices on coals on a festival, although spices are not a necessity, since the kindling of fire on a festival is allowed for a necessity. And the accepted view is that it is forbidden to put spices on coals on a festival. Consequently, if the first intercourse is forbidden on sabbath it should be forbidden also on a festival, since it is not a necessity. R. Papa's view is therefore wrong. Generally speaking, work that is forbidden on Sabbath is forbidden on a festival. There is an exception in the case of work necessary for preparing food. This is already indicated in Ex. XII, 16; v. Meg. 7b.

(18) To R. Papi.

(19) I.e., to avoid, or anticipate the answer to, your question.

(20) Ex. XII, 16. The verse continues, 'that only may be done to you'.

(21) Literally, 'equal', 'like', 'worth'; a thing that is of equal worth for every one, namely, to eat, to do, to have.

(22) The sense of the answer is this: You cannot compare the first intercourse to spices. Spices are not of equal necessity for every person. As Rashi puts it, only people who are used to luxuries desire spices. But sexual intercourse, even the first act, is a human need, which applies to all people.

(23) I.e., if only work for a necessity to all is allowed on a festival.

(24) Lit., 'happened to meet him.'

(25) Cf. n. 6.

(26) R. Ashi.

(27) To R. Aha.

(28) R. Ashi seems to emphasize the needfulness of the object, though it may nor be of equal necessity to all.

(29) Indeed, he answers, a deer is good for every person, and therefore, it may be slaughtered on a festival.
(30) הורה means ‘to teach’, ‘to instruct’, ‘to decide’. הוראה denotes a decision based on traditional teaching and (on) one's own learned deductions (One might call it ‘an instructive decision.’

(48) A young man who was never married before.
(49) Where R. Huna says that a widow does not require a benediction.
(50) Identical with the benediction mentioned above.
(51) Ruth IV, 2.

(53) On the day of marriage.
(54) V. supra 5a.
(55) The bridegroom.
(56) The bride.
(57) Lit., ‘In what?’ ‘How?’
(58) The benediction has to be said all the seven days following the marriage ceremony, and this implies rejoicing. That the benediction has to be said all the seven days in the case of the marriage of a young man, even if the bride is a widow, is inferred from the statement that in the case of the marriage of a widower and a widow it is not required to say the benediction all the seven days (Rashi).
(59) Only on one day has the benediction to be said, and this apparently means rejoicing only on one day.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 7b

An objection was raised: [It has been taught:] The benediction is said [at the celebration of the marriage] for a maiden seven [days] and for a widow one day. Is it not [to be understood that] even [in the case of] a widow who marries a young man [the benediction is said only on one day]? — No [only when the widow marries] a widower. But [if the widow marries] a young man, what [then]? Seven [days]?[1] If that is so, let it be taught:[2] The benediction is said for a maiden[3] seven [days], and for a widow who marries a young man[4] seven [days], and for a widow [who marries a widower][5] one day? — It taught a decided thing:[6] That there is no maiden who has less than seven [days],[7] and there is no widow who has less than one day.[8] The [above] text [says]: R. Nahman said: Huna b. Nathan said to me: A Tanna taught: Whence [is it derived that] the benediction of the bridegrooms [has to be said] in the presence of ten [persons]? Because it is said, And he took ten men of the elders of the city, and said: ‘Sit ye down here’.[9] But R. Abbahu said [that it is derived] from here: In assemblies bless ye God, the Lord, from the fountain of Israel.[10] And how does R. Nahman expound this verse of R. Abbahu?[11] — He requires it for the same purpose as has been set out in a Baraitha:[12] R. Meir used to say: Whence [can it be derived] that even embryos in the bowels of their mothers sang[13] a song[14] by the sea?[15] Because it is said, In assemblies bless ye God, the Lord, from the fountain of Israel.[16] And the other one?[17] — If [that were] so, let the verse say,[18] 'from the womb.'[19] Why [does it say], 'from the fountain'?[20] [To show that it is] concerning the affairs of the fountain.[21] And how does R. Abbahu expound that verse of R. Nahman?[22] — He requires it for expounding: an Ammonite, and not an Ammonitess, a Moabite, and not a Moabitess.[23] For if you would think [that the presence of the ten men was required] for [the saying of] the benediction, would it not have been sufficient if they had not been elders?[24] And the other one?[25] — If you would think [that the verse was to be used] for that exposition, would it not have been sufficient if there had not been ten [persons]?[26] — Yes, to make the matter public[27] — and as Samuel said to R. Hanna of Bagdath:[28] Go out and bring me ten[29] [persons] and I will say unto thee in their presence; If one assigns [property] to an embryo, it acquires it. But the law is: If one assigns [property] to an embryo, it does not acquire it.[30]

The Rabbis taught: The benediction of the bridegrooms is said[31] in the house of the bridegroom.[32] R. Judah says: Also in the house of the betrothal[33] it is said.[34] Abaye said: And in [the province of] Judah they taught [the opinion of R. Judah] because [in the province of Judah] he[35] is alone with her.[36]

Another [Baraitha] teaches: The benediction of the bridegrooms is said in the house of the bridegrooms and the benediction of betrothal in the house of betrothal. [As to] the benediction of betrothal — what does one say?[37] — Rabin b. R. Adda and Rabbah son of R. Adda both said in the name of Rab Judah: Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe, who has sanctified us by his commandments and has commanded us concerning the forbidden relations and has forbidden unto us the betrothed[38] and has allowed unto us the wedded[39] through [the marriage] canopy[40] and sanctification.[41] R. Aha 'the son of Raba, concludes it.[42] in the name of Rab Judah, [with the words]: Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who sanctifies Israel through canopy and sanctification. He who does not seal[43] [holds that] it is analogous to the blessing over fruits and to the benediction [said on performing] religious commandments.[44] And he who seals[45] [holds that] it is analogous to the kiddush.[46]

Our Rabbis taught: The blessing of the bridegrooms is said in the presence of ten [persons][47] all the seven days.[48] Rab Judah said: And that is only if new guests[49] come.[50] What does One say?[51] Rab Judah 'and: 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,

(1) The benediction has to be said during seven days, just as at the marriage of a young man and a maiden!

(2) I.e., it should have been taught.

(3) On the occasion of the marriage of a maiden.

(4) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow and a young man.

(5) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow and a widower.

(6) A definite thing.

(7) On the occasion of the marriage of every maiden the benediction is said during the seven days fol lowing the marriage.

(8) On the occasion of the marriage of a widow the benediction must be said at least on one day (the day of the marriage). Usually a widow marries a widower.

(9) V. supra 7a.

(10) Ps. LXVIII, 27. An 'assembly' consists of at least ten persons; v Sanh. 2a. The 'fountain' is regarded by R. Abbahu, Midrashically, as an allusion to the young wife. Cf. Prov. V, 18: Let thy fountain be blessed, and have joy of the wife of thy youth. V. also V, 15' and lsa. LI, 1. The derivation of R. Abbahu from the verse in Psalms is this: When a marriage is celebrated and a new fountain of Israel is to enrich life, a benediction has to be said in the presence of ten persons.

(11) I.e. ‘to what Midrashic use does R. Nahman put Ps. LXVIII, 27?

(12) Lit., ‘to what has been taught’.

(13) Lit., ‘said.’

(14) Probably the song (Ex. XV) is meant.

(15) The Red Sea.

(16) The derivation is: Even those who were still in ‘the fountain’ of Israel sang a song unto the Lord. In vv. 23 and 26 R. Meir no doubt saw, Midrashically., allusions to the crossing of the Red Sea. Cf. especially v. 26 with Ex. XV. 20, 21.

(17) R. Abbahu. How does he derive the idea of R. Meir just expounded, since he uses the verse in Ps. LXVlii for another purpose (benediction at the marriage in the presence of ten persons)?

(18) I.e., the verse should have read.

(19) ‘From the womb’ would indicate the presence of ‘fruit of the womb’, of an embryo. Cf. e.g., Gen. XXX, 2.

(20) ‘Fountain’ does not refer to present pregnancy, to an embryo, but to the source of life in the woman without implying that there is life in it now. Therefore we can also speak of the ‘fountain’ in the maiden.

(21) Marriage is concerned very largely with ‘the affairs of the fountain. ‘ R. Abbahu, therefore, prefers to use the verse in Ps. LXVIII for his Midrashic exposition (benediction at the marriage in the presence of ten persons).

(22) Ruth IV, 2.

(23) In Deut. XXIII, 4, it is said, An Ammonite or a Moabite shall not enter into the assembly of the Lord. The presence of ten elders was required for the interpretation that the prohibition to enter into the assembly of the Lord, that is, to be admitted into the community of Israel, applied only to Ammonite and Moabite men and not to Ammonite or Moabite women. This interpretation made the law clear, and thus Boaz could marry Ruth the Moabitess.

(24) That the presence of elders was necessary shews that the interpreting and establishing of a law was required.

(25) R. Nahman. How will he get that exposition if he uses the verse for a different purpose?

(26) If the presence of the elders was required for establishing a law, then there was no need to have ten elders. A smaller number of elders would also have been sufficient. It is different, according to R. Nahman, if the presence of the ten persons was required for saying the benediction at the marriage of Boaz and Ruth. Ten persons form a congregation; v. supra.

(27) This is the view of R. Abbahu.

(28) Bagdad. v. Rashi, Ber. 54b.

(29) So as to make his legal pronouncement public.

(30) V. B.B. 142b.

(31) Lit., ‘they bless the benediction etc.’ The reference is to the benediction at the celebration of the marriage held usually at the house of the bridegroom's parents as distinguished from that recited at the betrothal at the house of the parents of the bride V. infra.

(32) V. infra.

(33) On ‘betrothal’ v. Glos. s.v. erusin.

(34) V. p. 29, n. 13.

(35) The bridegroom.

(36) The bride. Bridegroom and bride are, in the province of Judah, closeted alone after the betrothal, (v. infra 12a). [This is forbidden without the benediction having been previously recited. V. Kallah, I.]

(37) I.e., what are the words constituting the benediction of betrothal?

(38) [Betrothal (erusin) without marriage (nissu'in) does not permit the bride to the bridegroom.]

(39) I.e., the women who are legally married unto their husbands. For the sake of clarity the post-Talmudic versions read: ‘those who are wedded unto us.’ V. Rashi and the Prayer-Books.

(40) Huppah v. Glos. and Kid (Sonc. ed.) p. 5, n. 7.

(41) חופה וקדושין together constitute the complete marriage. [Var. lec. (Ittur and others) חופה בקדושין ‘Huppah by means of Kiddushin’, a preferable reading since the act Kiddushin (betrothal) took place in former days before Huppah.]

(42) The benediction; i.e., he adds a concluding portion.

(43) I.e., does not add the concluding portion.

(44) In those blessings there are no concluding portions. [Because their subject matter is praise and not interrupted by words of supplication or other matter (Rashi). Tosaf.: Because they are short prayers], Cf., e.g., P.B. pp. 289-291, 270.

(45) I.e., adds a concluding portion.

(46) Kiddush, 'sanctification', is the special term for the benediction said at the beginning of the Sabbath or a festival. And that benediction has a concluding portion, cf. P.B. pp. 124, 230-231, 243. [Because apart from words of praise to God it contains matter in description of the day of rest or the festival (Rashi). Tosaf.: because it is a lengthy prayer.]
(47) Lit., 'with ten'.
(48) Following the marriage.
(49) Lit 'new faces'.
(50) The benediction of the bridegrooms is said, at the meal on every day' of the seven day's if on every succeeding day new guests, that is guests who were not there on the previous day, come to the meal. For a pretty thought as to Sabbath being 'a new guest' v. Tosaf. a.l.
(51) I.e., What is the text of the benediction?

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 8a

who has[1] created all things[2] to his glory'. and[3] 'the Creator of man', and 'who has created man in his image. In the image of the likeness of his form, and has prepared unto him[4] out of himself[5] a building forever.[6] Blessed art thou, O Lord, Creator of man'.[7] 'May the barren[8] greatly rejoice and exult[9] when her children will be gathered[10] in her midst in joy.[11] Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh Zion joyful through[12] her children'[13] 'Mayest Thou make the loved[14] companions greatly to rejoice, even as of old[15] Thou didst gladden Thy creature[16] in the Garden of Eden. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh bridegroom and bride to rejoice'.[17] 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our King, God of the universe, who has created joy and gladness, bridegroom and bride, rejoicing, song, mirth, and delight,[18] love, and brotherhood, and peace, and friendship.[19] Speedily, O Lord our God, may be heard in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of joy and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride, the voice of the singing[20] of bridegrooms from their canopies[21] and of youths from their feasts[22] of song. Blessed art Thou, O Lord, who maketh the bridegroom to rejoice with[23] the bride'.[24]

Levi came[25] to the house of Rabbi to[26] the wedding-feast of R. Simeon his son [and] said five benedictions.[27] R. Assi came[25] to the house of R. Ashi to[26] the wedding-feast of Mar his son [and] said six benedictions.[28] Does it mean to say that they differ in this: that one holds that there was one formation,[29] and the other holds that there were two formations?[30] — No. All[31] agree [that] there was [only] one formation, [but they differ in this:] one holds [that] we go according[32] to the intention,[33] and the other holds [that] we go according[32] to the fact,[34] as that [statement] of Rab Judah [who] asked:[35] It is written, And God created man in his own image,[36] and it is written, Male and female created He them.[37] How is this [to be understood]? [In this way:] In the beginning it was the intention[38] [of God] to create two [human beings], and in the end [only] one [human being] was created.

R. Ashi came to the house of R. Kahana.[39] The first day[40] he said all the benedictions.[41] From then and further on;[42] if there were new guests[43] he said all the benedictions, but if not [he declared] it to be merely a continuance of the same joy[44] [in which case] one says [only] the benedictions 'in whose dwelling there is joy'[45] and 'who has created'.[46] From the seventh day to the thirtieth day.[47] whether he[48] said to them[49] 'because of the wedding[50] or whether he did not say to them 'because of the wedding', one says the benediction 'in whose dwelling there is joy'.[51] From then[52] and further on;[53] if he said to them 'because of the wedding' he says the benediction 'in whose dwelling there is joy', but not otherwise.[54] And if he says to them 'because of the wedding', until when [is this benediction said]?[53] Said R. Papi in the name of Raba: Twelve months [forming] a year.[55] And at first[56] from when?[57] Said R. Papa: From the time that they put barley into the mortar.[58] But this is not so? Did not R. Papa busy himself for his son Abba Mar[59] and say the benediction[60] from the time of the betrothal? — It was different [in the case of] A. Papa, because he took the trouble [of preparing everything for the wedding].[61] Rabina busied himself for his son[62] in the house of R. Habiba and said the benediction[60] from the time of the betrothal. He said: I am sure with regard to them that they will not retract [the betrothal].[63] [But] the matter was not successful[64] and they did retract. R. Tahlifa, son of the West,[65] came to Babylon [and] said six long benedictions.[66] But the law is not according to him. R. Habiba came into the house of a circumcision[67] [and] said the benediction 'in whose dwelling there is joy.' But the law is not according to him, since they are distressed because the child has pain.

R. Nahman said [that] Rab said: Bridegrooms are of the number, and mourners are not of the number.[68] An objection was raised: Bridegrooms and mourners are of the number? — You ask [from] a Baraitha against Rab?[69] Rab is a Tanna and differs![70] It has been said: R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: Bridegrooms are of the number, and mourners are not of the number. An objection was raised: Bridegrooms and mourners are of the number?[71] —

(1) It is common usage to translate in the Prayer books the perfect verb 'has' in the benediction by 'hast' (created, etc.).

(2) Lit 'all'.

(3) I.e., also the benediction of ('the Creator of man'). The words, 'the Creator of man' are preceded by the words, 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the universe,' as in the first benediction.

(4) Unto man.

(5) Out of man. P.B. 'out of his very self.'

(6) Lit., 'a building even to perpetuity.' By 'a building for ever', Eve is meant. V. Rashi, a.l. and cf. Gen. II. 22. 'A building for ever' contains the idea of 'the mother of all living' (Gen. III, 20). It is woman that carries the human race. P.B. p. 299: — 'a perpetual fabric' — expresses well this idea.

(7) These three benedictions are based on Gen. I and II. In the first benediction God is praised for the creation of the world ('the all'). In the second benediction God is praised for the creation of man. 'Man' is used here in the sense of 'human being', cf. Gen. I, 27. In the third benediction God is praised for fashioning man in his image, in the image of the likeness of his form, and for preparing a perpetual building out of man himself. In creating Eve, out of man, god provided for the perpetual renewal of man, of the human being. The divine form of man and the continual re-creation of man, by ever recurring new births, in the divine form, are the subjects of praise in the third benediction while the subject of the second benediction is the creation of man generally. 'The Creator of man', in the concluding portion of the third benediction, has already the further meaning of the creation of man as expressed in the third benediction. In this respect 'The Creator of Man', in the third benediction, differs from 'The Creator of Man' of the second benediction. This might also explain the difficulty which has been felt to exist in the relationship of these two benedictions (v. the Gemara later and Rashi a.l.; v. also Abrahams' Notes, P.B. p. ccxvi).

(8) I.e., Zion; cf. Isa. LIV.

(9) Cf. Isa. LXI, 10 and LXII, 5.

(10) Lit., 'at the gathering of her children.'

(11) Cf. Isa. LIV, 1-3.

(12) Lit., in 'with'.

(13) I.e., by restoring to Zion her children. This benediction seems to have arisen out of Isa. LXII. Cf. especially vv. 4 and 5. And according to Ps. CXXXVII, Jerusalem is to be remembered and set 'above my chiefest joy'; Rashi a.l. (fol. 8a).

(14) I.e., the bridegroom and the bride.

(15) The word מקדם in Gen. II, 8, means 'eastward'. Here it is used in the sense of 'in former times', 'of old'.

(16) I.e., Adam, by giving him a wife; cf. Gen. II, 23. Adam and Eve rejoiced at their union. And so may the bridegroom and bride rejoice.

(17) The last two benedictions do not begin with 'Blessed art Thou, O Lord out God, King of the universe,' because they are in fact prayers. In the first, second and third benedictions God is praised for what he had done. In the fourth as well as in the fifth benediction a prayer is uttered that God may cause something to happen, namely joy to Zion, or to the bridegroom and the bride. For another explanation, v. Rashi and Tosaf. a.l. V., however, Rashi s.v.משמח. The fifth benediction seems to have resulted from the fourth benediction. V. supra n. 4 and cf. Isa. LXII, 5. The two prayers, like the two ideas contained in vv. 4 and 5, were bound up with one another.

(18) All these words mean 'joy'. דיצה means dancing with joy'.

(19) Or, 'fellowship', companionship'.

(20) Lit., ‘breakings forth into song, shouts of joy’.
(21) In the Hebrew text the singular is used. Canopy means here ‘a bridal chamber’. Cf. Joel II, 16.
(22) In the Hebrew text the singular is used.
(23) In this benediction the joy referred to is the joy of the bridegroom with the bride (Rashi).
(24) In this benediction God is praised for the creation of joy in its various forms. Bridegroom and bride represent joy. True joy leads to love and friendship. These six benedictions are recited at Jewish weddings up to this day. The benediction over the wine is added to them, and together they are called ‘the Seven Benedictions’. The loftiness of tone and the beauty of style of these benedictions are unsurpassed. The blend of Biblical strength and Midrashic sweetness seems to point to an early date.
(25) Lit., ‘happened to come .
(26) Lit., ‘in’. A more correct translation might be, ‘during’.
(27) Lit., ‘blessed five’. Apparently the second benediction was left out (Rashi).
(28) I.e., all the six benedictions.
(29) For man and woman. Therefore one benediction for the creation of man and woman is sufficient. This would be the third benediction.
(30) One of man and one of woman.
(31) Lit., ‘the whole world.’
(32) Lit., ‘after’.
(33) The intention was to create two human beings: man and woman.
(34) Only’ man was formed, and woman was ‘built’ out of him; cf. Gen. II, 7 and 22.
(35) Lit., ‘to throw up a question’.
(36) Gen. I, 27.
(37) Gen. V, 2: It seems that R. Judah does not ask his question merely from the first five words of Gen. I, 27, and from the first three words of Gen. V, 2, for in that case there would have been no need for him to refer to Gen, V, 2, since he could have asked the question from the last words of Gen 1. 27 ‘male and female he created them’ but his question is from the whole verse 27 in Gen I and from the whole verse 2 in Gen V. The meaning of the question should be this: Gen I, 27 begins by saying that God created man and ends by saying that man was created as male and female. The last words of Gen I, 27 would thus shew that there were two creations. Gen V, 2 begins by saying that God created them male and female, and then it says, as He blessed them and called their name Man in the day when they were created. This verse would shew that in the end there was only one creation. In short: Gen. I, 27. begins with one creation and ends with two creations, and Gen V, 2, begins with two creations and ends with one creation. This, it seems, is the question of Rab Judah. Rab Judah quoted the verses by quoting the first portions of the verse. He really meant to say ‘etc.’ — In ‘Er. 18a and Ber. 61a the name is R. Abbahu. In ‘Er. 18a, in the image of God hath he created man, is quoted from Gen. I, 27. In Ber. 61a, ‘for in the image of God made he man’ (Gen. IX, 6) is quoted. This quotation apparently stands for that of Gen. I, 27. Both in ‘Er. 18a and Ber. 61a ‘male and female created He them’ is quoted first.
(38) Lit., ‘it went up in the thought’, namely of God. A sense of reverence does not allow Rab Judah to mention ‘God’ after ‘thought’. The meaning of the answer is: At first God intended to create two human beings, man and woman (Gen I. 27). But in the end only man was created by God, and woman was ‘built’ by God out of man (Gen V, 2)
(39) I.e., to the wedding-feast.
(40) The first of the seven days of the wedding festivities, which began after the marriage ceremony; v. supra 7b.
(41) Lit., ‘he blessed all of them.’
(42) Lit., ‘from now’. I.e., from the second day to the end of the seven days.
(43) Lit., ‘new faces’: cf. supra 7b.
(44) If there were new guests it would be a new occasion for joy.
(45) Lit., ‘the joy’.
(46) The sixth benediction.
(47) Lit., ‘from seven to thirty.’
(48) The host, as a rule the father of the bride.
(49) The invited guests.
(50) ‘I have invited you here to dinner’ (Rashi).
(51) שהשמחה במעונו v. p. 35, n. 1.
(52) Lit., ‘from now’.

(53) I.e., after the thirty days.

(54) Lit., ‘if not, not’. (18) The benediction ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’.

(55) I.e., the whole of the first year. The phrase ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’ occurs here for the first time. Commenting on this phrase Rashi says ‘at the beginning of the summons (to say Grace).’ The words ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’ are indeed used in the introduction to the Grace after meals at weddings; v. P.B. p. 300. Cf. also Abrahams’ Notes, p. ccxviii, and Baer, Seder Abodoth Israel, p. 563. But the question arises: was שהשמחה במעונו said before the Grace after meals in Talmudic times? In our text there is no indication that this was so. Another question is: did the whole benediction consist of the words שהשמחה במעונו ? Or were they the initial words of a longer benediction? The benediction אשר ברא’who has created’ mentioned together with it is the sixth benediction, the longest of the six benedictions. One is thus very much tempted to think that שהשמחה במעונו were words of a longer benediction probably introduced by the formula ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe’ and said as a substitute for the first five benedictions. The key note of the first five benedictions is joy. Joy speaks out of every benediction; there was joy in the creation of the universe, in the creation of man, in the formation of man and woman. There is joy in the fourth and fifth benedictions. The joy in the first three benedictions is the joy of God. The joy in the fourth and fifth benedictions is also divine joy. The sixth benediction speaks of the joy created by God for man, ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord out God, King of the Universe, who has created joy and gladness.’ etc. The joy of the first five benedictions is summarized by the words, ‘in whose dwelling there is joy.’ There is joy on high, there is joy with God. This joy is spoken of in the first five benedictions. And this joy is also expressed briefly in the words ‘in whose dwelling there is joy’. The human joy, created by God, is expressed in the sixth benediction אשר באר, while שהשמחה במעונו stands for the benediction which was a substitute for the first five benedictions. On the first day of the wedding the six benedictions were said. After the first day, if there were no new guests, two benedictions were said. After the seventh day only one benediction was said. And that benediction was ‘in whose dwelling there is joy.’ Man's joy began to diminish. So only God's joy was now mentioned. In the time after the Talmud שהשמחה במעונו was given a place in the introduction to the Grace after meals at weddings, instead of being said as a full benediction after Grace, because the full text of this benediction was not mentioned in the Talmud. It may be that the tradition that the full benediction (with ‘Blessed art Thou,’ etc.) was said, was lost. It was felt that שהשמחה במעונו was left hanging in the air and it was incorporated in the summons to say Grace; v. P.B., p. 300. That the word מעון was chosen to denote the dwelling of God may be due to the fact that it is mentioned in Hag. 12b as the heavenly region in which the angels sing; v. Abrahams and Baer, loc cit. מעון is there spoken of as the fifth of the seven firmaments. Might there not be in it an allusion to the five benedictions, for which the benediction of שהשמחה במעונו is a substitute?

(56) Or, ‘originally.’ i.e., ‘before the wedding.’

(57) Does one say ‘In whose dwelling there is joy’.

(58) Or trough (for brewing beer), or pot (for planting barley for the wedding ceremony). The meaning of this phrase is: from the time that they begin making preparations for the wedding (v. Rashi).

(59) I.e., R. Papa had his son engaged to be married.

(60) In whose dwelling there is joy’.

(61) As all preparations for the wedding and the wedding-feast were made, R. Papa felt that he could say the benediction.

(62) I.e. , Rabina had his son engaged (Rashi).

(63) And therefore he said the benedictions.

(64) Lit., ‘the matter was not supported (by divine help).

(65) I.e., son of Palestine, Palestinian. It may be that מערבא (‘West’) was the name of the father of R. Tahlifa; v. Levy, s.v. But the mention of Babylon seems to support the rendering ‘son of the West’, ‘Palestinian’.

(66) He extended the first two benedictions by making additions to them (Rashi). It is possible that ‘by long’ is meant the full benedictions as they are given on fol. 8a, in contradistinction to the short blessing שהשמחה במעונו

(67) I.e., a house in which a circumcision took place, followed by a festive meal.

(68) There must be ten male persons for the recital of the six (or seven) ‘benedictions of the bridegrooms’, v. supra 7a and 7b. The benediction of the mourners is also said in the presence of ten male persons, v. infra 8b. R. Nahman says in the name of Rab that bridegrooms may be of the ten, but mourners may not be of the ten. There must be ten without the mourners.

(69) Lit., ‘You throw a Baraitha against Rab.’

(70) I.e., Rab's authority is as great as that of a Tanna and he has therefore the right to differ with other Tannaim, Teachers of Mishnah or Baraitha.

(71) The same question is asked against R. Johanan as was asked against Rab. But the answer which was effective in the case of Rab could not be given with regard to R. Johanan. Therefore different answers are attempted, v. infra 8b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 8b

With regard to what was that taught?[1] With regard to Grace after meals;[2] [and] with regard to what did R. Johanan say [this ruling]?[3] With regard to the line [of comforters].[4] But [then] what of the dictum[5] of which)R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: ‘One says the benediction[6] of the bridegrooms in the presence of ten [male persons] and the bridegrooms are of the number, and [one says] the benediction of the mourners[7] in the presence of ten [male persons] and the mourners are not of the number’ — is there a benediction [said] in the line [of comforters]?[8] — But [the answer is]: With regard to what did R. Johanan say [this ruling]?[3] with regard to the [benediction recited in the] open space.[9] But [then] what of the dictum which R. Isaac said [that] R. Johanan said: ‘One says the benediction of the bridegrooms in the presence of ten [male persons] all the seven [days][10] and the bridegrooms are of the number, and [one says] the benediction of the mourners in the presence of ten [male persons] all the seven [days][11] and the mourners are not of the number — is the benediction [recited in] the open space said all the seven days?[12] — It is possible in the presence of new friends[13] — as in the case of[14] R. Hiyya. the son of Abba, [who was] the Bible teacher of the son[15] of Resh Lakish, or, as some say,[16] the Mishnah teacher of the son of Resh Lakish. [It happened as follows:] A child [of R. Hiyya, the son of Abba] died,[17] The first day[18] he [Resh Lakish] did not go to him. The next day[19] he [Resh Lakish] took with him[20] Judah the son of Nahmani,[21] his meturgeman.[22] [and] said to him: Rise [and] say something[23] with regard to[24] [the death of] the child. He spoke[25] and said: [It is written.] And the Lord saw and spurned, because of the provoking of His sons and His daughters.[24] [This means, in] a generation [in which the fathers spurn the Holy One, blessed be He, He is angry with their sons and their daughters and they die when they are young.[26] And some say [that] he [the child of R. Hiyya, the son of Abba, that died] was a young man[27] and that he [Judah the son of Nahmani] said thus to him:[28] Therefore the Lord shall have no joy in their young men, neither shall He have compassion on their fatherless and widows; for every one is profane and an evil-doer, and every mouth speaketh folly. For all this His anger is not turned away, but His hand is stretched out still.[29] (What is the meaning[30] of ‘but His hand is stretched out still’? Said R. Hanan, the son of Rab:[31] All know for what purpose[32] a bride is brought into the bridal chamber, but whoever disgraces his mouth and utters[33] a word of folly-even if a [divine] decree[34] of seventy years of happiness[35] were sealed [and granted] unto him,[36] it is turned for him into evil.) — He came to comfort, [and] he grieved him? This he said to him: Thou art important enough to be held responsible[37] for [the shortcomings of] the generation.[38] He[39] [then] said to him:[40] Rise [and] say something with regard to the praise of the Holy One, blessed be He He spoke and said: The God,[41] who is great in the abundance of His greatness, mighty and strong in the multitude of awe-inspiring deeds, who reviveth the dead with his word,[42] who does great things that are unsearchable[43] and wondrous works without number.[44] Blessed art thou, O Lord, who revivest the dead.[45] He[46] then ‘said to him:[47] Rise [and] say something with regard to the mourners. He spoke and said: Our brethren, who are worn out, who are crushed by this bereavement,[48] set your heart to consider[49] this: This it is [that] stands for ever,[50] it is a path from the six days of creation.[51] Many have drunk, many will drink,[52] as the drinking of the first ones, so will be that of the last ones. Our brethren, the Lord of consolation comfort you. Blessed be He who comforteth the mourners. (Said Abaye: ‘Many have drunk’ he should have said, ‘many will drink’ one should not have said, ‘the drinking of the first ones’, he should have said, ‘the drinking of the last ones’ one should not have said, for R. Simeon, the son of Lakish,[53] said, and so one has taught in the name of R. Jose: Man should never open his mouth to Satan.[54] Said R. Joseph: What text [shows this]? We should have been as Sodom, we should have been like unto Gomorrah.[55] What did He[56] reply unto him?[57] Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom, etc.[58]) He[59] [then] said to him:[60] Rise [and] say something with regard to the comforters of the mourners.[61] He spoke and said: Our brethren, bestowers of lovingkindnesses, sons of bestowers of lovingkindnesses, who hold fast to the covenant of Abraham our father[62] [for it is said, For I have known him, to the end that he may command his children, etc.],[63] our brethren, may the Lord of recompense pay you your reward. Blessed art Thou who payest the recompense. He[64] [then] said unto him:[65] Rise [and] say something with regard to the whole of Israel. He spoke and said: Master of the worlds, redeem and save, deliver [and] help Thy people Israel from pestilence,[66] and from the sword, and from plundering,[67] and from the blast, and from the mildew, and from all kinds of calamities that [may] break forth and come into[68] the world. Before we call, mayest Thou answer,[69] Blessed art Thou who stayest the plague.[70] ‘Ulla said, and some say [that] it was taught in a Baraitha: Ten cups [of wine] the scholars have instituted [to be drunk] in the house of the mourner: Three before the meal in order to open the small bowels, three during the meal in order to dissolve the food in the bowels, and four after the meal: one corresponding to ‘who feedeth’,[71] one corresponding to the blessing of ‘the land’,[71] one corresponding to ‘who rebuildeth Jerusalem,[71] and one corresponding to ‘who is good and doeth good’.[71] They [then] added unto them [another] four [cups]: one in honour of the officers of the town, and one in honour of the leaders of the town, and one in honour of the Temple. and one in honour of Rabban Gamaliel. [When] they began to drink [too much] and to become intoxicated, they restored the matter to its original state.[72] What [about] Rabban Gamaliel? — As it has been taught: At first the carrying out of the dead[73] was harder for his relatives[74] than his death,[75] so that they left him[76] and ran away, until Rabban Gamaliel[77] came and adopted a simple style and they carried him out[78] in garments of linen, and [then] all the people followed his example and carried out [the dead][79] in garments of linen. Said R. Papa: And now it is the general practice [to carry out the dead] even in rough cloth worth [only] a zuz.[80]

R. Eleazar said:

---

(1) Lit., ‘When was that taught’. In the Baraitha (that mourners ate also of the number)

(2) Lit., ‘the benediction of food’.

(3) That mourners are not of the number.

(4) The line of comforters which was formed to offer consolation to the mourners after a burial, v. Sanh. 19a.

(5) Lit., ‘But as to this that’.

(6) ‘The blessing, or benediction, of the bridegrooms’ has a collective sense. The six (or seven) benedictions are meant.

(7) Has also a collective sense; v. infra.

(8) Does one say benedictions in the line that is formed, after the burial of the dead, so that the friends may comfort the mourners? There only words of comfort are said, but no benedictions. In Sanh.. 19a one word of comfort is mentioned: תתנחמו ‘be comforted’.

(9) The benedictions of the mourners were said in the open space, v. infra.

(10) Of the wedding festivities.

(11) Of mourning.

(12) Lit., ‘Is there a benediction of the open space all the seven days?’

(13) Lit., ‘Thou wilt find it in (the case of) new faces’. When new friends come to visit the mourners for the first time during the seven days, the benediction of mourners is said :in the free space.

(14) Lit., ‘as that of.’

(15) So MS.M.; cur. edd. ‘sons’.

(16) Lit., ‘and some say.’

(17) It was R. Hiyya's child that died and not Resh Lakish's. Resh Lakish went to comfort R. Hiyya and took his (Resh Lakish's) meturgeman (v. infra) with him. Some scholars go wrong in the rendering of this passage. V., for instance, Levy p. 303. Bacher rightly speaks of the death of the young child of R. Hiyya.

(18) I.e., the first day of R. Hiyya's mourning.

(19) Lit., ‘on the morrow.’

(20) Lit., ‘led him.’

(21) Judah the son of Nahmani, is mentioned several times as the meturgeman of Resh Lakish; v. e.g. Sot. 37b, Cit. 60b, (also Tem. 14b), and Sanh. 7b.

(22) ‘Interpreter’. As to his function v. J.E., vol. VIII, p. 521. and vol. I, p. 527, n. I. One sentence may be quoted from the last-named article. ‘In a limited sense it (‘the interpreter’ Amora, or meturgeman) signifies the officer who stood at the side of the lecturer or presiding teacher in the academy and in meetings for public instruction, and announced loudly, and explained to the large assembly in an oratorical manner, what the teacher had just expressed briefly and in a low voice.’ The meturgeman was, therefore, a sort of assistant lecturer. Judah the son of Nahmani, was assistant lecturer to Resh Lakish. He was also a good preacher who expounded well Biblical verses homiletically (cf. e.g., Sanh. 7b). He could also recite benedictions by heart. Cf. Cit. 60b and Tem. 14b. For these reasons apparently Resh Lakish took with him Judah the son of Nahmani, when he paid a visit of condolence to R. Hiyya. the son of Abba. Judah spoke on behalf of Resh Lakish.
(23) Lit., ‘a word’, ‘a thing.’
(24) Lit., ‘corresponding to’, ‘vis-a-vis’.
(25) Lit., ‘he opened.’ This probably means: he opened his mouth (and said), cf. Job III, 1. It may also mean: he opened his discourse; v. the Dictionaries of Levy and Jastrow, s.v. Here the first meaning seems to be more likely. (15) Deut. XXXII, 19.
(26) Lit., ‘small’.
(27) I.e., a grown-up son, not a small child
(28) To R. Hiyya. the son of Abba
(29) Isa. IX. 16.
(30) Lit., ‘What?’ ‘Why?’
(31) In Shab. 33a: b. Raba.
(32) Lit., ‘for what.’
(33) Lit., ‘brings forth from his mouth.’
(34) Lit., a decree of His judgment.’
(35) Lit, ‘for good.’
(36) I.e., even if it was decreed in heaven that he should have seventy’ years of happiness. cf R.H. 16b.
(37) Lit., ‘to be seized’.
(38) Cf. Shab. 33b: ‘the righteous men are seized for (the shortcomings of) the generation.’ V. Rashi a.l.
(39) Resh Lakish
(40) Judah the son of Nahmani.
(41) According to Rashi the words ‘Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, King of the Universe,’ are to be supplemented before ‘The God,’ etc.
(42) This phrase occurs also in the abbreviated Amida prayer said on Friday’ night. v. P.B. p. 120.
(43) Lit., ‘until there is no searching.’ Cf Ps CXLV. 3.
(44) Lit., ‘until there is no number.’ Cf. Ps. CXLVII, 5. The whole phrase occurs also in the evening service prayer v. P.B. p. 99.
(45) This benediction is, in its main ideas, reminiscent of the first three benedictions of the Amida.
(46) Resh Lakish
(47) Judah the son of Nahmani.
(48) Lit., ‘by this mourning.’
(49) Cf. I Chron. XXII, 25.
(50) Rashi adds: that all die, and you should nor weep too much.
(51) Lit., ‘in the beginning’.
(52) From the cup of sorrow.
(53) I.e., Resh Lakish.
(54) That is, one should never utter ominous words and thus invite misfortune.
(55) Isa. I, 9.
(56) God.
(57) Unto Isaiah.
(58) Isa. I, 20. Because Isaiah compared the people to Sodom and Gomorrah, God addressed them as ‘rulers of Sodom,’ ‘people of Gomorrah.’ This is to illustrate how ominous words can have an evil effect.
(59) Resh Lakish.
(60) Judah the son of Nahmani.

(61) The friends who came to comfort the mourners.

(62) Rashi adds: who bestowed lovingkindnesses. The meaning is: who are carrying out the trust with which Abraham was charged, also for future generations; v. next note.

(63) The passage is bracketed also in the original. The verse continues: and his household after him, that they may keep the way of the Lord, to do righteousness and Justice: to the end that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which He has spoken of him; Gen. XVIII, 19.

(64) Resh Lakish.

(65) Judah the son of Nahmani.

(66) Lit ,’the pestilence.’

(67) Lit., ‘the spoil’, ‘the plunder’.

(68) Lit.,’to’.

(69) Lit., ‘and thou wilt answer’.

(70) Cf. Num. XVII, 13, 15; XXV, 8; II Sam. XXIV, 21, 25; Ps. CVI, 30. It is now time to deal with one or two points arising out of what we are told on this page (folio 8b) about the visit of Resh Lakish and his meturgeman, Judah the son of Nahmani, to R. Hiyya the son of Abba, on the occasion of the death of R. Hiyya's child. The story of this visit was introduced in order to show that there is ברכת רחבה during all the seven days of mourning if new friends are present on each occasion. Now, what is ברכת רחבה ? This question has not been answered yet. In the time of the Gaonim the tradition concerning it had faded already. In Shittah Mekubbezeth on Keth. 8b three different views are quoted. The view mentioned in Nahmanides’ Toroth ha-Adam ed. Venice, p. 50a, is again different. The explanation attempted by Krauss in the Jahrbuch der jud.-lit. Gesellschaft, vol. XVII (1926), pp. 238-239 (v. also Krauss, Jahresbericht XXXVII-XXXIX Isr.-Theol. Lehranstalt in Wien, p. 60f) is unsatisfactory. בית האבל in Kethuboth 8b is not inaccurate (v. Jahrbuch, p. 235). The emendation suggested by Krauss (Jahresbericht, p. 60) for מאי ברכת אבלים ברכת רחבה . (Meg. 23b) is unacceptable. In Tractate Soferim ch. XIX ברכת רחבה is not mentioned. The quotation from Hai and Sherira in Shittah Mekubbezeth concludes with the words: ‘As much as we have heard, we never heard that the ברכת רחבה was in vogue in Babylon’. The following explanation may however be briefly submitted: — רחבה in this connection has nothing to do with רחוב public place. It is, rather, the open space behind the house (of the mourner). V. Er. 24a-b and Krauss, T.A. vol. I, p. 48, and p. 361, n. 633. ברכת רחבה would thus mean the blessing of the mourners said in the open space behind the house of the mourner. When ten or more friends came to comfort the mourner there was, at any rate in many cases, no room in the house for all the visitors, and the mourners sat in the open space behind the house and the guests assembled there, and the benedictions ברכת אבלים were recited before the assembly in the open space. רחבה was therefore almost identical with the בית האבל Therefore, when it is said in Meg. 23b מאי ברכת אבלים ברכת רחבה this statement is entirely correct. (לא אזל לגביה can only mean that he (Resh Lakish) did not go to him (to the mourner). The next day he did go to him, namely, to his house, or to the open space behind the house. What Krauss, Jahrbuch, p. 239, says on לגביה cannot be accepted.) The story on this page (folio 8b) confirms this interpretation. Resh Lakish and his meturgeman went to R. Hiyya, that is, they went to his house, or to the open space near his house. Judah, the son of Nahmani, delivered there a homily and recited four benedictions. And these benedictions are called ברכת רחבה and ברכת אבלים. That is: The ברכת אבלים., which was recited in the רחבה was also called ברכת רחבה and required the presence of ten new guests. Whether this ברכת רחבה required a cup of benediction is difficult to say. In Toroth ha-Adam p. 45b it says: Some say that ברכת רחבה requires a cup: cf. however ibid. 49a, where the view of R. Paltai seems to be that it had no ‘cup’ attached to it. In the story on this page (folio 8b) no ‘cup’ is mentioned. It might have been implied. It may be that the סעודת הבראה (the meal given by friends to the mourners after the funeral) also took place in this רחבה. Cf. M.K. 25a. The ברכת רחבה fell, apparently, early into disuse, so that in post-Talmudic times its real character was not known any more. It is difficult to see why these benedictions disappeared from use. They are beautiful in thought and language, especially benedictions 1 and 2. These two benedictions deserve to be reinstated. Another point that should be noted is this: Judah the son of Nahmani, did not give his own sayings. The homily which he delivered was not his own. The benedictions which he recited had long been fixed. Cf. Rashi, ad loc. וכן סדורות על הסדר. It is strange that Graetz thinks that Judah the son of Nahmani improvised these beautiful prayers and that these prayers shew that Judah was a fine Hebrew stylist. Judah the son of Nahmani was a meturgeman, and a meturgeman was not expected to say original things. He knew by heart the homilies of others and the fixed benedictions, and he delivered the homilies well and he recited the benedictions well. It is interesting to note that קום אימא מילתא was said to the Meturgeman, although the מילתא was not his. Cf. also Shittah Mekubbezeth: מרינן קום אימא מילתא סדורא בעלמא אמר ליה אבל הני ברכות מעיקרא איתקון והא דא

(71) ‘Who feedeth’ is the first benediction of Grace after meals, the blessing of ‘the land’ is the second, ‘who rebuildeth Jerusalem’ is the third, and ‘who is good and doeth good’ is the fourth. V. P.B., pp. 280-283; cf. Ber. 48b.

(72) Lit., ‘to its old state.’ Cf. Sem. ch. XIV, where the text is somewhat different and the order of the ‘cups’ varies.

(73) I.e.. the funeral.

(74) The relatives of the dead.

(75) Because of the great expense. They buried the dead in costly’ garments (Rashi).

(76) The dead.

(77) I.e., Rabban Gamaliel II, also called Rabban Gamaliel of Jabneh.

(78) For variant, cf. M.K. 27b.

(79) For burial

(80) A silver coin, one fourth of a shekel.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 9a

He who says. I have found an ‘open opening’[1] is trusted to make her forbidden for him.[2] Why?[3] It is a double doubt:[4] It is a doubt [whether she had the intercourse with the other man while] under him,[5] or[6] , [while] not under him.[7] And if you say[8] that [she had that intercourse while] under him, [there is] the [other] doubt [whether she had that intercourse] by violence or[9] by [her free] will! — It was necessary[10] [to state this rule] in the case of the wife of a priest.[11] And if you wish, you may say [that it speaks of] the wife of an Israelite,[12] and for instance when her father received the betrothal for her [when] she was less than three years and one day old.[13] What does he[14] let ‘is hear by [this since] we have already learnt [it]:[15] ‘If a man says[16] to a woman, "I have betrothed thee [to myself]", and she says, "Thou hast not betrothed me [to thyself]," she is allowed [to marry] his relatives, but he is forbidden [to marry] her relatives.’[17] — What you might have supposed is that there[18] [he causes a prohibition to himself] because it is certain to him,[19] but here it is not quite certain to him.[20] [Therefore] he[21] lets us hear [this rule].[22] But did R. Eleazar say so? Did not R. Eleazar say: The wife does not become forbidden for her husband save in the case of[23] warning[24] and seclusion,[25] and as [we find in] the occurrence that happened?[26] But how can you [in any case] understand it?[27] Was the occurrence that happened accompanied by warning and seclusion? And again, did they[28] declare her[29] forbidden?[30] — This is no difficulty, [for] thus he[31] means to say:[32] The wife does not become forbidden for her husband save in the case of warning and seclusion, [and this we learn] from the occurrence that happened, because [there] there was no warning and seclusion and [therefore] she[33] was not forbidden.[34] But [the former question] is nevertheless difficult. In the [case of] warning and seclusion but not [in the case of] ‘an open opening’![35] — But according to your argument[36] [the question could be asked]: [in the case of] warning and seclusion, yes, [and in the case of] witnesses,[37] no! Hence he[38] means to say thus: The wife does not become forbidden for her husband through one witness[39] but through two witnesses;[40] but in the case of warning and seclusion:[41] even through one witness,[42] and ‘an open opening’ is like two witnesses.[43] And if you will say: [In the case of] the occurrence that happened. why did they not declare her forbidden?[44] [The answer is:] There it was compulsion.[45] And if you wish you can say as R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said[46] [that] R. Jonathan said:

---

(1) ‘An open opening’ is a euphemistic expression for ‘absence of virginity’. The husband, after the first intercourse with his young wife, claims that he found no virginity.

(2) V. infra.

(3) Lit , ‘And why?’ — The question is: Why should his wife become forbidden for him by what he said regarding the absence of her virginity?

(4) Lit., the doubt of a doubt’.

(5) Under her husband, that is, since the betrothal (erusin); in which case she is regarded as an adulteress who is forbidden to live with her husband. V. Sanh. 51a.

(6) Lit ‘A doubt’.

(7) Before her betrothal.

(8) Lit., ‘If thou wilt be found (consequently) to say.’

(9) If a betrothed (or married) woman is violated by another man she does not become forbidden for her husband. V. infra 51b, v. also Deut. XXII, 25-27.

(10) Lit., not necessary’, i.e., it would not have been necessary but for the case of the wife of a priest. The meaning is: the rule applies in the case of the wife of a priest.

(11) If the wife of a priest was violated she was forbidden for her husband. V. infra 51b, and Yeb. 56b.

(12) I.e., an ordinary Jew, not a priest.

(13) In this case there is only one doubt: whether she was violated, or submitted by her free will. The other doubt (‘under him’ or ‘not under him’) does not arise since in the latter case her virginity would not be affected. V. Ned. 44b.

(14) R. Eleazar (an Amora).

(15) That a man may, by his own evidence, prohibit for himself a thing or a person otherwise permitted to him.

(16) Lit., ‘he who says’.

(17) The forbidden degrees of relatives by marriage; v. Kid. 65a.

(18) Kid. 65a.

(19) Lit , ‘it is certainly established to him.’

(20) His grievance may’ be imaginary.

(21) R. Eleazar.

(22) That he is believed.

(23) Lit., ‘over the affairs of’.

(24) Given to the wife by the suspecting husband.

(25) Of the wife with the suspected man. V. Num. V, 11ff; cf. Sol. 2a and 2b.

(26) Lit., ‘according to the deed that was’. I.e., of David and Bathsheba, cf. II Sam. XI. This contradicts the dictum of R. Eleazar that the woman becomes forbidden on a mere charge by her husband of an ‘open opening’.

(27) This latter dictum of R. Eleazar.

(28) The authorities.

(29) Bath-sheba.

(30) [For Judah. The fact that she was allowed to marry David shews that she was not forbidden to Uriah, for it is a general rule that an adulteress is forbidden to continue with her husband as well as her paramour. Sot. 27b.]

(31) R. Eleazar.

(32) Lit., ‘he says’.

(33) Bath-sheba.

(34) For Uriah. V. p. 44, n. 20.

(35) Lit., ‘warning . . . yes; an open . . . no.’ I.e., the words of R. Eleazar imply that the wife would be forbidden for her husband only in case of warning and seclusion, but not in the case of ‘an open opening’, which contradicts his former ruling.

(36) If you are to argue from the implications of R. Eleazar's words as they stand.

(37) Why should the evidence of witnesses that the wife was unfaithful be weaker than warning and seclusion? Surely this cannot be!

(38) R. Eleazar.

(39) By the evidence of one witness that the wife was unfaithful; v. Rashi ad loc.

(40) By the evidence of two witnesses.

(41) Where there are two witnesses to the warning and seclusion.

(42) If even only one witness testified to the adultery that followed she is forbidden to her husband. V. Sot. 2b.

(43) I.e., the charge of an ‘open opening’ by her husband is on a par with the evidence of two witnesses.

(44) For David, seeing that many people knew of the occurrence, and thus there were witnesses.

(45) Bath-sheba could not resist the demand of the king. [And since she was thus not forbidden to Uriah, she was permitted also to David. (V. supra p. 44, n. 20)].

(46) Lit., ‘as that which R. Samuel the son of Nahmani said’.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 9b

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 9b

Everyone who goes out into the war of the House of David writes for his wife a deed of divorce,[1] for it is written, And to thy brethren shalt thou bring greetings, and take their pledge.[2] What [is the meaning of], 'and take their pledge'? R. Joseph learnt: Things which are pledged between him and her.[3]

Abaye said: We have also learned[4] [this]:[5] A MAIDEN IS MARRIED ON THE FOURTH DAY OF THE WEEK. [This implies] only on the fourth day, but not the fifth day.[6] What is the reason? [Presumably] on account of the cooling of the temper.[7] Now in which respect [could the cooling of the mind have a bad result]? If with regard to giving her the kethubah,[8] let him give it to her.[9] Consequently[10] [we must say only] with regard to making her forbidden for him;[11] and [it is a case where] he puts forward a claim.[12] Is it not that he puts forward the claim of 'an open opening'?[13] — No, [it is a case where] he puts forward the claim of blood.[14]

Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: If any one says. 'I have found an open opening', he is trusted to cause her to lose her kethubah. Said R. Joseph: What does he[15] let us hear? We have [already] learned [this]:[16] He who eats[17] at his father-in-law's [between the time of betrothal and the time of marriage] in Judaea,[18] without witnesses, cannot [after the marriage] raise the claim of [the loss of] virginity, because he is alone with her.[19] In Judaea he cannot raise this claim, but in Galilee[20] he can raise it. Now in which respect? If to make her forbidden for him, why [should he] not [be able to raise this claim] in Judaea?[21] Consequently[22] [we must say it is] to cause her to lose her kethubah;[23] and [it is in a case] when he raises a claim. Is it not that he raises the claim of 'an open opening'? — No, when he raises the claim of blood.[24]

---

(1) [So that in case he falls in battle his wife should be free to marry without the necessity of halizah. The Get would in that case take effect retrospectively from the date of its writing (Rashi). Tosaf.: He writes a Get without any conditions to take effect immediately]

(2) I Sam. XVII, 15.

(3) I.e., the betrothals, these thou shalt take from them by a deed of divorce (Rashi).

(4) We have been taught in a Mishnah; v. supra 2a.

(5) That the claim of 'an open opening' makes the wife forbidden for the husband.

(6) Lit., 'on the fourth day, yes, on the fifth day, no.'

(7) The husband might be appeased by the following Monday, cf. supra 2a and 5a.

(8) V. Glos.

(9) No harm is done by this. There is no sin involved in the payment of the marriage settlement to the wife, even if, in law, she forfeited it through her conduct.

(10) Lit., 'but'.

(11) If her conduct makes her forbidden for the husband for marital intercourse then the disregard of this prohibition would involve a sin. And therefore a maiden marries on the fourth day of the week so that there should be no 'cooling of the mind'.

(12) I.e., the husband must have put forward a serious claim.

(13) As evidencing unfaithfulness, This proves that the charge of an 'open opening' by the husband renders his wife forbidden to him.

(14) I.e he claims that there was no bleeding. And this is a more manifest sign of the absence of virginity, evidencing unfaithfulness, than 'an open opening.

(15) Rab Judah.

(16) In a Mishnah; cf. infra 22a.

(17) I.e., he who frequently visits the house of the father of his betrothed bride.

(18) This was customary in Judaea.

(19) And might have had intimate relations with the bride.

(20) In Galilee that custom (v. p. 46, n. 16) did not prevail.

(21) If he is sure that he has not been intimate with her during the time of betrothal and he charges her with unfaithfulness, he renders her, by the mere charge, forbidden to him?

(22) Lit., 'but'.

(23) In Judaea he cannot make her lose the kethubah, because he might have been intimate with her during the period of betrothal.

(24) And therefore Samuel's statement is necessary.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 10a

It was stated: Rab Nahman said [that] Samuel said in the name of R. Simeon b. Eleazar: The scholars ordained for the daughters of Israel [as follows]: for a maiden two hundred [zuz[1]] and for a widow a maneh[2] [one hundred zuz].[3] And they trusted him, so that when he said, 'I have found an open opening', he is believed.[4] If so, what have the Sages accomplished with their ordinance?[5] — Said Raba: The presumption is [that] no one will take the trouble of preparing a [wedding-]feast and will then spoil it.[6] One has taught: Since it[7] is a fine [instituted] by the sages she[8] shall collect only from the worst land[9] [of the husband's estate]. [You say] a fine! Why a fine?[10] — Say then: since it is an ordinance of the sages,[11] she shall collect only from the worst land [of the husband's estate]. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: The kethubah of a wife is from the Torah.[12] But did Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel say so? Surely it has been taught: [It is written in the Torah] He shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins;[13] [this teaches us that] this[14] is [as much] as the dowry of the virgins[15] and the dowry of the virgins is [as much] as this.[16] But,[17] the Sages found a support for [the rule that] the kethubah of a wife is from the Torah. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel Says: The kethubah of a wife is not from the words of the Bible, but from the words of the Soferim![18] — Reverse it.[19] And why does it appear to you right to reverse[20] the latter [teaching]? Reverse the former [teaching]![21] — We have [already] heard that R. Simeon the son of Gamaliel said that the kethubah is from the Bible, for we learnt: Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel says: He[22] gives her[23] [the kethubah] in Cappadocian coins.[24] And if you wish, you may say: The whole of it[25] is [according to] Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel. only[26] it is defective[27] and it teaches thus:[28] Here the Sages found a support for [the rule that] the kethubah of a wife is from the Torah. The kethubah of a widow [however] is not from the words of the Torah but from the words of the Soferim, for Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel Says: The kethubah of a widow is not from the words of the Torah but from the words of the Soferim.[29]

Someone came before R. Nahman [and] said to him: I have found an open opening.[30] R. Nahman answered:[31] Lash him with palm-switches; harlots[32] lie prostrate before him.[33] But it is R. Nahman who said that he [the husband] is believed![34] — He is believed, but [at the same time] one lashes him with palm-switches. R. Ahai answered: Here[35] [it speaks] of a young man,[36] there [it speaks] of one who was married before.[37]

Some one came before Rabban Gamaliel [and] said to him, I have found an 'open opening'. He [Rabban Gamaliel] answered him: Perhaps you moved aside.[38] I will give you an illustration: To what is this like? To a man who was walking in the deep darkness of the night[39] [and came to his house and found the door locked];[40] if he moves aside [the bolt[41] of the door] he finds it open, if he does not move aside [the bolt of the door] he finds it locked. Some say [that] he [R. Gamaliel] answered him thus: Perhaps you moved aside wilfully[42] and you tore away the door and the bar.[43] I will give you an illustration: To what is this like? To a man who was walking in the deep darkness of the night [and came to his house and found the door locked]; if he moves aside [the bolt of the door] wilfully[44] he finds it open, if he does not move aside [the bolt of the door] wilfully he finds it locked.

Some one came before Rabban Gamaliel the son of Rabbi [and] said to him, 'My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood.' She [the wife] said to him, 'My master, I was a virgin.' He said to them: Bring me that cloth.[45] They brought him the cloth, and he soaked it in water and he washed it and he found on it a good many drops of blood.[46]

[Thereupon] he [Rabban Gamaliel] said to him [the husband]: Go, be happy with thy bargain.[47] Huna Mar the son of Raba of Parazika,[48] said to R. Ashi: Shall we also do it?[49] He answered him:

(1) V. Glos.

(2) V. Glos.

(3) As her kethubah. V. infra 10b.

(4) And she loses the kethubah.

(5) If he can make her lose the kethubah by the claim of an ‘open opening’.

(6) No one will go to the trouble and expense of a wedding and then waste it all by an invented claim. If he makes such a charge, he is, no doubt, telling the truth.

(7) The kethubah.

(8) The wife.

(9) Cf. also B.K. 7b and 8a.

(10) Why do you call it a fine? And why should it he a fine?

(11) I.e., a Rabbinical, and not a Biblical, ordinance.

(12) I.e.. an ordinance of the Bible.

(13) Ex. XXII, 16.

(14) The payment for the enticement of the virgin.

(15) I.e., fifty pieces of silver, the fine inflicted for violating a virgin, v. Deut. XXII, 27.

(16) The ‘silver pieces’ referred to are shekels, not ma'ahs, v. infra 38a.

(17) Lit., ‘from here’, i.e., from the phrase ‘dowry of virgins’.

(18) The Soferim, or scribes, were the learned men who succeeded Ezra during a period of about two hundred years. Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel therefore holds that the kethubah was a Rabbinical, and not a Biblical, ordinance.

(19) The answer is: Reverse the reading and say that Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel said that in the Scriptural verse mentioned is to be found a support for the rule that the kethubah of a wife is from the Bible, and that the first Tanna said that it was not Biblical but ‘from the words of the Soferim’.

(20) Lit., ‘And why do you see that you should reverse.’

(21) Where it says that Rabban Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that the kethubah of a wife is from the Torah.

(22) The husband.

(23) The wife.

(24) They were more variable than the Palestinian coins. The husband has to pay in Cappadocian coins because the kethubah is from the Bible; v. infra 110b.

(25) Of the teaching of the Baraitha mentioned before.

(26) Lit., ‘and’.

(27) A clause is missing.

(28) I.e., the Baraitha should be read thus.

(29) According to this version of the Baraitha, R. Simeon b. Gamaliel holds that the kethubah of the maiden-wife is Biblical and that the kethubah of the widow-wife is rabbinical.

(30) He (the husband) raised this complaint about his newly wedded wife.

(31) Lit., ‘said to him’, i.e., concerning him.

(32) V. Levy, Vol. III, p. 2. Rashi: ‘the harlots of Mabrakta’. [Mabrakta was a place in the neighbourhood of Mahoza. v. Obermeyer, p. 177.]

(33) I.e., such a man ought to be punished. for if he is such an expert in these matters he must have led an immoral life.

(34) If the husband says that he has not found virginity in his wife. Why should he then be lashed for having complained to R. Nahman about his wife?

(35) Where R. Nahman ordered punishment.’

(36) Who was not married before. He should not have known if he had not had intercourse with harlots before his marriage. There R. Nahman ordered lashing.

(37) And therefore he could know without having led an immoral life. He is therefore believed and receives no lashing (Rashi). It is also possible that according to R. Ahai both are believed R. Ahai only explains that it is the young man who gets the birch.

(38) And thus performed the coition without tearing the hymen. V. Jast. p. 595.

(39) Lit., ‘in the blackness of night and darkness’; cf. Prov. VII, 9.
(40) Some such words as these must be inserted.
(41) ‘He moved aside’, and ‘he did not move aside’ refer apparently to the bolt of the door and not to the door itself. The simile is obvious: the bolt is compared to the membrum virile. He moved the membrum virile aside and therefore found ‘an open opening’.
(42) Intentionally.
(43) The ‘door’, ‘door-way’, ‘entrance’, apparently refers to the vagina, or the entrance into the vagina, and ‘the bar’ to the hymen. He intentionally moved so forcibly that he tore open the entrance and swept away the hymen without feeling it.
(44) The action must be intentional. The chief point of this version seems to be the wilful intention. The bolt of a door cannot, as a rule, he moved aside accidentally. There must be intention in the action.
(45) Upon which they spent the night.
(46) The blood was covered by semen.
(47) Lit., ‘take possession of’ a phrase in which there is also an element of joy. ‘Be happy with’ expresses well the spirit of the decision. Rabban Gamaliel himself was happy that he could keep together and strengthen the bond of marriage between husband and wife.
(48) Faransag, near Bagdad.
(49) I.e., apply in such cases the test applied by Rabban Gamaliel to the cloth.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 10b

Our[1] laundry work[2] is like their[3] washing.[4] And if you will say let us do laundry work,[5] [my answer is] the smoothing stone will remove it.[6] Someone came before Rabban Gamaliel the son of Rabbi [and] said to him, ‘My master, l have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood.’ She [the wife] said to him, ‘My master, I am still a virgin.’ He [then] said to them: Bring me two handmaids, one [who is] a virgin and one who had intercourse with a man. They brought to him [two such handmaids], and he placed them upon a cask of wine. [In the case of] the one who was no more a virgin its smell[7] went through,[8] [in the case of] the virgin the smell did not go through.[9] He [then] placed this one [the young wife] also [on a cask of wine]. and its smell[10] did not go through. He[11] [then] said to him:[12] Go, be happy with thy bargain.[13] — But he should have examined her from the very beginning![14] — He had heard a tradition,[15] but he had not seen it done in practice.[16] and he thought. The matter might not be certain[17] and it would not be proper[18] to deal lightly with daughters of Israel.[19]

Someone came before Rabban Gamaliel the elder [and] said to him, ‘My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood. She [the wife] said to him, ‘My master, I am of the family of Dorkati, [the women of] which have neither blood of menstruation nor blood of virginity.’ Rabban Gamaliel investigated among her women relatives and he found [the facts to be] in accordance with her words. He [then] said to him: Go, be happy with thy bargain. Happy art thou that thou hast been privileged [to marry a woman] of the family of Dorkati. What is [the meaning of] Dorkati? — A cut-off generation.[20] — R. Hanina said: Vain consolation Rabban Gamaliel offered[21] to that man, for R. Hiyya taught: As the leaven is wholesome for the dough, so is blood wholesome for a woman. And one has [also] taught in the name of R. Meir: Every woman who has abundant blood has many children. It has been said: R, Jeremiah b. Abba said: He [Rabban Gamaliel] said to him [the husband]: Be happy with thy bargain. But R. Jose b. Abin said: He said to him: thou hast been punished with thy bargain.[22] We quite understand the one who says ‘Thou hast been punished’ with thy bargain — this is [according to the view] of R. Hanina. But according to him who says ‘Be happy’ [with thy bargain], what is the advantage [of such a marriage]? — He [the husband] does not come to any doubt regarding menstruation.

Someone came to Rabbi [and] said, ‘My master, I have had intercourse [with my newly-wedded wife] and I have not found any blood.’ She said, ‘My master, I was [and am] still a virgin, and it was [a period of] years of dearth.’ Rabbi saw that their faces were black,[23] [and] he commanded concerning them, and they[24] brought them[25] to a bath and gave them to eat and to drink and brought them to the bridal chamber, and he had intercourse with her and found blood. He[26] [then] said to him: Go, be happy with thy bargain. Rabbi applied to them the verse:[27] Their skin is shrivelled upon their bodies,’ it is withered, it is become like a stick.[28]

MISHNAH. A MAIDEN — HER KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ],[29] AND A WIDOW — A MANEH.[30] A MAIDEN, WHO IS A WIDOW, [OR] DIVORCED, OR A HALUZAH[31] FROM BETROTHAL[32] — HER KETHUBAH[33] IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ], AND THERE LIES AGAINST THEM THE CHARGE OF NON-VIRGINITY.[34]

GEMARA. Why [is a widow called] ‘almanah’? R. Hana of Bagdad said: because of the maneh.[35] But what can be said with regard to a widow from the betrothal?[36] — Because that one is called ‘almanah’[37] this one is also called ‘almanah.’[38] What can be said with regard to [the word] ‘almanah’, that is written in the Bible?[39] — [The woman] for whom the Rabbis will in future institute [the kethubah of] a maneh. But does the Bible speak of a thing which will be in the future?[40] — Yes, for it is written: And the name of the third river is Hiddekel, that is it which goeth towards the east of Ashur,[41] and R. Joseph learnt: Ashur, that is Seleucia. But was [Seleucia] already then in existence? But [it is mentioned] because it will exist in the future. Here also ‘almanah’ is mentioned in the Bible] because it [the kethubah of maneh] will exist in the future.

R. Hana of Bagdad also said: The rain waters, saturates and manures [the earth] and refreshes[42] and enlarges[43] [the fruits]. Raba the son of R. Ishmael, and some say R. Yemar the son of Shelemiah, said: Which is the verse?[44] [It is this:] Thou waterest the ridges abundantly, thou settlest the furrows thereof, thou makest it soft with showers, thou blessest the springing thereof.[45]

R. Eleazar said: The altar removes and feeds, makes beloved, atones.[46] Have not ‘atones’ and ‘removes’ the same meaning?[47] It removes [evil decrees][48] and atones for sins R. Hana of Bagdad also said: Dates warm, satisfy, act as a laxative,[49] strengthen[50] and do not make [one] delicate.

Rab said: If one has eaten dates, he should not give a legal decision. An objection was raised. Dates are wholesome morning and evening, in the afternoon they are bad, at noon they are incomparable.[51] and they remove three things: evil thought, stress of the bowels, and abdominal troubles! — Do we say that they are no good? They are indeed good. only for the moment [they cause] unsteadiness. It is analogous to wine, for the Master said:[52] He who has drunk[53] one-fourth [of a log][54] of wine shall not give a legal decision.[55] And if you wish you may say: There is no difficulty: This is before a meal and that is after a meal,[56] for Abaye said: Mother[57] told me: Dates before a meal are as an axe to the palmtree,[58] after a meal as a bar to the door.[59] Dasha [door], Raba explained:[60] derek sham[61] [‘the way there’].[62] Darga [stairs, ladder]. Raba explained:[63] derek gag [the way of the roof].[64] Puria [bed], R. Papa explained: sheparin we-rabin ‘aleha [because one is fruitful and multiplies on it]. R. Nahman b. Isaac said:

(1) Babylonian.

(2) גיחוץ is fine laundry’ work.

(3) Palestinian.

(4) כיבוס is plain washing. In Palestine the plain washing was better than in Babylonia. because the water in Palestine was better or because they had in Palestine better ingredients (Rashi). In order to get the same results they would have to do fine laundry work in Babylonia, and that would include smoothing the cloth with a stone, according to Rashi, with a gloss-stone.

(5) Let us apply גיחוץ to the cloth on which the bride and bridegroom slept.

(6) The blood. In the process of גיחוץ the stone with which the cloth would be smoothed would cause the drops of blood, which would be seen after plain washing, to disappear. The test of Rabban Gamaliel could therefore not be employed in Babylonia.

(7) I.e., the smell of the wine.

(8) One could smell the wine from the mouth (Rashi).

(9) One could not smell the wine from the mouth.

(10) I.e., the smell of the wine.

(11) Rabban Gamaliel.

(12) To the husband.

(13) The test shewed that the wife was a virgin.

(14) Why did he first have to experiment with the two handmaids.

(15) That this was a reliable test.

(16) Lit., ‘The practice he had not seen.’

(17) Lit., ‘perhaps it is not certain that the matter is good,’ that is, that the test would be effective.

(18) Lit., ‘The way of the land,’ that is, the custom.

(19) Therefore he carried out the test first with handmaids.

(20) Heb. Dor. Katu'a.

(21) Lit., ‘consoled him.’

(22) Lit., ‘Be punished with thy bargain,’ that is, the marriage stands, although it is not to thy advantage.

(25) The young couple.

(26) Rabbi.

(27) Lit., ‘read concerning them.’

(28) Lam. IV, 8.

(29) V. Glos.

(30) One hundred zuz.

(31) A woman released from a leviratical marriage, by halizah; v. Deut. XXV, 5-10.

(32) She was only betrothed (arusah, v. Glos.) but not married, and became a widow or was divorced, or released by halizah from marrying her deceased fiance's brother.

(33) Lit., ‘their kethubah’. The kethubah of either the widow’, or the divorcee, or the halizah.

(34) The husband who marries one of these women has a right to complain if he does not find signs of virginity. As they were only betrothed but not married they are expected to be virgins.

(35) The value of the kethubah of a woman who married when she was a widow. This is no attempt at proper etymology.

(36) The value of the kethubah of such a widow is two hundred zuz, and still she is called ‘almanah’.

(37) This is no attempt at proper etymology.

(38) Lit., ‘One calls her.’

(39) The kethubah was not biblically ordained for the widow; v. supra 10a.

(40) Lit., ‘And was the verse written for the future?’

(41) Gen. II, 14.

(42) Or ‘softens.’

(43) Lit., ‘causes to extend.’

(44) That can be referred to in support of R. Hana's saying regarding the rain.

(45) Ps. LXV, 11.

(46) A play on the word מזבח (altar).

(47) ‘Removes’ apparently also refers to sins!

(48) The answer is that ‘removes’ refers to evil decrees.

(49) Lit., ‘loosen’, (the bowels).

(50) The body.

(51) I.e., very good. — Dates are good, or very good, after the meals in the morning, noon and evening. They are not good in the afternoon after a rest (Rashi).

(52) The reference is to Samuel, in whose name this saying is quoted in ‘Er. 64a.

(53) Lit., he who drinks.

(54) Log is a liquid measure equal to the contents of six eggs.

(55) And one-fourth of a log of wine is certainly wholesome. But for the moment it may make one unsteady, and therefore unfit to give legal decisions.
(56) Lit., ‘bread’. If one eats dates before a meal, the effect is bad and one must not give legal decisions. The passage which declares them bad speaks of a case where one eats dates after a meal. The statement itself bears this out; v. supra p. 53, n. 6.
(57) V. Kid. (Sonc. ed.) p. 153.
(58) That is, injurious.
(59) This apparently means good. It is difficult to see the meaning of the comparison. Rashi explains: They sustain the body as the bar supports a door.
(60) Lit., ‘said’.
(61) A play on the word.
(62) Or, the way is there; or, through there.
(63) Lit., ‘said.’
(64) Or, the way to the roof; or, the way through the roof.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 11a

We will also say:[1] ailonith [the barren woman that is] a man-like[2] woman, who does not bear children.[3]

MISHNAH. A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED, OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD — THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM THE CLAIM OF [NON-]VIRGINITY.[4] GEMARA. R. Huna said: A minor proselyte[5] is immersed[6] by the direction[7] of the court.[8] What does he let us know? That it is an advantage[9] to him and one may act for a person in his absence[10] to his advantage? [Surely] we have learned [this already]: One may act for a person in his absence to his advantage. but one cannot act for a person in his absence to his disadvantage!

What you might have supposed is that an idolator[11] prefers a life without restraint[12] because it is established for us that a slave certainly prefers a dissolute life,[13] therefore, he[14] lets us know that this is said[15] [only in the case] of a grown-up person who has already tasted sin,[16] but [in the case of] a minor, it is an advantage to him.[17] May we say that [this Mishnah] supports him:[18] A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED. OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD [etc.]? Is it not that they immersed them[19] by the direction of the Court?[20] No, here we treat of the case of a proselyte whose sons and daughters were converted with him, so that they are satisfied with what their father does.[21]

R. Joseph said: When they[22] have become of age they can protest [against their conversion].[23]

Abaye asked:[24] A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE, AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] LESS THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD-THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]. Now if you indeed mean to say [that] when they have become of age they can protest [against their conversion],[25] would we give her the kethubah that she may go and eat [it] in her heathen state? — When she has become of age.[26] [But] when she has become of age, too, she can protest and go out![27] — As soon as she was of age one hour, and did not protest, she cannot protest any more.[28]

Raba raised an objection: These maidens receive the fine:[29] if a man has intercourse with[30] a bastard,[31] a Nethinah,[32] a Cuthean,[33] a proselyte, a captive. or a slave, who have been redeemed, converted, or freed [when they were] less than three years and one day old-they have to be paid the fine.[34] Now if you say [that] when they have become of age they can protest, would we give her[35] the fine that she may go and eat it in her heathen state? — When she has become of age.[36] When she has become of age too she can protest and go out![37] — As soon as she was of age one hour and did not protest she cannot protest any more.[38] Abaye did not say as Raba [said][39] [because] there[40] [where it speaks of fines we can say]: This is the reason:[41] that the sinner should not have any benefit.[42] Raba did not say as Abaye [said][43] because in the case of the kethubah [we can say that] this is the reason:[44] that it[45] should not be a light matter in his eyes to send her away.[46]

MISHNAH. WHEN A GROWN-UP MAN[47] HAS HAD SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH[48] A LITTLE GIRL,[49] OR WHEN A SMALL BOY[50] HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A GROWN-UP WOMAN, OR [WHEN A GIRL WAS ACCIDENTALLY] INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD[51] — [IN ALL THESE CASES] THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]; SO ACCORDING TO[52] R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A GIRL WHO WAS INJURED ACCIDENTALLY BY A PIECE OF WOOD — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH. A VIRGIN, WHO WAS A WIDOW, A DIVORCEE, OR A HALUZAH FROM MARRIAGE[53] — HER[54] KETHUBAH IS A MANEH.[55]

(1) We will make a similar etymological exposition.

(2) Or ram-like. איילונית ‘a woman who cannot bear children,’ is connected with איל(ram).

(3) I.e., who is incapable of bearing children.

(4) If they had sexual intercourse before they were three years and one day old the hymen would grow again, and they would be virgins. V. 9a and 11b and cf. Nid. 44b and 45a.

(5) I.e., a minor who wants to become a proselyte, that is, be converted to Judaism. Prior to and for the purpose of that conversion the would-be proselyte has to undergo circumcision and immersion in water. V. Yeb. 46aff. The immersion is to signify his purification. If the would-be proselyte is a minor (under thirteen years of age) and has no father to act for him, the Court can authorise his ritual immersion.

(6) Lit., ‘they immerse him’.

(7) Lit., ‘by the knowledge’.

(8) Lit., ‘house of judgment’. Three members constitute the court.

(9) To be received into the Jewish Faith.

(10) Lit., ‘not in his presence’. — As the proselyte is a minor he is not, legally speaking, present.

(11) Lit.,’one who worships the stars and planets.’

(12) Lit., ‘lawlessness, unbridled lust.’ — It would therefore be a disadvantage to the minor would-be proselyte to become a Jew.

(13) Cf. Git. 13a. — This confirms the former supposition.

(14) R. Huna.

(15) Lit., ‘these words.’

(16) Lit., ‘who has tasted the taste of what is forbidden’.

(17) To become a Jew.

(18) R. Huna.

(19) The women proselytes.

(20) Because they were less than three years and one day old, consequently minors.

(21) The immersion of the minor proselytes therefore took place by the direction of their father and not of the Court. — This Mishnah is therefore no support for R. Huna.

(22) The minor proselytes.

(23) And leave the Jewish faith and go back to their former state without being liable to a penalty by the Jewish Court.

(24) Lit., ‘he raised against this a point of contradiction from a higher authority.’

(25) V. note 2.

(26) Only then one gives her the kethubah.

(27) Of Judaism; why then give her the kethubah?

(28) The kethubah would be given to her after ‘one hour’.

(29) Lit., ‘These maidens to whom there is a fine’. — The fine is that for seducing a girl; v. Deut. XXII, 29.

(30) Lit., ‘He who came on.’

(31) V. Yeb. 49a.
(32) A descendant of the Gibeonites. V. Joshua IX, 22, 23, 27 and cf. Yeb. 78b.
(33) A Samaritan.
(34) V. infra 29a.
(35) The proselyte.
(36) And adhered to Jewish practice, only then she is paid the fine, v. Tosaf.
(37) Of Judaism.
(38) The fine would be given to her after 'one hour'.
(39) Did not ask the question of Raba.
(40) In the Mishnah, infra 29a.
(41) Why the fine should he paid to the seduced proselyte girl.
(42) Therefore he should pay the fine in any case. But the case of the kethubah (in our Mishnah) is different. Therefore, Abaye asked from our Mishnah.
(43) He did not ask the same question as Abaye.
(44) Why the kethubah is paid to the woman proselyte.
(45) Lit., 'she'.
(46) Lit., 'to bring her out (of his house)', that is, to divorce her. Therefore he should pay the kethubah in any case. But the case of the fine is different. Therefore Raba asks from the Mishnah infra 29a.
(47) A man who was of age.
(48) Lit., 'who came on'.
(49) Less than three years old.
(50) Less than nine years of age.
(51) Lit., 'One who was injured by wood', as a result of which she injured the hymen.
(52) Lit., 'the words of'.
(53) A maiden was married, and immediately after the marriage. became a widow or divorced, or a haluzah; v. supra 10b.
(54) Lit., 'their', that is, the kethubah of each of them.
(55) Since the marriage had taken place she is regarded as a married woman and it is assumed that she is no more a virgin.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 11b

AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM NO CHARGE OF NONVIRGINITY. A WOMAN PROSELYTE, A WOMAN CAPTIVE AND A WOMAN SLAVE, WHO HAVE BEEN REDEEMED, CONVERTED, OR FREED [WHEN THEY WERE] MORE THAN THREE YEARS AND ONE DAY OLD — THEIR KETHUBAH IS A MANEH, AND THERE IS WITH REGARD TO THEM NO CHARGE OF NON-VIRGINITY.

GEMARA. Rab Judah said that Rab said: A small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman makes her [as though she were] injured by a piece of wood.[1] When I said it before Samuel he said: 'Injured by a piece of wood' does not apply to[2] flesh. Some teach this teaching by itself:[3] [As to] a small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman. Rab said, he makes her [as though she were] injured by a piece of wood; whereas Samuel said: 'Injured by a piece of wood' does not apply to flesh. R. Oshaia objected: WHEN A GROWN-UP MAN HAS HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A LITTLE GIRL, OR WHEN A SMALL BOY HAS INTERCOURSE WITH A GROWN-UP WOMAN, OR WHEN A GIRL WAS ACCIDENTALLY INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD-[IN ALL THESE CASES] THEIR KETHUBAH IS TWO HUNDRED [ZUZ]; SO ACCORDING TO R. MEIR. BUT THE SAGES SAY: A GIRL WHO WAS INJURED ACCIDENTALLY BY A PIECE OF WOOD — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH![4] Raba said. It means[5] this: When a grown-up man has intercourse with a little girl it is nothing, for when the girl is less than this,[6] it is as if one puts the finger into the eye;[7] but when a small boy has intercourse with a grown-up woman he makes her as 'a girl who is injured by a piece of wood.' and [with regard to the case of] 'a girl injured by a piece of wood.’ itself, there is the difference of opinion between R. Meir and the Sages.

Rami b. Hama said: The difference of opinion[8] is [only] when he[9] knew her,[10] for R. Meir compares her[11] to a mature girl,[12] and the Sages compare her to a woman who had intercourse with a man.[13] But if he did not know her,[14] all agree[15] that she has nothing.[16] And why does R. Meir compare her to a mature girl? Let him compare her to a woman who had intercourse with a man! — [In the case of] a woman who had intercourse with a man, a deed had been done to her by a man;[17] but in her case[18] — no deed has been done to her by a man. — And why do the Rabbis compare[19] her to a woman who had intercourse with a man? Let them compare her to a mature girl! [In the case of] a mature girl no deed whatsoever has been done to her,[20] but in her case — a deed has been done to her.[21]

‘But if he did not know her, all agree that she gets nothing’.[22] R. Nahman objected: If she says. ‘I was injured by a piece of wood,’ and he says. ‘No, but thou hadst intercourse with a man’, Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say [that] she is believed![23] But, said Raba, whether he knew’ her[24] and whether he did not know her,[25] according to R. Meir [her kethubah is] two hundred [zuz];[26] [whereas] according to the Rabbis, if he knew her [her kethubah is] a maneh, [if] he did not know her, she gets nothing.[27]

Raba however changed his opinion,[28] for it has been taught: How [does] the bringing out of an evil name[29] [take place]? He[30] comes to court and says, ‘I, So-and-so,[31] have not found in thy daughter the tokens of virginity.’ If there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him,[32] she gets a[33] kethubah of a maneh.[34] [But surely] if there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him, she is to be stoned![35] — It means this: If there are witnesses that she has been unchaste under him, she has to be stoned; if she was unchaste before [the betrothal], she gets a kethubah of a maneh. Now R. Hiyya b. Abin said [that] R. Shesheth said: This teaches:[36] If he married her in the presumption that she is a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse with a man,[37] she gets a kethubah of a maneh. Whereupon R. Nahman objected: ‘If one marries a woman and does not find in her virginity, [and] she says, "After thou hadst betrothed me [to thyself] I was forced[38] and [thus] thy[39] field has been inundated," and he says, "No, but before I betrothed thee [unto me] [thou hadst intercourse with a man], my bargain is [thus] a mistaken one.’ [etc.]’[40] and [this assuredly means] she is to get nothing![41] And R. Hiyya b. Abin said to them: Is it possible! R. Amram and all the great ones of the age sat[42] when R. Shesheth said that teaching and they found it difficult[43] and he[44] answered: In which respect is it indeed a mistaken bargain? In respect of two hundred [zuz:], but a maneh she gets [as a kethubah]. And you[45] say [that it means] she gets nothing! Whereupon Raba said: He who asked [this question][46] has asked well, for a mistaken bargain’ means entirely.[47] But [then] that [other teaching] presents a difficulty.[48] Put [it] right[49] and say thus: If there are witnesses that she was unchaste under him[50] she has to be stoned, if she was unchaste before [the betrothal], she gets nothing, if she was found to be injured by a piece of wood, she has a kethubah of a maneh. But Surely it was Raba who said [above that], according to the Rabbis, if he did not know her, she gets nothing![51] Hence you must conclude[52] from this[53] that Raba retracted from that [opinion].[54] Our Rabbis taught: If the first [husband] took her [the bride] to his home for the purpose of marriage. and she has witnesses that she was not alone [with him,][55] or even if she was alone [with him]. but she did not stay [with him] as much time as is needed for intercourse, the second [husband][56] cannot raise any complaint with regard to her virginity. for the first [husband] had taken her to his home [for the purpose of marriage].[57]

---

(1) Although the intercourse of a small boy is not regarded as a sexual act, nevertheless the woman is injured by it as by a piece of wood.

(2) Lit., ‘is not in’.

(3) I.e., the difference of opinion between Rab and Samuel with regard to that question was recorded without any reference to R. Judah.

(4) The Sages differ only with regard to a girl injured by a piece of wood, but not with regard to a small boy who has intercourse with a grown-up woman. This shows that the latter case cannot be compared with the former case. The Mishnah would consequently be against Rab and for Samuel.
(5) Lit., 'says'.
(6) Lit 'here', that is, less than three years old.
(7) I.e., tears come to the eye again and again, so does virginity come back to the little girl under three years. Cf. Nid. 45a.
(8) Between R. Meir and the Sages.
(9) The husband.
(10) I.e., he knew, when he married her, that the bride was thus injured.
(11) The one who was thus injured.
(12) A bogereth (v. Glos.), a girl of full maturity, may sometimes not have signs of virginity, (v. Yeb. 59a), and her kethubah is nevertheless two hundred zuz.
(13) And had no virginity. Therefore her kethubah is only a maneh, as that of a widow.
(14) Did not know of the injury and thus thought that she was in her full virginity.
(15) Lit., 'the words of all.'
(16) Lit., 'it is nothing'. — As he was kept in ignorance of what happened to her, she does not get even a maneh (Rashi).
(17) Lit., 'by the hands of man'.
(18) Lit., 'this'.
(19) Lit., 'instead of comparing'.
(20) Her signs of virginity vanished through her maturity.
(21) Through the piece of wood.
(22) This is the concluding part of the statement.
(23) V. infra 23a. This shews that she gets the kethubah even if he did not know that she had been thus injured.
(24) I.e., knew, when he married her, that she had been injured.
(25) Did not know that she was thus injured.
(26) [And the author of the Mishnah which states that she is believed, will be R. Meir, and she receives two hundred zuz].
(27) V. n. 4. [And our Mishnah which states that she gets only a maneh will represent the view of the Sages in the case where he knew her].
(28) Lit., 'and Raba went back on himself.'
(29) Cf. Deut. XXII, 13,14.
(30) The husband.
(31) Lit., 'such and such a person', — the, husband is addressing the father of his young wife.
(32) I.e., that she had intercourse with a man after their betrothal.
(33) Lit., 'there is unto her'.
(34) V. infra 46a.
(35) Lit., 'a daughter of stoning' — (Cf. Deut. XXII, 20, 21). [How then can she have a claim to a kethubah?]
(36) Lit., 'this says'.
(37) Before the betrothal.
(38) By a man to have intercourse with him.
(39) Lit., 'his field'.
(40) V. Mishnah, infra 12b.
(41) [I.e., the words 'my bargain is a mistaken one' imply that the husband in making this charge denies her the right to receive anything at all. This refutes R. Shesheth's view that she is entitled in such a case to one maneh.]
(42) I.e., were present.
(43) Lit., 'and it was difficult unto them'. I.e., they felt the difficulty presented by the cited Mishnah.
(44) R. Shesheth.
(45) R. Nahman.
(46) I.e., R. Nahman, by asking the question from the cited Mishnah.
(47) I.e., entirely a mistaken bargain and she gets nothing. The question of R. Nahman was therefore a good question.
(48) Lit., 'That is difficult'. The Baraitha of Kethuboth 46a, which says that if she was unchaste before the betrothal she gets a kethubah of a maneh.

(49) I.e., answer.

(50) I.e., that she had intercourse with a man after their betrothal.

(51) And this is in contradiction with what Raba said just now, namely. that if the young wife was found to be injured by a piece of wood, she has a Kethubah of a maneh.

(52) Lit., 'hear from this'.

(53) From Raba's statement that one injured thus gets a kethubah of a maneh.

(54) Expressed by Raba previously that, according to the Rabbis, if the husband did not know before the betrothal that the bride was injured, she gets no kethubah at all.

(55) Lit., 'that she was not hidden.'

(56) The woman married again after the death of, or divorce by. the first husband.

(57) As she was married before, the second husband must reckon with the possibility of her having had intercourse with the first husband, in spite of the evidence which she can bring to shew that the marriage was not consummated.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 12a

Rabbah said: This teaches that if he married her in the presumption that she was a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse she gets a kethubah of a maneh.[1] R. Ashi said: [No.] generally.I can tell you. she receives indeed nothing; but it is different here, because the first one had married her.[2] But let us apprehend that perhaps she was unchaste under him![3] — Said R. Sherabia: [We] suppose he betrothed her to himself and had immediately intercourse with her.[4]

Some[5] there are who refer this[6] to our Mishnah: A VIRGIN, WHO IS A WIDOW, A DIVORCEE OR A HALUZAH FROM MARRIAGE, — HER KETHUBAH[7] IS A MANEH AND THERE IS NO CLAIM OF VIRGINITY WITH REGARD TO THEM. A VIRGIN FROM MARRIAGE' — how is it possible? — When she was brought into the bridal chamber and no intercourse took Place. Rabbah said: This teaches that if he married her in the presumption that she was a virgin and she was found to have had intercourse she gets a kethubah of a maneh.[8] R. Ashi said: [No.] indeed, I can tell you. generally she gets nothing; but it is different here, because she was brought into the bridal chamber.[9] But let us apprehend that perhaps she was unchaste under him![10] — Said R. Sherabia: When he betrothed her to himself and had immediately intercourse with her.[11] He who refers this[12] to the Baraitha,[13] how much more [would this apply] to our Mishnah.[14] But he who refers this to our Mishnah would not apply it to the Baraitha, because he could say unto her, 'I have relied upon the witnesses.'[15]

MISHNAH. HE WHO EATS WITH HIS FATHER-IN-LAW IN JUDAEA WITHOUT THE PRESENCE OF WITNESSES CANNOT RAISE A COMPLAINT REGARDING THE VIRGINITY. BECAUSE HE HAS BEEN ALONE WITH HER.[16]

GEMARA. Since it says[17] in the Mishnah HE WHO EATS,[18] It follows that there are places also in Judaea where one does not eat.[19] Abaye said: Conclude from this that in Judaea, too, the places differ in their custom, as it was taught: R. Judah said: In Judaea they used formerly to leave the bridegroom and the bride alone one hour before their entry into the bridal chamber, so that he may become intimate with her,[20] but in Galilee they did not do so. In Judaea they used formerly to put up two best men,[21] one for him and one for her, in order to examine the bridegroom and the bride when they enter the bridal chamber,[22] and in Galilee they did not do so. In Judaea. formerly. the best men used to sleep in the house in which the bridegroom and the bride slept, and in Galilee they did not do so. And he who did not act according to this custom could not raise the charge of non-virginity.[23] To which [does this[24] refer]? Shall I say [that it refers] to the first clause?[25] [If so,] It ought to read, 'He who acted[26] [according to this custom]!' Again[27] [if you will say that it refers] to the last clause,[28] it ought to read, 'He who was not examined!'[29] — Abaye said: Indeed [it refers] to the first clause, so read.[30] 'He who acted [according to this custom].' Said Raba to him: But it reads,[31] He who did not act!’ But. said Raba. it means thus: He who did not act according to the custom of Galilee in Galilee but [acted] according to the custom of Judaea in Galilee cannot raise the claim of virginity. R. Ashi said: Indeed [it refers] to the last clause,[32] and we should read,[33] ‘He who was not examined.’[34]

MISHNAH. IT IS ALL ONE WHETHER [THE WOMAN IS] AN ISRAELITISH WIDOW OR A PRIESTLY WIDOW[35] — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH. THE COURT OF THE PRIESTS[36] COLLECTED FOR A MAIDEN[37] FOUR HUNDRED ZUZ, AND THE SAGES DID NOT PROHIBIT [IT] TO THEM.[38]

GEMARA. A Tanna taught: And the priestly widow-her ketubah is two hundred [zuz]. But we have taught in our Mishnah: AN ISRAELITISH WIDOW AS WELL AS A PRIESTLY WIDOW — HER KETHUBAH IS A MANEH! — Said R. Ashi: There were two ordinances. At first they[39] ordained for a maiden four hundred zuz and for a widow a maneh.

---

(1) [For evidently he relied on the evidence that the first marriage was not consummated, and thus married her on the presumption that she was a virgin. and still it is said that he cannot bring a charge against her to make her forfeit the kethubah of a maneh to which she is entitled as a widow.]

(2) And there may have been intercourse and this militates against the presumption that she was a virgin on the second marriage.

(3) After the betrothal to the second husband. [Why then should he not be able to bring a charge against her so as to give witnesses an opportunity to testify as to the true facts?]

(4) So that unchastity was impossible.

(5) Lit., ‘and some’.

(6) I.e.,the observations of Rabbah, R. Ashi and R. Sherabia.

(7) I.e., the kethubah of each of them.

(8) V. supra p. 60, n. 11.

(9) [So that it is to be assumed that the marriage was consummated, v. supra p. 60, n. 12.]

(10) After the betrothal to the second husband.

(11) So that unchastity was impossible.

(12) I.e., the observations of Rabbah, R. Ashi and R. Sherabia.

(13) Fol. I11b, bottom. In the case of the Baraitha there were witnesses that there was no intercourse.

(14) In the Mishnah there were no witnesses that no intercourse took place.

(15) And in view of the testimony of the witnesses the presumption that she was a virgin is a strong one, so that R. Ashi's reply to Rabbah would not hold good. True, ‘the first one married her,’ but there are witnesses who say that no intercourse took place. Rabbah's deduction from the Baraitha would therefore be justified.

(16) And he may have had intimate intercourse with his bride.

(22) So that they should not deceive one another regarding the tokens of virginity (Rashi). [That would be in such localities in Judaea where the young affianced people were not allowed to be alone before the entry into the bridal chamber. This shews that customs differed in Judaea itself.]

(23) Cf. Tosef. Keth. I.

(24) The last sentence from ‘and’ till ‘virginity’.

(25) In which it said that in Judaea they used to leave the bridegroom and the bride alone.

(27) Lit., ‘but’.

(37) For the virgin-maiden that was the daughter of a priest; v. Rashi.
(38) Lit., ‘did not strike at their hand’, ‘protest [(a) Although the same was recorded as part of the Kethubah proper and not as the extra addition. v. infra 54b, the payment thereof would he enforced; (b) or. although not recorded at all, the woman could collect it by virtue of the prevalent custom, v, Tosaf.]

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 12b

When they saw that they[1] treated them[2] lightly.[3] they ordained for them[4] two hundred [zuz]. When they saw [again] that they[5] kept away from them,[6] for they[7] said, ‘Instead of marrying a priestly widow, we shall rather marry[8] the virgin-daughter of an Israelite,’[9] they restored their [former] ordinance.[10]

THE COURT OF OUR PRIESTS, etc. R. Judah said [that] Samuel said: They[11] did not say it only [regarding] the court of the priests.[12] but even the noble families[13] in Israel, if they want to do as[14] the priests do,[15] may do [so]. An objection was raised: If one wants to do as[14] the priests do,[15] for instance [if] the daughter of an Israelite [gets] married to a priest. or the daughter of a priest [gets married] to an Israelite, one may do [so]. [We would infer from this that only if] the daughter of an Israelite [gets married] to a priest, or the daughter of a priest [gets married] to an Israelite, [it is allowed to do as the priests do], because there is [then] one side of priesthood.[16] but if the daughter of an Israelite [gets married] to an Israelite, it is not [allowed to do as the priests do]![17] — The Mishnah states here a case of ‘not only’; not only [is it allowed[18] in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite [getting married] to an Israelite, who cannot say to her ‘I raise thee’ [to a higher position];[19] but [in the case of] the daughter of an Israelite [getting married] to a priest. who can say to her, ‘I raise thee [to a higher position].’[20] I might think that it is not allowed;[21] [hence] he lets us hear [that this is not so].[22]

MISHNAH. IF A MAN[23] MARRIES A WOMAN AND DOES NOT FIND[24] IN HER VIRGINITY [AND] SHE SAYS, AFTER THOU HADST BETROTHED ME [UNTO THEE][24] WAS FORCED AND [so] THY FIELD HAS BEEN INUNDATED’[25] AND HE SAYS, ‘NO, BUT [IT OCCURRED] BEFORE I BETROTHED THEE [TO ME] AND MY BARGAIN WAS A MISTAKEN BARGAIN’ — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. ELIEZER SAY [THAT] SHE IS BELIEVED. [BUT] R. JOSHUA SAYS: WE DO NOT LIVE FROM HER MOUTH[26] , BUT SHE IS IN THE PRESUMPTION OF HAVING HAD INTERCOURSE[27] BEFORE SHE WAS BETROTHED AND HAVING DECEIVED HIM, UNTIL SHE BRINGS PROOF FOR HER STATEMENT.[28]

GEMARA. It was stated: [If one person says to another person]. ‘l have a maneh in your hand,’[29] and the latter[30] says. ‘I do not know[31] — Rab Judah and R. Huna Say: [He is] bound [to pay].[32] and R. Nahman and R. Johanan Say: [he is] free [from the obligation to pay].[33] R. Huna and R. Judah say: [he is] bound [to pay]. [because they hold that] in the case of ‘sure’,and ‘perhaps’. ‘sure’ has it.[34] R. Nahman and R. Johanan say: [he is] free [from the obligation to pay] [because they hold the view]: leave[35] the money in the possession of its present owner.[36] Abaye said to R. Joseph: The opinion[37] of R. Huna and Rab Judah corresponds with the view of Samuel,[38] for we have learned: [If] she[39] was pregnant, and they said to her, ‘What is the nature of this embryo?’[40] [and she answered]. ‘It is from the man So-and-So, and he is a priest.’ Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say [that] she is believed. And Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel. And R. Samuel b. Judah said to Rab Judah: Sharpwitted one![41] You said to us in the name of Samuel [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel also in the first[42] [Mishnah]. [Now what means]: ‘also in the first [Mishnah]’? [Assuredly it must mean]. although one could say[43] ‘leave the money in the possession of its [present] owner.’ [still] Rabban Gamaliel said: ‘sure’ has it.[44] Is it [then] to say that R. Judah and R. Huna follow the opinion of Rabban Gamaliel, and R. Nahman and R. Johanan follow the opinion of R. Joshua? — R. Nahman can answer you:[45] I even follow the opinion of[46] Rabban Gamaliel; only Rabban Gamaliel says it there[47] because there is miggo.[48] but what miggo is there here?[49] Or [again]: Rabban Gamaliel says it only there, because we Say: leave her in her presumptive state,[50] but here what presumptive state has he got?[51] It is also evident that [it is right] as we have answered, that R. Nahman follows the opinion of[52] Rabban Gamaliel, (41) Heb. Shinena. V. B.K. (Sonc. ed.) p. 60 n. 2.

(42) I.e., in our Mishnah, which is the first of the three Mishnahs in which Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say that she is believed. The first Mishnah will also include the following Mishnah, where, as in our Mishnah, the kethubah is the point at issue.

(43) Lit., 'there is to say'.

(44) [Since he accepts the woman's plea which is 'sure' in preference to the husband's which is 'doubtful'. Which shews that R. Huna and Rab Judah in their ruling follow the view of Samuel that the halachah follows Rabban Gamaliel.]

(45) Lit., 'R. Nahman says unto thee'.

(46) Lit., 'I who say ever.

(47) Lit., 'until now Rabban Gamaliel does not say there'.

(48) Miggo, means since,' 'because,' and 'in consequence of,' and is used here as a legal term, denoting 'a legal rule according to which a deponent's statement is accepted as true on the ground that, if he had intended to tell a lie, he might have invented one more advantageous to his case,' v. Jast. s. v'. The Miggo here is this: Instead of saying that she was forced to have intercourse, she could have said that she was injured by a piece of wood. [This would be a more advantageous plea since it does not disqualify her from marrying a priest as does the plea that she had been forced. And similarly in the case of the next Mishnah she might have maintained that her accident happened after she had become betrothed to him, and thus is entitled to a kethubah of two hundred zuz instead of pleading that it occurred before, reducing thereby her claim to a maneh. V. Rashi.]

(49) In the case of the money claim, what miggo is there which we could apply to the claimant? Therefore, we say, 'leave the money in the possession of its (present) owner.'

(50) The presumption is that the maiden is a virgin. This presumption holds good until she had been found not to be a virgin, and this has been found only after her betrothal. Therefore she was, at the time of her betrothal, in the presumptive state of a virgin.

(51) There is no presumption in favour of the claimant. The presumption is in favour of the person from whom the money is claimed, since he holds the money.

(52) Lit., 'says'.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 13a

for if it were [not] so, there would be a difficulty between one law and another law, for it is established for us [that] in civil matters the law is according to R. Nahman, whereas in this [case][1] R. Judah [said] that Samuel said [that] the halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel,[2] Is it not then to be concluded from this [that it is] as we have answered?[3] Conclude [so] from this.

MISHNAH. [IF] SHE[4] SAYS, 'I WAS INJURED BY A PIECE OF WOOD', AND HE SAYS, 'NO, THOU HAST HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAN[5] — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. ELIEZER SAY: SHE IS BELIEVED, AND R. JOSHUA SAYS: WE DO NOT LIVE FROM HER MONTH,[6] BUT SHE IS IN THE PRESUMPTION OF HAVING HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A MAN,[7] UNTIL SHE BRINGS PROOF FOR HER STATEMENT.[8]

GEMARA. With regard to what are their claims?[9] — R. Johanan Says: With regard to two hundred[10] [zuz] and a maneh.[11] R. Eleazar says: with regard to a maneh and nothing.[12] R. Johanan says: With regard to two hundred [zuz] and a maneh, [because] he[13] shares the opinion of R. Meir who says [that] whether he knew of her or did not know of her[14] [she gets as her kethubah] two hundred [zuz]. And R. Eleazar says: With regard to a maneh or nothing, [because] he shares the view of the Rabbis who say [that] whether he knew of her or did not know of her,[14] [she gets as her kethubah] a maneh. It is quite right that R. Eleazar does not say as R. Johanan [says]. because he establishes it[15] according to the Rabbis.[16] But why does not R. Johanan say as R. Eleazar [says]? — He holds [that when] he[17] married her in the presumption of [her being] a virgin and she is found to have had intercourse, she has a kethubah of a maneh.[18] [According to this view] here[19] he would say. ‘a maneh,’[20] and she would say. ‘a maneh,’[21] [and] what difference would there be between his claim and her claim?[22] [Now] it is quite right according to R. Eleazar[23] that we have stated[24] two cases,[25] one[26] it to exclude the opinion of Rami b. Hama,[27] and one[28] to exclude the opinion of R. Hiyya b. Abin in the name of R. Shesheth.[29] But according to

R. Johanan why are two cases necessary?[30] — One to show you the strength[31] of Rabban Gamaliel, and one to show you the strength of R. Joshua. The first case to show you the strength of R. Joshua, that, although one could say [there] miggo,[32] she is not believed. The second case to show you the strength of Rabban Gamaliel, that, although one cannot say [there][33] Miggo, she is believed.

MISHNAH. [IF] THEY[34] SAW HER[35] TALKING WITH SOMEONE,[36] AND THEY SAID TO HER, ‘WHAT SORT OF A MAN IS HE?[37] [AND SHE ANSWERED, ‘HE IS] THE MAN SO-AND-SO AND HE IS A PRIEST — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. ELIEZER SAY: SHE IS BELIEVED,[38] AND R. JOSHUA SAYS: WE DO NOT LIVE FROM HER MOUTH,[39] BUT SHE IS IN THE PRESUMPTION OF HAVING HAD INTERCOURSE WITH A NATHIN[40] OR A MAMZER,[41] -[42] UNTIL SHE BRINGS PROOF FOR HER STATEMENT. [IF] SHE[43] WAS PREGNANT AND THEY[44] SAID UNTO HER, ‘WHAT IS THE NATURE OF THIS FOETUS.’[45] [AND SHE ANSWERED, ‘IT IS] FROM THE MAN SO-AND-SO AND HE IS A PRIEST — RABBAN GAMALIEL AND R. ELIEZER SAY: SHE IS BELIEVED,[46] AND R. JOSHUA SAYS: WE DO NOT LIVE FROM HER MOUTH,[47] BUT SHE IS IN THE PRESUMPTION OF BEING PREGNANT FROM A NATHIN OR A MAMZER,[48] UNTIL SHE BRINGS EVIDENCE FOR HER STATEMENT.

GEMARA. What is the meaning of ‘TALKING’? Ze'iri said: She was hidden.[49] R. Assi said: She had intercourse.[50] It is quite right according to Ze'iri that it Says[51] ‘TALKING’,[52] But according to R.Assi why [does it say] ‘TALKING?’ — [It is] a more appropriate[53] expression, as it is written:[54] ‘She eateth,[55] and wipeth her mouth,[56] and saith, ‘I have done no wickedness.’[57] It is quite right according to Ze'iri that he teaches [in the Mishnah] two [cases]: ‘TALKING’ and ‘PREGNANT,[58] But according to R. Assi, why [does the Mishnah teach] two [cases]? — One case[59] to declare her fit[60] and one case[61] to declare her daughter[62] fit.[63] That is quite right according to him who says [that] he who declares her fit declares [also] her daughter fit.[64] But according to him who says [that] he who declares her fit declares her daughter unfit,[65] what is there to say? — R. Assi holds the view of him[66] who says [that] he who declares her fit declares [also] her daughter fit.

R. Pappa said to Abaye: According to Ze'iri who said: What Is TALKING?’ She was hidden, and R. Joshua said [that] she is not believed — did not Rab say: We punish with lashes for the privacy[67] but we do not prohibit[68] on account of the privacy? Is it to say that it is not according to R. Joshua?[69] — You may even say [that it is according to] R. Joshua. [for] they set a higher standard in matters of priestly descent.[70]

An objection was raised: [If] they[71] saw her go in[72] with someone[73] Into a secret [place]

(8) Lit., ‘for her words’.
(9) I.e., what is the claim of the husband and what is the claim of the wife?
(10) She says that she was injured and claims a kethubah of two hundred zuz, on the view of R. Meir, supra 11a.
(11) He says that she had intercourse with another man, in which case she gets only a maneh; v. the statement of R. Hiyya b. Abin, supra 11b and Rabbah's statement, supra 12a.
(12) She claims a maneh as one who was thus injured and according to the Sages, (v. supra 11a) gets a maneh. He says that she had intercourse with a man and therefore gets no kethubah at all, on the view advanced by R. Ashi, supra 12a.
(13) [I.e. , The Tanna of this Mishnah shares, in the view of R. Johanan, the opinion of R. Meir, It cannot refer to R. Johanan as he would not be likely to accept the ruling of R. Meir in preference to that of the majority of the Sages (Rashi).]

or into a ruin,[1] and they said to her, ‘What sort of a man is he?’ [and she answered]. ‘he is a priest and he is the son of the brother of my father’ — Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed. R. Joshua says: We do not live from her mouth, but she is in the presumption of having had Intercourse with a Nathin or a Mamzer, until she brings proof for her statement . Now it is quite right according to Ze'iri,[2] that he teaches[3] two [cases]: into a secret [place] or into a ruin.[4] But according to R. Assi who said: She had intercourse,[5] why does it teach[6] two cases?[7] — It teaches [only] one [case]: into the secret [place] of the ruin.[8] But it teaches: into a secret [place] or into a ruin! — [But say] one [expression stands] for a ruin of a town and one [expression stands] for a ruin of a field. And they are [both][9] necessary. for if it[10] had told us [only] concerning a ruin of a town [one might have said that] in this [case] Rabban Gamaliel declares her fit because most[11] [of the men] of the town are fit with regard to her,[12] but in [the case of] a ruin of a field, when most [of the men][13] are unfit with regard to her.[14] I might say that he agrees with R. Joshua.[15] And if it[16] had told us [only] this [case][17] [I might have said that only] in this case[18] did R. Joshua say [that she is not believed], but in that [case][19] I might say [that] he agrees with Rabban Gamaliel;[20] [therefore] it was necessary [to state both cases].

An objection was raised:[21] This[22] is a testimony with regard to which the woman is fit.[23] But R. Joshua Says: She is not believed. Said R. Joshua to them:[24] Do you not agree that in the case of a woman[25] who was captured, and there are witnesses that she was captured, and she says. ‘I am pure.’[26] she is not believed? They said to him, ‘Yes: but what a difference there is between this case and that case.’[27] In this case[28] there are witnesses,[29] and in that case[30] there are no witnesses.[31] He said to them: In that case too[32] there are also witnesses, for her stomach reaches up to her teeth.[33] They said to him, ‘Most of the idolators are unrestrained in sexual matters.’ He said to them: ‘There is no guardian against unchastity.’[34] This applies[35] only in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to herself.[36] but in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to her daughter. all agree that the child is a shethuki.’[37] — [Now] what did he[38] say unto them[39] and what did they answer him? This they said unto him: ‘You have answered us with regard to the pregnant woman,[40] what will you answer us with regard to the woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man]?’[41] — He said to them: The woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man] is the same as the captive woman.[42] They said to him, ‘The captive woman is different, for most of the idolators are unrestrained in sexual matters.’[43] He said to them: Here also,[44] since she hid herself,[45] there is no guardian against unchastity.[46] [Now] at all events he teaches two [cases]: The woman [whom they saw] talking [to a man] and the pregnant woman![47] [This is] a refutation of R. Assi,[48] [This is indeed] a refutation,[49] — But let this difference weigh with him[50] There[51] most of the men are unfit with regard to her, but here[52] most of the men are fit with regard to her! — This[53] supports the opinion of R. Joshua b. Levi, for R. Joshua b. Levi said: He who declares her fit[54] declares her fit even when most of the men are unfit,[55] and he who declares her unfit declares her unfit even when most of the men are fit.[56]

R. Johanan said: He who declares her fit declares also her daughter fit, [and] he who declares her unfit declares also her daughter unfit. And R. Eleazar said: [Even] he who declares her fit declares her daughter unfit. Rabba said: What is the reason of R. Eleazar? [This:] It is quite right [with regard to her], she has the presumption of fitness,[57] [but] her daughter has no presumption of fitness.[58] R. Eleazar objected to [the ruling of] R. Johanan: This only applies to the testimony of the woman with regard to herself, but in the case of the testimony of the woman with regard to her daughter, all agree that the child is a shethuki.[59] Does this not [mean] a shethuki and unfit? — No, a shethuki and fit. But is there a shethuki [who is] fit? — Yes, according to Samuel, for Samuel said: [If] ten priests are standing together and one of them goes away[60] and has intercourse [with a woman], the child is a shethuki. Now what [means here] a shethuki? Is it to say that he is ‘silenced’ from the property of his father?[61] This is evident! Do we know who his father is? — It means one silences him from the rights of priesthood,[62] for it is written: ‘And it shall be unto him and to his seed after him the covenant of an everlasting priesthood.[63] [that is, only] one whose seed is legitimately descending from him, excluding this one,[64] whose seed is not legitimately descending from him.[65]

A bridal couple[66] once came before R. Joseph. She said, ‘It[67] is from him’.[68] and he said,

(3) In the Baraitha just quoted.

(4) ‘Into a secret place’ does not imply misconduct, but ‘into a ruin’ does imply misconduct.

(5) Talking secretly, or being with a man in a secret place. affords no grounds for suspicion unless there has been some evidence of misconduct.

(6) In the Baraitha just quoted.

(7) Since the reference here is to a case where misconduct was seen to have taken place, what matters it whether it occurred in a secret place or a ruin?

(8) The Baraitha is to be understood as if the reading was ‘into the secret (place) of the ruin,’ and thus only one case is mentioned.

This is a continuation of a passage in the Tosef, which is identical with the first part of the second case of our Mishnah: 'She was pregnant (and they said unto her, What is the nature of this embryo' (and she answered, It is) from the man So-and-so (and) he is a priest"' — Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer say: She is believed.

(31) In the case of the pregnant woman (the case of the Tosefta and our Mishnah) there are no witnesses that she had intercourse with one who makes her unfit for marrying a priest. It is clear, especially from the wording in the Tosefta, that this whole sentence, from 'yes,' until 'witness, is spoken by Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer. V. Rashi.
(32) Of the pregnant woman.
(33) A figurative expression for 'she is visibly pregnant
(34) No one is immune from the possibility of having forbidden sexual intercourse. And the pregnant woman may have had intercourse with one forbidden to her and may thus have become unfit for a priestly marriage. The whole passage is explained soon.
(35) Lit., 'with regard to what are these words said'? When do Rabban Gamaliel and R. Eliezer hold that she is believed?
(36) Her testimony with regard to herself is believed.
(37) A shethuki (lit., 'silenced') is defined in Kid. 69a as one who knows his mother but does not know who his father is. Therefore, the woman herself may marry a priest, but if she gave birth to a daughter, that daughter may not marry a priest. The corresponding sentence in the Tosefta is much shorter; viz 'This applies only to the testimony with regard to herself, but with regard to the child all agree that it is a shethuki'.
(38) R. Joshua.
(39) R. Samuel and R. Eliezer.
(40) Her pregnancy is evidence against her.
(41) Why should she not be believed?
(42) The one case is similar to the other case. In both cases there is a strong possibility of intercourse.
(43) It is not only a question of sexual intercourse, but it is also a question who it was with whom the woman had intercourse. In the case of the captive woman, she is made unfit for priestly marriage, because the men among whom she finds herself are mostly unfit for her. But not so in the case of the woman who was talking to a man, where most men are fit for her, v. supra.
(44) In the case of the woman who was talking to another man.
(45) She was talking to the man secretly.
(46) And she may have had intercourse with a man who makes her unfit for a priestly marriage.
(47) The 'talking woman' and the pregnant woman are, at all events, two different
(48) According to whom the case of the 'talking woman' is also a case of certain sexual intercourse.
(49) I.e., R. Assi stands refuted.
(50) Or, let it be a difference to him (R. Joshua). Lit., 'let it go out to him' — 'let it be different to him'.
(51) In the ease of the captive woman.

(52) In the case of the 'talking woman,

(53) The fact that R. Joshua disregards this difference.

(54) Lit., 'according to the words of him who declares her fit'.

(55) With regard to her, as in the case of the captive woman.

(56) With regard to her, as in the case of the 'talking woman'.

(57) Legal fitness. She is of legitimate birth and she is fit to marry a priest. The doubt as to the nature of the man with whom she had intercourse does not destroy the presumption of her fitness.

(58) Because suspicion attaches to her very birth. If the man who is the father is unfit, then she is unfit and must not marry a priest. The doubt is sufficient to make her unfit, since there is no presumption of fitness to remove.

(59) V. p. 73, n. 10 and p. 74. n. 4.

(60) Lit., 'separated himself'.

(61) I.e., he does not inherit the property of his (alleged) father.

(62) He has no share in the rights and privileges of priesthood.

(63) Num, XXV, 13.

(64) The unknown father of the shethuki.

(65) [He cannot transmit the rights of priesthood to his seed, v. Yeb. 100b, but as regards marriage with one of priestly stock, this shethuki is permitted. This shews that one may be a shethuki and yet fit.]

(66) Lit,, 'that betrothed (man) and his betrothed (woman)'.

(67) The child with which she was pregnant.

(68) From her fiance.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 14a

'Yes. [it is] from me.' R. Joseph said: Why should we be afraid? First,[1] he admits, and moreover, Rab Judah said [that] Samuel said: The halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel.[2] Abaye said to him: And in this [case]. if he did not admit, would Rabban Gamaliel declare her as fit? Did not Samuel say to Rab Judah: 'Sharp-witted one! The halachah is according to Rabban Gamaliel, but you should not act upon it,[3] unless most men are fit for her,' whereas here most men are unfit for her![4] — And according to your reasoning is not this [statement] in itself difficult? [First he says] 'The halachah [is. etc.'] [and then] 'do not act in practice [on it]'![5] Hence you must say: The one ruling applies before[6] the other after it was done,[7] and in this case also it is like 'after it was done.'[8]

Abaye asked[9] Raba: Did R. Joshua Say: She is not believed? This would be in contradiction with the following: R. Joshua and R. Judah b. Bathyra testified concerning the widow[10] [of one who was] of a mixed family[11] that she is fit to marry a priest![12] — He said to him: Now is this so?[13] There[14] the woman marries, and [in that case] she examines[15] and [then] marries; but here[16] the woman misconducts herself; does she first examine and then misconduct herself?[17]

Raba said: Is the contradiction [only] between [one statement of] R. Joshua and [the other Statement of] R. Joshua. [but] not[18] between [one Statement of] Rabban Gamaliel and [another Statement of] Rabban Gamaliel?[19] Surely the concluding clause[20] teaches: Rabban Gamaliel said to them: We accept your testimony,[21] but what can we do, since Rabban Johanan b. Zakkai decreed that no court be set up for this purpose.[22] because the priests will obey you to remove[23] but not to bring near?[24] — But, said Raba; there is no contradiction between [the statement of] Rabban Gamaliel and [the other statement of] Rabban Gamaliel, [because] there[25] it is sure'[26] [and] here[27] it is 'perhaps.'[28] Neither is there a contradiction between [the one statement of] R. Joshua and [the other statement of] R. Joshua, [because] there[29] there is one doubt[30] [and] here[31] there is a double doubt.[32] Therefore, according to Rabban Gamaliel the 'sure' is [so] strong[33] [a plea] that even where [there is only] one doubt[34] he declares [her] fit,[35] and the 'perhaps' is [so] weak [a plea][36] that even where there is a double doubt[37] he declares [her] unfit.[38] [And] according to R. Joshua one doubt[39] is [so] strong that even in the case where [she pleads] 'sure' he declares [her] unfit,[40] and a double doubt[41] is [so] light[42] that even in the case where [she pleads] 'perhaps' he declares [her] fit.[43]

Our Rabbis taught: Which is the widow[44] [of one] of a mixed family? When there is with regard to it[45] [no doubt] on account of mamzeruth,[46] nathinuth[47] and on account of slaves of the kings.[48] R. Meir said:

---

(1) Lit., 'one'.

(2) That she is believed, v. supra 12b.

(3) Lit., 'thou shalt not do a deed'.

(4) As she is betrothed, the only man fit for her is her fiance. To all other men she is prohibited.

(5) This seems self-contradictory!

(6) [lf a priest comes to seek guidance in regard to such a marriage we declare it not permissible unless he was held fit for the woman.]

(7) [If he did marry her without consulting the authorities he may retain her.]

(8) [Since she is already betrothed we do not force the bridegroom to put her aside.]

(9) Lit., 'raised (a contradiction) to'.

(10) V. p. 78, n. 9.

(11) עיסה means 'dough' and is also a designation for a mixed community or a mixed family, that is a community or a family with an admixture of illegitimate persons or persons of doubtful legitimacy, v. Kid. 69b.

(12) [This shews that we place her on her erstwhile presumption of fitness and refuse to disqualify her for the sake of a doubt.]

(13) I.e., what a comparison!

(14) In the case of 'Ed.

(15) The purity of the family.

(16) In the case of our Mishnah.

(17) Therefore she is not believed.

(18) Lit., 'is there no contradiction'.

(19) And one must endeavour to explain R. Gamaliel also.

(20) Of the Mishnah in 'Ed.

(21) I.e., we approve of what you say.

(22) [Of declaring the legitimacy of such a doubtful case.]

(23) I.e., not to allow persons of doubtful legitimacy to join their families.

(24) They will not obey the court if permission is given for persons of doubtful legitimacy to enter their families. V. 'Ed. (Sonc. ed.) p. 48, nn. 2-7.

(25) In the case of our Mishnah.

(26) She says that she is sure that she had intercourse with a legitimate person.

(27) In the Mishnah in 'Ed.

(28) As it is a case of עיסה the woman herself cannot say that she is sure that the family is free from illegitimate admixtures.

(29) In the case of our Mishnah.

(30) Whether the man with whom she had intercourse was fit or unfit (regarding the priesthood).

(31) In the Mishnah in 'Ed.

(32) Indeed, in the case of a widow of a member of a mixed family there are many doubts of illegitimacy.

(33) I.e., important.

(34) Against her.

(35) For the priesthood.

(36) Unimportant.

(37) V. p.77, n. 20.

(38) For the priesthood.

(39) In the case of our Mishnah

(40) For the priesthood.

(41) In the Mishnah in 'Ed.

(42) Unimportant.

(43) For the priesthood. In short, with Rabban Gamaliel the ‘sure’ outweighs one doubt, and with R. Joshua one douht outweighs the ‘sure’.

(44) Who has been held to be fit for marrying a priest: Tosaf. omits ‘widow’. And indeed in Tosef., kid. V the word is left out. The reference will be to a girl of a mixed family and not to a widow of a member of a mixed family. v. Tosaf. [On the whole subject of עיסה v., Rosenthal F. MGWJ 1881, also pp. 38ff and Freund L. Schwartz-Festschrift p. 163ff and Graetz op. cit. 1879, pp. 99ff].

(45) The family.

(46) Mamzer-ship.

(47) Nathin-ship. For nathin and mamzer v. Glos.

(48) Cf. Neh. VII, 57, and Yeb. 17b. [According to Rashi the reference is to the Herodian dynasty.] When there is no suspicion, with regard to that family, of intermarriage with mamzerim, nathinim and royal slaves.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 14b

I have heard that when there is none of these [defects] in the family one permits [its members] to marry into the priesthood. R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir. and R. Simeon the son of Menasia also said it:[1] Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When a doubtful halal[2] was mixed up[3] in it, [for] the Israelites know the mamzerim who are among them, but they do not know the halalim who are among them.[4]

The Master said: ‘Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When there is with regard to it [no doubt] on account of mamzeruth, nathinuth and on account of slaves of the kings’. [This would show that if there is a doubt on account of] a halal [in the family] it is fit.[5] Why should these[6] be different? [Because] these are Biblical? A halal is also Biblical![7] And further:[8] ‘R. Meir said: I have heard that when there is none of these [defects] in the family one permits [its members] to marry into the priesthood’. This is the same [as that which] the first Tanna[9] [taught]! And further:[10] ‘R. Simeon b. Eleazar said in the name of R. Meir, and R. Simeon b. Menasia also said it: Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When a halal was mixed up in it, [for] the Israelites know the mamzerim who are among them, but they do not know the halalim who are among them.’ Surely it says in the first clause [that if there is a doubt regarding] a halal [in the family, the family is] fit [to marry into the priesthood]! R. Johanan said: There is a difference between them [concerning a person who when he is called] mamzer protests and [when he is called] halal is silent. The first Tanna holds [that] every person who when called ‘unfit’ is silent is [considered] unfit, and thus the first Tanna said: Which is the widow [of one] of a mixed family? When there is in it no one who is silent if he is called mamzer or nathin, or slave of the king, or halal. Whereupon R. Meir said to him: This applies only to [each of] these cases[11] since [he who calls him thus is liable to] render him unfit [to enter] into [the congregation,] but he who is called a halal and is silent,[12] is fit, and the reason he is silent is that it does not trouble him.[13] Whereupon R. Simeon b. Eleazar said to the first Tanna[14] of R. Meir: If you have heard that R. Meir declares the person fit in the case of silence, this is not when he is called halal and is silent, but when he is called mamzer and is silent, for the reason he is silent is because he says to himself; ‘a mamzer is well-known’.[15] But [if he is called] mamzer and he protests. or [he is called] halal and is silent he is unfit,[16] for the reason he is silent is because he thinks, ‘it is enough if he is not excluded from the congregation’.[17]

One Baraitha taught: R. Jose says: [if he is called] mamzer and is silent, he is fit, and if he is called halal and is silent, he is unfit. And another Baraitha taught: [if he is called] halal and is silent he is fit, [but if he is called] mamzer and is silent, he is unfit. There is no difficulty;[18] the one[19] is according to the first Tanna in the sense of R. Meir, and the other one is according to R. Simeon b. Eleazar in the sense of R. Meir.

MISHNAH. R. JOSE SAID: IT HAPPENED THAT A GIRL. WENT DOWN TO DRAW[20] WATER FROM A SPRING AND SHE WAS RAVISHED. R. JOHANAN B. NURI SAID: IF

MOST OF THE INHABITANTS[21] OF THE TOWN MARRY [THEIR DAUGHTERS] INTO THE PRIESTHOOD,[22] THIS [GIRL] MAY [ALSO] MARRY INTO THE PRIESTHOOD.[23]

GEMARA. Raba said to R. Nahman: According to whom did R. Johanan b. Nuri say [this n the Mishnah?]. If according to Rabban Gamaliel, [surely] he declares as fit even when there is a majority of unfit![24] [And] if it is according to R. Joshua, [surely] he declares as unfit even when there is a majority of fit![25] — He said to him: Rah Judah said [that] Rab said:

---

(1) Lit., ‘according to his words’.

(2) Halal is one who is profaned, unfit for priesthood on account of his father's illegitimate connection. Cf. Lev. XXI, 15 and v. Kid. 77a and 77b. A doubtful halal is a person about whom there is a doubt whether he is a halal or not.

(3) נטמע means ‘to he mixed up beyond recognition’. V. Jast.

(4) Therefore one has to he careful with regard to doubtful halalim.

(5) [The widow would not be disqualified where there was a doubtful admixture of a halal in her dead husband's family.]

(6) [The marriage to any one of those enumerated in the Baraitha is Biblically forbidden and consequently renders the woman who marries the offspring of such an union unfit for a subsequent marriage to a priest, v. Yeb. 68a.]

(7) Cf. Lev. XXI, 15, and Yeb. 68a.

(8) Another difficulty.

(9) The first statement of the Baraitha and R. Meir's are practically identical.

(10) Another difficulty.

(11) Mamzer, nathin and royal slave.

(12) [And does not protest against the stigma attached to his descent.]

(13) Since he is not excluded from the congregation.

(14) That is, the teacher who transmitted the words of R. Meir and said in his name ‘l have heard, etc.’ and not the first Tanna of the cited Baraitha.

(15) Lit., a mamzer has a voice — And since he is not regarded generally as a mamzer he does not think it worth while to protest against the assertion of one man.

(16) For the priesthood.

(17) As he is not excluded from the congregation, he does not desire any investigations into his origin (Rashi).

(18) There is no contradiction between these two Baraithas.

(19) The second Baraitha.

(20) Lit., ‘to fill’.

(21) Lit., ‘men’,

(22) Are entitled to marry their daughters to priests. This shows that they are ‘fit’.

(23) Because the man with whom she had intercourse is taken to be one of the majority, and the majority consists of ‘fit’ men,

(24) Because he places the woman on the presumption of fitness, v. supra 13b.

(25) V. supra 13b.

Talmud - Mas. Kethuboth 15a

The incident[1] happened at the springs[2] of Zepphoris, and the ruling followed R. Ammi, for R. Ammi said: and that is when a company of unfit men passed by there,[3] and also R. Jannai. for R. Jannai said: if she had intercourse at the springs she is fit for the priesthood. — Do you really mean to say at the springs? — But rather [say]: If she had intercourse at the time of [the people visiting] the springs she is fit for the priesthood. But if someone went[4] from Zepphoris and had intercourse [with her], the child is a shethuki.[5] This is according to the following: When R. Dimi came[6] he said that Ze'iri said [in the name of] R. Hanina, and some say: Ze'iri said [in the name of] R. Hanina:[7] One goes after the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town and one does not go after the majority of the [passing] company. — Just the reverse! These[8] move about and those[9] are stationary![10] — But [say thus]: One goes after the majority of the [inhabitants of the] town, but only when there is [also] the majority of the [passing] company with it, but one does not go after the majority of the [inhabitants of the] town alone, nor after the majority of the [passing] company alone.[11] — What is the reason?[12] — It is prohibited[13] [to go after] the majority of the [passing] company in order to prevent[14] [going after] the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town. But even [in the case of] the majority of [the inhabitants of] the town, if he, went[15] to her, [let us say that] he who separates himself separates himself from the majority?[16] — It speaks of a case[17] when she went to him.[18] so that he was stationary,[19] and R. Zera said: All that is stationary is considered as half to half.[20] But do we require two majorities? Has it not been taught: if nine [meat] shops.[21] all of them, sell ritually killed meat. and one [shop sells] meat not ritually slaughtered and he bought in[22] one of them and he does not know in which of them he bought. it is prohibited because of the doubt;[23] but if [meat] was found,[24] one goes after the majority?[25] And if you will say that [it speaks of a case] when the gates of the city are not closed,[26] so that a majority[27] came [also] from outside,[28] did not R. Zera say: even when[29] the gates of the city are closed? — Where purity of descent is concerned they[30] put up a higher standard.[31]

The text says: ‘R. Zera said: All that is stationary is considered as half to half.’ [This apparently means] whether it is for leniency or for strictness.[32] Whence does R. Zera take it? Shall I say from [the Baraitha which teaches that] if nine [meat] shops, all of them, sell ritually killed meat and one [shop sells] meat not ritually slaughtered and he bought in one of them[33] and he does not know in which of them he bought, it is prohibited because of the doubt; but if [meat] was found, one goes after the majority? There it is for strictness![34] But [he derives it] from [the following]: If there were [in a certain place] nine frogs and one reptile[35] and he touches one of them and he does not know which of them he touched he is unclean because of the doubt? — There also it is for strictness![36] — But [rather] from [the following]: If there were [in a certain place] nine reptiles and one frog and he touches one of them and he does not know which of them he touched, [if this happened] on private ground he is unclean because of the doubt, [but] if this happened in a public place,[37] he is clean because of the doubt.[38]

And how do we know this[39] from the Bible? — The verse says: And if he lie in wait for him and rise up against him,[40] [that is to say that he is not guilty of murder] until he intended [to kill] him. And the Rabbis? — They said in the school of R. Jannai: This excludes one who throws a stone into [a group of people]. What case do you mean? Do you mean a case when there are nine idolators and one Israelite? Let it be sufficient for him[41] that the majority are idolators,[and] even if [you will say that it is considered as] half to half, [the rule is that] when there is a doubt in capital cases one takes a lenient view! — It speaks of a case when there are nine Israelites and one idolator, so that the idolator is stationary, and whatever is stationary is considered as half to half.[42]

It was stated: R. Hiyya b. Ashi [said that] Rab said [that] the law is according to R. Jose.[43] And R. Hanan b. Raba [said that] Rab said [that] it was [only] a decision for the hour.[44] R. Jeremiah argued: And for pure descent we do not require two majorities? Have we not learned:
